There has been voiced and expressed by many Members of the House the thought and belief that the Congress, which is calling upon the American people to assume the highest burden of taxation at any time in our history, to submit to lower living standards if necessary, to embark upon a period of austerity, and to make many sacrifices, not only of manpower but of wealth as well, has the responsibility to see to it that the tax moneys paid in by the American people are spent properly, wisely, and well; and make certain the laws as enacted by the people's representatives in the Congress dealing with the national defense are carried out according to their intent and purpose.

This statement is not in any way made with the thought that it will reflect upon our military leaders. Instead, I want to make clear the feeling that I think is in the hearts and the minds of every one of us here—that we must accept our responsibility to make certain that which we are doing to prepare for the defense of America and to make our Nation secure is done wisely and well, and as economically as possible, under all circumstances.

Some of the Members have suggested we establish a special committee to keep track of all of the matters that come within our national defense structure. But it appealed to the reason and the logic of the Committee on Rules that perhaps the one committee best equipped, which has had the greatest knowledge of all these military matters and of the problems that will come up—and there will be a myriad of them—was the Committee on Armed Services.

There is a strong feeling that there should be a committee to which the membership of this House could turn with their national defense problems, some committee that would see to it the complaints which reach us will be adequately investigated and a prompt report made on them, even though many of these complaints are unfounded.

Mr. Speaker, we had recited, in the Rules Committee meeting on this subject, the experience of some members of the committee, wherein they had written letters of inquiry to branches of the Defense Department, and months later have not received any reply, or answer. So it did appeal to us of the committee that it is necessary, as it will become more and more apparent in the days ahead, that we must give the power and authority to some committee to represent all of us, as well as all the American people, in a carefully prolonged and continuous study, if you please, and, if necessary, by investigations, of all of the activities of our defense establishments, or of any of them.

This resolution gives to the Armed Services Committee the power and the authority to subpena witnesses and to compel the production of records.

Mr. Speaker, the Armed Services Committee is a terribly busy committee. There was some question in the minds of members of the Rules Committee, when this resolution was before it, as to whether the committee could or would have the time to devote to these studies and investigations that may become necessary in the future, or to give the service to the other Members of Congress to which I believe, and the Rules Committee believes, all Members are entitled.

We talked this whole situation over very frankly with Chairman VINSON and other members of the Committee. I have personally consulted, as have other members of the Rules Committee, with many members of the Committee on the Armed Services. They have an exceptionally able staff in the Armed Services Committee, but that staff is now kept busy about 14 to 16 hours a day with legislation and other matters that come before the committee with great regularity. It does seem to some of us—and I say this as a matter of record, and I hope perhaps as a matter of guidance to the committee—that certain policies should be carried out by the Armed Services Committee in connection with the authorities granted it under this resolution. It seems to many of us, for instance, that it will be necessary to name a subcommittee or a series of subcommittees to investigate and to carry on the studies and investigations that are or will be necessary.

It is the hope, the express hope, and the thought, of many of us that in naming these subcommittees care be taken that, if possible, the membership of these subcommittees be selected from among those Members who do not have military installations in their home areas or in their districts which may be affected by any investigation one way or the other. As I said a moment ago, we discussed these things very frankly.

It seems that the regular staff of the Armed Services Committee as now constituted, has been so burdened, and is still so busy with regular committee matters, that they should not be given this extra burden, but that instead the Armed Services Committee should be furnished and should be given an adequate and able special staff to devote its special attention to the particular problems and the work of study and investigation. I say this adequate special staff will be needed, because, as I mentioned in the beginning, through this Armed Services Committee will flow some forty-one, perhaps fifty to sixty billion or more dollars of the American taxpayers' money each year for some time to come. It is only reasonable that we spend, if necessary, a very small portion of 1 percent of the great amount to be spent on national defense to be certain that the intent and the purpose of the Congress is carried out. I believe such action, under able leadership, can and will result in a better military structure and in great savings for the American people.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this resolution with the thought and with the hope that the work assigned to the committee, or authorized under this resolution, will be carried out in the spirit in which the Committee on Rules considered the resolution, and in which the membership of the Committee on Armed Services, discussed the whole problem with us; that the Committee on Armed Services not only be given this broad authority, but will accept this great and grave responsibility in a humble spirit, will cooperate with the other Members of Congress, will establish a proper staff, and will thus perform an outstanding patriotic service to the people of the United States.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. I quite fully concur in the thought expressed by the gentleman from Ohio not only with respect to the need for prompt and effective investigations of these varied and innumerable complaints that come to all of us, and that the staff of this committee is already burdened with a tremendous amount of legislative work. However, I should not like to have the gentleman's remarks with respect to the appointment of the members of the full committee or the subcommittees making the investigations to be construed as an agreement that Members who have a military installation in the district which they represent should be excluded from participation in subcommittee assignment. I think that would be a mistake. I think it would be denying the Member representing that district under investigation his responsibilities to that district. It would be denying to the subcommittee making the investigation the benefit of that Member's information. I quite agree that care should be taken in the selection of the members of the subcommittee but I cannot concur that as a matter of policy no member of the subcommittee should be on an investigation of an installation in his own district.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Is not the gentleman correct in the observation he made, and can the gentleman not accept the suggestion?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I say to the gentleman that I have made my suggestion as a result of many discussions that have been held with other Members and with the thought that it certainly would not be embarrassing to any member of the Committee on Armed Services. I question very much that there are any members of the Committee on Armed Services who would desire to serve on a subcommittee which is investigating military installations in their own districts. Such might be embarrassing. At the same time I am absolutely certain there is no member of the Committee on Armed Services or any Member of the House, as far as that is concerned, having any military installation of any type in their district that would not frankly and fairly and honestly administer their duties and responsibilities and furnish the Committee on Armed Services, or any other committee of the House, with all the information they might possess that would be helpful to the Congress. My suggestion was made only with the thought that it would relieve many members of the Committee on Armed Services from embarrassment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, let me say to the gentleman if he could find it possible to modify his statement as suggested he will have the complete support, in my judgment, of the entire membership of the House.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think my statement has now modified that. I shall certainly check my remarks to be certain there is no misinterpretation of the intent and the purpose of that.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, of course the gentleman realizes, in making the observation which I did, I have no military or naval or air installation whatsoever in my district, so I was not speaking from my own personal standpoint.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand that.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. Let me say that I concur generally with the remarks the gentleman has made as to the need for this resolution. I particularly emphasize to the Members of the House that we have great confidence in the Committee on Armed Services and, often our only recourse in connection with certain matters which come to us as individual Members of Congress is to go to individuals on the committee and ask them, by reason of the great position they hold, to investigate these matters. So I do hope the members of the great Committee on Armed Services will assist us when we as Members of Congress appeal to them, because often they are only ones to whom we can appeal with confidence to have something investigated. I hope the gentleman will agree with me that probably some investigations should be held at this time as to certain things which are going on.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I say to the gentleman that the committee have been conducting some investigations, as best they can, with the rather limited and terribly busy staff they now have. We have been assured, of course, that the services to other Members of Congress will be furnished to the capacity of the committee, if this resolution is adopted.

Let me also say to the gentleman and to the House very frankly that I have made this rather detailed statement and expressed these thoughts and purposes on the floor of the House to strengthen, not cripple, but strengthen, the arm and the position of the Committee on Armed Services in meeting a very great and a very grave responsibility. Certainly, notice is herewith and hereby served on all those connected in any way with our nonpartisan attempt to strengthen the defenses of America, that the Congress of the United States through this properly and duly constituted committee will be on guard at all times to see that the laws we enact, and our intents and purposes we have had when we enact those laws for the security of our country, are carried out.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman at the outset indicated that the appropriations for defense will run around $41,000,000,000.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Or more.

Mr. STEFAN. He also indicated that there will be a myriad of defense projects constructed, and that it is very important that the Comimttee on Armed Services be staffed with competent help and have subcommittees to go out in order to see first-hand what is really being done and how this money is being expended in order to bring about efficiency and economy.

At one time the Committee on Military Affairs and other legislative committees not only worked on authorizations but appropriated the money therefor. That has been changed, and there now is a Committee on Appropriations divided into various subcommittees, one of which is the Committee on Armed Services. It has to do with passing upon the requests of the defense agencies for expenditures. I am not a member of that subcommittee; however, I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I know of the necessity for this resolution. It is long past due.

The Committee on Armed Services in these perilous times must have at its command the best possible staff obtainable. However, knowing the meager staff that is available to the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Military Affairs, I wonder if the gentlemen of the Committee on Rules, in your deliberations, have given some thought in this resolution to take into consideration the obstacles confronted by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with these very same matters, and whether or not there is going to be closer liaison between this organization of investigators and the Committee on Appropriations in order that the Committee on Appropriations will be at least furnished some assistance in order to better come to the proper decisions when they write or mark up a bill making appropriations for our national defense. What have you done about that?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I certainly hope and assume there will be full cooperation between the Committee on Armed Services and the appropriate subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations. I certainly hope and assume that, regardless of whatever the Committee on Armed Services may do, the membership of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with military appropriations will use its own judgment and likewise do everything within its power to see that we have the proper kind of appropriation bills before us. However, I did point out, or attempted to point out, that the Committee on Armed Services deals with the authorizations not only for appropriations, but with other legislation which does not come before the Committee on Appropriations directly, such as selective-service legislation, in which there is a great deal of interest throughout the Nation and which is of the greatest importance to our national defense and national security. So that the first responsibility rests with the Armed Services Committee, and, secondly, the responsibility, of course, rests with the Committee on Appropriations. There should be no conflict and there should be team play. I hope there is.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I did not intend to indicate that there would be any conflict, but I am asking for cooperation. I am familiar with the duties of the legislative committee, and also familiar with the duties of the Committee on Appropriations, which has to deal with every item of our national defense; and they should be armed with an adequate staff equal to that which you are setting up today, or they should have some advantage of that staff in order to make proper decisions as to appropriations.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I again say to the gentleman in all frankness and candor, that it is my hope, and I assume it is the intent and purpose of the Committee on Armed Services, to cooperate. The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, as I said a moment ago, will address the House on his own time and, I am sure, will answer many of these questions and make his position clear. Certainly there is no intent or thought on my part, or on the part of the Committee on Rules, in any way to infringe on the rights, prerogatives, powers, and authority of the great Committee on Appropriations. Indeed we are looking to that committee to be a safeguard and protection for all of us. Of course we have the highest respect and regard for the abilities and capacities of that committee. There should not be any conflict, and I hope I have expressed it—there will be no conflict—and there should not be. I agree with the gentleman from Nebraska that there should be cooperation and not conflict.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to thank the Rules Committee for acting favorably on this resolution. It is highly important. I think the emergency of the situation requires it.

Immediately after the 25th day of June 1950, I introduced a bill dealing with renegotiation, and had long hearings before the distinguished Committee on Ways and Means. That committee promptly, during this session, under the leadership of its able chairman, passed that bill. In my judgment, there are two things absolutely necessary to be done when we are spending such large sums of money as will be involved in the defense appropriations. One is that there should be a renegotiation law, and the other is that there should be a resolution giving authority to the Armed Services Committee to make investigations.

The mere fact that those two things have happened will bring about a tendency on the part of industry and on the part of officials of the Department to be more cautious and more careful in their acts, in their contracts, and in their transactions.

So much for that.

The Armed Services Committee has always been nonpartisan. It was the same during the days when we had separate committees for the Army and the Navy. Let me say to the Membership that whenever, in my capacity as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I address a communication on an official matter to any member of the Department of Defense, a copy of that letter which I write is always sent to the ranking minority member. If there is any committee in Congress free of politics, where politics does not enter into any of its deliberations, it is the Armed Services Committee. We do not know Democrats. We do not know Republicans. We are only actuated by one impulse and one desire, and that is to do our job and see that the country has an adequate defense.

I am glad you reported this resolution from the Rules Committee for consideration by the House, because we do have an immense amount of work that can be done. This resolution embarks on a fertile field, and I want to ask the cooperation of every Member of the House. When you get information, have no hesitancy in sending it to the Armed Services Committee so we may investigate.

A few days ago our distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] made some observations. As soon as I read it in the RECORD, one of the members of the committee staff went to see him to get full information. The same thing has just happened again as a result of a statement made in the press. When it was called to our attention an inquiry was made. You gentlemen will get an immense amount of information and it is going to be information that will be run down and verified. So have no hesitancy in sending it to the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with information we receive, much of it is misinformation, sent in good faith, but when the charge is made the truth never catches up with it, and it brings about some misunderstandings on the part of the people. Of course, no Member is bound by it, but as far as I am concerned I always take it up with the gentleman and ascertain the facts before I make any charge.

Mr. VINSON. That is right, and I think that is the proper thing to do. For instance, a statement was made in the paper that over a million uniforms were being ordered for the women in the Navy and Marine Corps. The truth of the matter is this: A general survey of the capacity of every plant in America is being made to see what they can do in case of an all-out mobilization. The services have to do that. So this manufacturer, when they made the survey of his plant and he said he could make a million uniforms, immediately thought he had an order for a million uniforms. As a matter of fact, there have been only a few uniforms ordered. So we run down all those things.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. On that particular story which has given us an example of things that might be investigated in the discussion in the Committee on Rules, at that time the statement was made that no one knew anything about it except the newspaper reporters.

Mr. VINSON. That is right; it should have been investigated.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman from Georgia informed the committee that he had already ordered a report on the story; that he had been ahead of everyone else.

Mr. VINSON. No; I told the gentleman we would do it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thought the gentleman said he had ordered it.

Mr. VINSON. I knew nothing about it until I heard the gentleman's statement, and half an hour afterward we started on it and a letter went from me to the gentleman giving information about it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. But as the gentleman from Georgia has explained on the floor, the Navy Department advises that the original story came from the manufacturer and that the reporters were not entirely wrong in printing it. They presumed the manufacturer knew what he was talking about when he said he had the order.

Mr. VINSON. That is right; but the Navy had not even offered a contract. All it had done was to make a survey to see if that plant could handle a certain type of business and what its capacity was in manufacturing dresses.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. But if the chairman of this committee had been contacted about it he would have ascertained——

Mr. VINSON. Oh, now, I am not going to get into that argument.

Let me say this: Here is what we are going to do. I discussed this matter yesterday with my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE]. We have in the Armed Services Committee what is known as a policy subcommittee where matters of this kind are discussed. We will ask the Committee on House Administration, if this resolution passes, to make available $50,000, and then we will agree on the special attorney to handle this business. Then we will set him up as special counsel and really go to work and we will make the necessary investigations.

I have been through this thing twice before. I was here in World War I, I was here during World War II. The Committee on Naval Affairs conducted investigations of every Navy contract during World War II and as a result of our investigations and as a result of renegotiation, over $3,000,000,000 was turned back to the Treasury. So this resolution is a step in the right direction and it is the proper thing to do. The five percenters are probably already on the warpath, as the gentleman from Michigan has already said on the floor of the House, and we have got a fertile field for investigation.

So trust the committee and if we do not do a good job then get up on the floor and criticize us and, if we don't correct it, we will hand it over to some special committee to do it.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I think the gentleman should also point out that the Armed Services Committee returned almost half of the money that was allotted to it to make these investigations in the last Congress.

Mr. VINSON. Last year we had this same authority. However, the field was not as fertile then as it is now.

We are very anxious about these matters. We had some very important investigations. We had the B–36 investigation and we had other investigations and we filed our report in accordance with the resolution with the Speaker of the House and it is available to everybody. We will appear before the Committee on House Administration when this resolution is adopted and ask that we be given $50,000, and then we will go to work.

The House can trust us. We will do a good job.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. While it is not necessary, I would like to confirm what the gentleman said about three cases in my own district which have been reported to me. The chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has sent his investigators to my office. We have discussed these matters in detail and I have written specific and pressing letters to those constituents in my district who submitted that information to me, requesting them to submit it to the chairman of the Armed Services Committee. I grant that these matters cannot be cleaned up unless the people of this country stand together with the committee and help them clean house when these bad things develop.

In my opinion, it is not a matter for a Member of Congress to make the investigation; it is up to this committee. We are appropriating the funds to make the investigation and set up the machinery with which to make it.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who so desire may extend their remarks in the RECORD immediately following the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of bills on the Consent Calendar for Monday next be dispensed with, there being only one bill on that calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to determine the program for next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there will be no legislation on next Monday. A bill has been reported out of the Ways and Means Committee today, I think unanimously, and in the event the committee gets a rule on that bill it will be brought up for consideration on either Tuesday or Thursday of next week. If it is brought up on Tuesday it will be with the understanding that if there is any roll call, which I do not expect, the roll call will go over until Wednesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand there is no opposition to that bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. I so understand. But in the event there should be a roll call, it will go over until Wednesday.

Mr. REED of New York. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we are to finish up the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act next week and I hope we will not spend too much time with other legislation on that day because we will devote a full legislative day to that bill alone.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am referring to a bill that was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee today relating to E bonds. I understand there is no objection to that bill.

Mr. MASON. That really should come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate that, but we do not want to make it the practice too much of calling up bills by unanimous consent unless they appear on the Consent Calendar. The leadership on both sides appreciates and realizes that the great Committee on Ways and Means would want to set a general example to all other committees by compliance with the rules which provide for going to the Rules Committee and seeking a rule. I shall suggest to the chairman of the committee this course of action be taken in reference to the bill to which I referred.

On Wednesday next consideration of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act will be continued.

It is not my intention to call up any controversial legislation on Thursday or Friday of next week or on the following Monday and Tuesday. I know of no legislation now, but if there is any controversial legislation called up it will not be done until a week from next Wednesday because of Lincoln Day celebrations to take place throughout the country.

If a controversial measure is considered on Wednesday of the week after next, if there is a roll call it will be with the understanding that the roll call will take place on the next day, Thursday.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and I have arrived at such an understanding which becomes binding upon me. If we have any legislation on Thursday or Friday of next week it will be of a noncontroversial nature.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 78 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of all matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, within or without continental United States, as the committee may determine, whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or of any subcommittee, or by any member designated by any such chairman, and may be served by any person designated by any such chairman or member.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 28 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of all matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places as the committee may determine, whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman. The chairman of the committee or any member designated by him may administer oaths to witnesses.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 100 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Clause (a) 14 of rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives is amended by striking out "Committee on Public Lands" and inserting in lieu thereof "Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs."

Clause (1) (n) of rule XI is amended by striking out "Committee on Public Lands" and inserting in lieu thereof "Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs."

Clause (2) (a) of rule XI is amended by striking out "Committee on Public Lands" where it appears in the said clause and inserting in lieu thereof "Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs."

Clause 1 of rule XII is amended by striking out "Public Lands" where it appears in said clause and inserting in lieu thereof "Interior and Insular Affairs."

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I merely want to say, Mr. Speaker, that House Resolution 100 was approved unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. It was approved unanimously by the Committee on Rules. It provides for the change in the name of the Committee on Public Lands to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. There are many reasons why this change in name is desirable, one of the principal reasons being that the title of the committee now makes it the same as the title of the corresponding committee in the other body of the Congress. So, Mr. Speaker, it is with the approval on this side of the aisle as well as the other side that this resolution is presented.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 111) to implement the resolution just adopted, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That those Members of the House elected to the Committee on Public Lands are hereby elected to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and all records and papers of the Committee on Public Lands are hereby transferred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

That all bills, resolutions, communications, papers, documents, petitions, and memorials heretofore referred to the Committee on Public Lands are hereby referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 80 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands (now comprised of the six former Committees on Insular Affairs, Territories, Public Lands, Irrigation and Reclamation, Mines and Mining, and Indian Affairs) may make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction. For the purpose of making such investigations the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "or outside."

Line 9, after "States", insert "its Territories, and possessions."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LYLE: On page 1, line 1, strike out "Public Lands" and insert in lieu thereof "Interior and Insular Affairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASED TAXATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 53)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In the January messages to the Congress, I stated my intention of making further recommendations on a number of important matters. One of the most urgent of these is the need for increased taxation.

The budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, which was transmitted to the Congress, included estimated expenditures of 71.6 billion dollars, and estimated receipts under present tax laws of 55.1 billion dollars.

It is my firm conviction that we should pay for these expenditures as we go. A balanced budget now is just as important a mobilization measure as larger armed forces, allocations of basic materials, and controls over prices and wages.

This is true for three main reasons.

First, we should pay as we go because that is the way to keep the Government's finances on a sound footing.

We are now strengthening our national security, in order to increase our ability to meet whatever situation may arise in the future. Our Government financial policies, like every other part of our national effort, must be designed to leave us stronger, not weaker, as the years go by. If in this period we pay for our necessary expenditures as we go along, rather than adding to the public debt, we will obviously be better prepared to meet our future needs whatever they may be.

There is a question as to how high we can push taxes without having serious effects upon the productive growth of our economy. But I am sure that we could increase Federal revenues by considerably more than enough to cover the expenditures now anticipated without reaching those limits. During recent years we have taxed ourselves at high levels—and during those years our economy has bounded forward: incomes have risen rapidly, new plants and industries have sprung up, and the standard of living of our people has increased steadily. The growth in the strength of our economy that has occurred under these tax rates gives us confidence that we can safely pay the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year out of taxes.

Second, we should pay for defense as we go because that is the way to distribute the cost of defense fairly.

We cannot escape paying the real cost of defense now—the cost in materials and days of work that are devoted to defense purposes. Whatever we do about taxes, the amount of goods available for consumers to buy is only going to be what is left over after defense needs are met.

We could try to escape the financial cost of defense by borrowing—but that would only transfer the financial problems to our children, and would increase the danger of inflation with its grossly unfair distribution of the burden.

The sensible and honest thing to do now is to tax ourselves enough, as we go along, to pay the financial costs of defenses out of our current income.

Our Federal tax system can spread the cost of defense fairly among our people. There are many ways in which the fairness of the present tax system can and should be improved, but on the whole we have a good system. It recognizes differences in incomes and in family obligations. It protects incentives for initiative and effort. It takes account of the special needs of new undertakings and the expansion of existing businesses.

I am convinced, after studying the matter thoroughly, that the people of our country—and I am thinking primarily of the average family of modest income—will all be better off if everybody pays his fair share of the financial costs of defense in taxes now. If we don't do that, we will only be putting off the evil day, and making matters worse for ourselves in the future.

Third, we should pay as we go to help prevent inflation.

If we do not tax ourselves enough to pay for defense expenditures, the Government will be spending more than it takes in, and the extra money it spends will add to total purchasing power and inflationary pressures.

Inflationary pressures will be strong, of course, even with the budget balanced. Military production results in wage payments, and buying materials, long before the goods are produced and paid for by the Government. Businessmen who build new plants spend money well in advance of producing any goods for the Government or consumers to buy. Furthermore, consumers have accumulated large amounts of cash and other liquid assets which they are free to spend if they so choose.

Thus, inflationary pressures will be strong even after taxes are increased enough to balance the budget. We will still need direct controls over prices and wages. But it may not be possible to make those controls effective unless we tax ourselves enough. Certainly, those controls will be far more effective if we pay for expenditures through taxes as we go along.

During World War II, taxes were not high enough, and the Government was forced to borrow too much. As a result, when controls were taken off after the war, prices skyrocketed and we paid in inflation for our failure to tax enough. The value of people's savings was cut down by the higher prices they had to pay.

We must not let that happen now. We must have both an adequate tax program and proper controls on prices and wages if we are to prevent inflation and preserve the value of savings and fixed incomes.

For these reasons, the case for a pay as we go tax program is conclusive at the present time, and I urge the Congress to continue to keep that goal before it.

I believe that the wisest and most practical approach to this goal is to enact the tax program we need this year in two parts rather than enacting the full tax program all at once.

Government expenditures will be increasing very rapidly during the next few months. We will have to act fast if our revenues are to keep pace with rising expenditures.

I recommend that as rapidly as possible the Congress enact revenue legislation to yield additional taxes of at least 10 billion dollars annually, and later in the year enact the remaining amounts needed to keep us on a pay as we go basis.

If we follow this course, our revenues will keep pace with increasing expenditures, and we shall have some months in which to observe economic developments and to consider the several serious questions that will need to be resolved before all parts of this year's tax program are enacted.

For example, we will have better information on exactly how much we shall need to balance the budget. As I explained in the Budget Message, our estimates of military expenditures are still tentative. In particular, the amount we spend for military equipment will depend on how fast the production lines are geared up and the equipment is actually turned out. If our military production program can be got under way faster—as we hope it can—expenditures will, of course, be larger than the budget estimates.

Moreover, the Congress has not yet had an opportunity to act on the budget. I believe the Congress will find that the budget is sound, and provides only for the essential needs of our Nation in this time of world crisis. Nevertheless, the appropriations actually enacted by the Congress will, of course, control the actual expenditures.

Furthermore, the economic developments of the months ahead—the impact of the defense effort and of tighter controls on prices and wages and profits—should be considered before the balance of our tax program for the coming fiscal year is completed.

These uncertainties, however, do not affect our obvious need for much larger taxes—and our need for the bulk of them very soon. I am therefore transmitting, for the consideration of the Congress at this time, my recommendations as to the best way to raise at least 10 billion dollars now.

I know the Congress will want to consider these problems very carefully, and to review my recommendations in the light of their own independent analysis. The Secretary of the Treasury is prepared to discuss these matters in detail with the committees of Congress.

I believe we should meet our immediate objective by increasing existing taxes. The present Federal tax structure, while marred by imperfections, contains the most equitable types of taxes we have been able to devise. Under these taxes, our economy has demonstrated a surge in productive power to increasingly higher levels.

I recommend an immediate increase in personal income taxes to bring in 4 billion dollars in additional revenue.

The personal income tax is the mainstay of our Federal tax system. It should be the major source of the additional revenue we need.

This is true because it is the personal income tax that allows us the greatest opportunity to be fair. It is the personal income tax above all else which takes account of differences in ability to pay—both differences in income and differences in family obligations. It allows an exemption of $600 per person, and deductions for charitable contributions, extraordinary medical expenses, and other expenses as provided by law. Under present law, a single person earning a net income of $3,000 a year pays a tax of about 16 percent of his income, or $488, while a married person with two dependents and earning the same net income pays a 4 percent tax, or $120. The average rate of tax reaches 50 percent at about the $45,000 income level for a single person and the $90,000 income level for a family of four.

In increasing the yield of the personal income tax, everyone should realize that the higher taxes cannot be limited to the upper income groups. To obtain revenue commensurate with our defense expenditures, all taxpayers must contribute, because the bulk of the income in this country is received by persons whose incomes are between $2,000 and $10,000 a year. We should tax the upper income groups—and tax them heavily—but it will also be necessary to tax people with moderate incomes.

I do not believe that the personal exemption of $600 should be lowered at the present time. Although the exemption was $500 during World War II, the present $600 exemption is less generous, in terms of present costs of living, than was $500 six or eight years ago.

I recommend, second, an increase in corporation income taxes to yield an additional 3 billion dollars.

The corporation income tax is the major supplement to the personal income tax in our present Federal tax system. Basic corporation tax rates now begin at 25 percent on corporation profits less than $25,000, and increase to 47 percent for larger corporations. Those corporations covered by the excess profits tax pay more—up to a maximum set by law of 62 percent of net profits.

In the light of high and rising corporate profits, the increase in corporation taxes I propose will leave corporations generally able to maintain the dividend and reinvestment policies of recent years.

The first tax returns under the new excess profits tax law will be received later this spring. We shall then be in a position to consider what changes in the excess profits tax law are desirable to obtain more revenue from that source. I believe, therefore, we should defer this matter until later this year.

I recommend, third, increases in selective excise taxes to yield 3 billion dollars. Under present circumstances, these increases should be concentrated upon less essential consumer goods, and upon goods which use materials that will be in short supply.

In addition to the tax increases recommended above, I recommend that the Congress carry further the program it started last year to close loopholes in the present tax laws.

The revenue to be gained by closing these loopholes is not large in comparison with our needs. But in terms of fairness, and willingness of people to pay their share of taxes, closing these loopholes is worth a very great deal.

Those required to bear higher taxes for defense are entitled to the assurance that others will not be permitted to avoid them. The last Congress closed several important loopholes. But a number remain.

I have previously called attention to the gross undertaxation of the oil and mining industries, to the broad loopholes in the estate and gift taxes, and to the undue preferential treatment granted to capital gains in comparison with ordinary income. I urge the Congress to examine these provisions of the law very carefully, together with those relating to life insurance companies and to holders of securities now exempt from income taxes, and to review the tax status of organizations now exempt under present law. I do not believe any of us, in good conscience, can take action to increase taxes on the man, with a wife and two children, who earns $60 a week—an increase I am now recommending—without at the same time taking action to reduce the glaring inequities in present law—some of which permit a man with one hundred times as much income to avoid paying any taxes at all.

In addition to the changes in the law that are needed to close loopholes, we shall continue to improve our enforcement efforts to make sure that the taxes which are due under present laws are actually paid.

The tax program I am proposing will require higher rates in some cases than those paid during the last war. I believe our people understand that if we had paid higher taxes then we would be better off today. I believe our people are ready and willing to pay the taxes needed to cover essential Government expenditures in this time of danger.

I am convinced that the average citizen in our country will be best served by fair tax laws which will balance the budget. He will be better off now, because he will pay his share of the cost of defense now, once and for all. He will be better off in the future, because his savings and his future income will not be dissipated by inflation.

The American people understand that the cost of freedom is high at a time when aggression has been loosed on the world. I urge the Congress to act rapidly so that we can pay that cost as we go.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 2, 1951.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the President has presented us with a suggestion involving staggering increases in taxes. He promises still more are on the way.

Admittedly there is no cheap and easy way to buy our national security. Concededly also, to prevent wild inflation and the imposition of a still greater burden on the backs of our children and grandchildren in the form of national debt, we should strive, so far as possible, to finance our defense effort on a current basis.

But there are at least three immediate steps we should take, two having to do with effecting substantial economies and the other involving a matter of principle more than dollars and cents.

Before we administer another wallop to the wallets of the taxpayers, before we assault their pay envelopes again, we should cut out of the budget those items, nondefense in character and properly termed nonessential, which are designed to initiate some of the pet projects of the administration and fulfill political, vote-buying promises made to various pressure groups. Good illustrations of this type are the proposed appropriations to socialize farming and medicine.

Then we should drastically reduce other recommended expenditures, laudable in purpose and justifiable enough as representing a legitimate governmental activity, which cannot be properly classified as indispensable to the success of the primary defense effort to which we are now committed. Under this heading come rivers and harbors, reclamation, soil conservation, and a host of similar items.

We must wait on tidying up the parlor and repapering the guest room until we have plugged the hole in the roof and shored up the foundations where the floor is sagging.

A second step we must take is to serve notice on the component services of the Defense Department that unnecessary waste, duplication, and inefficiency will not be tolerated. The figures contemplated to be spent by the Army, Navy, and Air Force are not sacrosanct. They must be carefully scrutinized. Then their actual expenditure, reaching such astronomical figures, must be the subject of continuing and constructively critical review.

No one for a moment wants to deny our fighting men the best in training, equipment, and care. No one wants to scrimp on weapons or ammunition, on planes or tanks, on the essential research to improve and perfect military equipment or on any of the essential items which comprise the framework of a sound defense structure. But the soldier and the sailor are not noteworthy for their financial prudence. They need to have applied to them the cooperative, but firm hand of those whose responsibility it is to total up the bill which is to be submitted to the people. Without intending to imply criticism of our Nation's great military leaders, most of them dedicated to their task and deserving our profound gratitude, I am satisfied that there are wide areas of opportunity for savings, without impairment in any degree of the soundness or efficiency of our defense structure.

To illustrate, there are the rather shocking disclosures that the Quartermaster General has been contracting to purchase such items as butter, potatoes, and cheese at current high prices at the very time adequate investigation would have disclosed that another arm of the Government, the Commodity Credit Corporation, was selling these same foodstuffs for a nominal sum or, in some cases, giving them away. Proper liaison between Government agencies should have prevented this inexcusable waste of public funds.

Then there is the story of the lost airport out in Kansas, where the Air Force is said to have advocated the purchase of the airport in Wichita as absolutely essential for its purposes at the very time it had another airport nearby which could serve the purpose.

I appreciate the fact that mistakes are bound to occur when mobilization preparations are necessarily hurried, as they are at this time. My only point is that the constant vigilance of appropriate congressional committees can do much in this field to protect the public purse.

Finally, when the President and Congress are talking about equality of sacrifice, they should match their words with action. This is peculiarly true when their personal interests are involved. The second bill which was passed when the Democrats took over power in the Eighty-first Congress was to increase the salary of the President to $100,000 a year and give him a $50,000 tax-free expense account for which he was required to make no accounting. In the case of the Vice President, his salary was increased to $30,000 and he was given a similar $10,000 tax-free expense account. The Speaker of the House was given a like allowance of $10,000 for which no accounting was required.

In the previous Democrat Congress, the Seventy-ninth, the Congress had voted to each of its Members a $2,500 tax-free expense account, also not subject to any accounting.

No one else among our taxpaying citizenry enjoys a comparable concession. No doubt, at least in the case of Members of Congress, each one could show necessary expenses incident to his job in excess of $2,500 a year. Perhaps the same is true of the President and Vice President. It is the principle involved in this preferential treatment which I am attacking.

With complete justification, it seems to me, the people who are being loaded with additional taxes are inquiring why it is that the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker and Members of Congress continue to enjoy a privilege, which, at least, appears to be a tax advantage which is denied to other taxpayers who must justify in detail a showing of expenses in connection with their employment before it will be allowed.

I am not disposed to quarrel with the actual salary increase which was given the President and Vice President in 1949. Theirs are onerous responsibilities. But it seems to me inexcusable for us to conceal the true income of the President through the device of granting on top of his salary an additional allowance for which he need not account.

I am informed by the Legislative Reference Service that the President's salary of $100,000 plus his $90,000 tax-free expense account—he had a $40,000 expense account before the additional $50,000 was granted him in 1949—is the equivalent of a salary for the ordinary taxpayer of about $530,000 a year so far as the net return is concerned.

Then, of course, on top of his take-home pay he is granted at Government expense some 42 facilities for travel, vacationing, and entertainment, including planes, 35 White House automobiles, the yacht Williamsburg, a private pullman car, and vacation retreat in Key West, Fla., and Maryland.

The estimated annual cost of the staff and upkeep for these items is about $1,500,000.

Obviously if we eliminated, as we should, the President's and Vice President's free-from-tax-scrutiny allowance, we should take the same step regarding the $2,500 a year allowed to us as Members of Congress.

We have no right to be parties to bamboozling the public. If we wish to increase salaries, we should do it in a forthright fashion.

Furthermore, I know of no group of our people who need more to be reminded that their compensation is subject to tax than do the President and Members of Congress. A case could be put up for everyone in the country, high-salaried executives and workingmen and women alike, to be allowed a tax-free sum for expenses. Everyone incurs such expenses in connection with his work, for which he is denied any tax exemption. A simple illustration is the bus fare or street-car fare or automobile expense which almost everyone incurs in going to and from his work. There is no reason at all why this peculiar tax advantage should be accorded to those in high official position.

For that reason I have introduced today a bill to amend the pertinent statutes relating to compensation to provide that these tax-free expense accounts shall be added to the salary of the President, Vice President, the Speaker, and Members of Congress so that the total compensation will be subject to income tax.

REPORT OF NATIONAL CAPITAL HOUSING AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 5 (a) of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the National Capital Housing Authority for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 2, 1951.

HON. LINDSAY C. WARREN

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I, as well as all other Members of Congress, received a letter from the Comptroller General, the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren, giving a most startling account of the economies practiced in the General Accounting Office. Mr. Warren, as one of the Nation's great administrators, throws out a challenge to all other administrators.

The people of the country are demanding economy in the nondefense Government agencies as well as discretion in the Department of Defense. There are many expenditures carrying grants and aids to the States that the Appropriations Committee could drastically reduce. I hope such funds will be cut to the bone.

I have a particular reason to be very proud of Mr. Warren's accomplishments, and the example he has set.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of Mr. Warren's letter may be published at this point in the RECORD together with an editorial which appeared in the Greensboro Daily News of Greensboro, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

(The letter referred to follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 29, 1951.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: With the many vital problems before the Congress today, I know you don't have time to read annual reports of Government agencies. Anyway, ours is still in the process of printing. But, knowing of the interest of Members in the General Accounting Office, an agent of the Congress and a part of the legislative branch, I believe there are certain facts you will want to know. That is the reason for this letter.

The General Accounting Office is an independent and nonpolitical agency. It is a part of our system of checks and balances. It audits and settles the accounts and claims of the Government, and advises and assists the Congress and the agencies on matters relating to expenditures.

The Comptroller General is appointed for a term of 15 years and cannot be reappointed. He can be removed from office only by the Congress.

During recent years, when it seems the Government has been expanding beyond all reasonable comprehension, the GAO has proved that it is possible to reduce employees. In April 1946 the number of employees reached a peak of 14,904. There were 7,063 employees on January 1, 1951, a reduction of 7,841 in the last 5 years, of whom 779 were transferred to the Post Office Department. This has been accomplished through constant surveys of our work and the elimination of procedures which serve no useful purpose under present conditions.

For example, just recently I abolished the Accounting and Bookkeeping Division of the GAO. This division employed 325 people. Certain of the work formerly carried on by that division has been transferred to other divisions. However, it will be possible to carry out the work transferred with 61 people, making a reduction of 264 people and an annual salary savings to the GAO of nearly $1,000,000. There will be no loss of control of public funds. In fact, the revised procedures should enable the GAO and the Government generally to do a more competent job.

While practically every agency of the Government will ask for increased funds for 1952, the GAO will request less money than was made available to us for 1951.

A few statistics on our work in the last year: 25,300,000 vouchers audited; 492,000 claims settled; 318,000,200 checks reconciled; 12,400 decisions rendered to departments, agencies, claimants, and others; inspections made of 945 different Government offices; 34 comprehensive audits submitted to Congress (for the first time since the Government Corporation Control Act of 1945 audits of Government corporations were up to date); 685 reports made to Congress and its committees; and 3,500 replies made to inquiries from individual Members of Congress.

The GAO is one of the few agencies that not only pays its way but in addition makes a substantial contribution each year to the Treasury. Collections from 1941 through December 31, 1950, total $718,100,000. This money had been illegally or otherwise improperly paid out and it is a fair statement to say that little of it would have ever been recovered except for the General Accounting Office. Collections are impressive, but also important is the prevention of illegal or improvident use of funds without waiting to collect back what has been paid out illegally.

The joint accounting program inaugurated in December 1947, by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director, Bureau of the Budget, and myself, is achieving remarkable success. As a result of the program and of legislation enacted by the Congress, accounting improvements and red-tape cutting are going forward with rapid acceleration.

The GAO is expanding comprehensive, on-the-site audits which bring about broader coverage, more effective results, less paper work, and reduced flow of documents into Washington.

During the Eighty-first Congress, the GAO supported the enactment of a number of laws which made possible some of the improvements just mentioned. Probably the most important are the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, and the Post Office Department Financial Control Act of 1950. The Budget and Accounting Procedures Act, among other things, permits the elimination of certain procedures upon determination that the interests of the Government are otherwise protected. This made possible the abolishment of the accounting and bookkeeping division mentioned above, but this is only an example. Many other benefits have resulted and will continue to come about. The revisions of procedures and improvements made have reached into every agency of the Government.

The Post Office Department Financial Control Act made possible the abolishment of the postal accounts division of the GAO last November 15. The administrative accounting work which had been done for the Post Office Department has been turned over to that Department. The GAO should never have been given those duties in the first place. I have set up a new postal audit division which will make comprehensive, up-to-date audits of postal financial transactions.

It is essential to our economic survival not only that the national defense be strengthened, but that it be done as effectively and economically as possible. On this score, the GAO bids fair to make a real contribution. We will not only audit defense spending, but will also concentrate to seek out excesses, waste, and extravagances in the defense program. At the same time, we will continue to keep a watchful eye on civilian spending to ferret out those extravagances and frills which our country should not and cannot now endure.

This letter is for your own information and no reply is necessary.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

[From the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News of February 1, 1951]

MERITORIOUS

Long and ardent admirers of Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, the Daily News was deeply pleasured from reading in the Raleigh News and Observer's Washington correspondence, that Beaufort County's chief current contribution to the State and Nation is forging straight ahead in his well-nigh single-handed campaign for cutting down waste in Washington expenditures.

From a wartime high employment of 15,000 persons Mr. Comptroller Warren has reduced his own pay roll to 7,000. This sort of thing has made him friends in Congress from which he holds his office, it is said; we are confident it has also made several Republican votes among those whom he has divested of the public teat.

But, as if this economy on his own premises were not enough, he has extended said premises to help others economize. He offers two floors of the new building constructed to house his personnel to Stabilizer Charles E. Wilson. This, we would insist, is the final demonstration of cooperative endeavor. When have you ever heard of a public official or department which had any working space voluntarily shared with any other official department or agency?

If it were not that we believe Lindsay would protest against the expense and time involved, we would suggest an award for the Federal workingman of the quarter century.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. KING asked and was given permission to address the House for 5 minutes today following the legislative business and any other special orders.

THE ARLINGTON RESOLUTION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read to the House a resolution which has been mulled over, debated, and adopted by a group of serious citizens of Arlington, Tex. It is entitled "The Arlington Resolution," and I take great pride in it because its authors are well known to me, and truly, I take a special pride that from among the people of my district there should spring such a clear and resounding affirmation of these principles of patriotic Americanism.

This resolution, I believe, is not only a challenge to us but all Americans. It reads as follows:

THE ARLINGTON RESOLUTION

Whereas we, the citizens of Arlington, Tex., recognize the grave situation that threatens our American way of life: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will support with our every effort every member of our national administration and of the Congress who will put aside all party politics and remember that his first duty in this crisis is to America and the American people. To this end, we stand ready to do our full share, pay our part, and give our lives, if need be; and be it further

Resolved, That we expect our Congress to take immediate steps toward revitalizing and strengthening the United Nations into an effective force to halt aggression and establish and preserve world peace, with each member nation contributing its fair and proportionate share; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon our neighbors throughout our Nation to support the principles embodied in this resolution so that, through our united efforts and our prayers to Almighty God, our way of life will be preserved for our children and our children's children.

Authorized this, the sixteenth day of January 1951.

SIZE OF THE MARINE CORPS

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a brief article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as one of the authors of proposed legislation pertaining to the size of the Marine Corps, I desire to invite the attention of the House to an enlightening letter from a Marine Corps officer which appears in this morning's Washington Post. I hope that all Members will study carefully all available information on this very vital subject:

MARINE RUN

Your editorial Marine Run of January 27, contains so many misconceptions that, in all fairness to the country and the corps, it must not go unanswered. If 58 bills to increase the strength of the corps have been introduced in Congress there must be some merit to the changes they propose.

Your charge, that by increasing the corps the Army will be deprived of the men it needs, is obviously fallacious. Any increase in the corps of a couple of hundred thousand men is peanuts when compared with the mass millions in the planned expansion of the Army and would not deprive it of any significant numbers. The size of the Marine Corps should be based on the contribution it can make to national security.

Time and again the Marine Corps has demonstrated that it can provide more combat power per individual and per taxpayer's dollar spent. Percentagewise it cost the taxpayer about 20 percent more to maintain a soldier than a marine in 1939 and 38 percent more in 1948.

The Marine Corps is the Nation's force in readiness. It is prepared to go anywhere on a moment's notice, with a full force of combined arms, including its own air support. The utility of this force has been demonstrated time and again; in the occupation of strategic Iceland, in the invasion of Guadalcanal, and again in Korea. In these actions the marines were the only force available which was ready, well trained, and toughened.

You say that giving the Commandant of the Marine Corps a seat on the Joint Chiefs of Staff would give the Navy two votes. Louis Johnson, when Secretary of Defense, stated explicitly that, "The Joint Chiefs of Staff do not vote; neither do they decide." When members cannot agree the matter is referred to higher authority. Fundamentally, of course, the issue is not one of voting. It is, contrary to your opinion, a matter of what contribution the Commandant can make to the deliberations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

There are strong arguments that the Commandant should be a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. In modern war every operation is a joint undertaking of more than one service. The Marine Corps occupies the unique position of having 175 years' experience in joint military operations and in the past three decades has pioneered the development of close coordination of land, sea, and air arms in amphibious warfare. From time to time it has operated with complete selflessness with and under the Army and with and under the Navy.

The country and the Joint Chiefs of Staff need the benefits of this rounded professional experience and cross education. At the present the Joint Chiefs of Staff is not getting the full benefit of this experience and knowledge. The Members of Congress who in the fall of 1949 gave the closest study to the problems of unification, namely, the House Armed Services Committee, unanimously recommended that the Commandant of the Marine Corps be made a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Your editorial correctly states that the Marine Corps operates under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. This is so because the Marine Corps is a separate service within the Naval Establishment enjoying coequal status with the United States Navy, and has been so recognized since 1798. Whether the Marine Corps is ably represented on the Joint Chiefs of Staff by the Chief of Naval Operations is really beside the point.

While recognizing the great abilities of Admiral Sherman and his fondness for the Marine Corps, much more is involved than the matter of Marine Corps representation on the Joint Chiefs of Staff or the legal right of the corps to have such representation. It is, in spite of your opinion to the contrary, a matter of what contribution the Commandant can make to the deliberations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It certainly has nothing to do with the comparative size of the Marine Corps as the smallest of the four services.

P. B. NIHART,
Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HAYS of Ohio (at the request of Mr. BECKWORTH) was given permission to address the House for 1 hour on Monday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PRICE CONTROL

Mr. YORTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. YORTY. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are bewildered by the administration's price-control order, which designated a period of the highest possible prices at the point at which to freeze them. The prices which prevailed during the pre-Christmas buying spree of 1950 certainly do not provide a basis for a control order, unless we are willing to assume that it is impossible to roll prices back to a level less artificial and more in keeping with the earning capacity of the consuming public. The present order is a mere mockery. Just as in the last war, the price-freezing intention was telegraphed well in advance so as to encourage the most greedy elements in the economy to hasten to hike up their prices and horde their inventories in advance of the freeze, enabling them to make a "quick killing" at the expense of the consuming public and in utter disregard of the welfare of the Nation.

Since the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, we have witnessed a sickening orgy of selfishness with too many groups shunning the path of true patriotism, and striking out for themselves to carry on profiteering in the same manner as in World War I and World War II. This cynical and sinister attitude bodes only ill for the Nation. We cannot create and sustain the morale we must have to achieve victory and to navigate the arduous course ahead, unless everyone is willing to curb his selfish inclinations and accept his full responsibility as a citizen of this free but imperiled Nation.

Extortionate prices have cumulative effects. They increase defense costs, thereby necessitating higher taxes, but at the same time they destroy the ability of a large part of the population to pay increased taxes or even to pay current taxes without reducing their standard of living below what would be necessary if defense sacrifices were equitably shared. Our people are willing to defray the cost of defense on a pay-as-you-go basis in order to prevent destruction of our economy through inflation, but they insist, and they have a right to insist, that we stop sending some to the battle lines, and some to the bread lines, while rewarding others with undeserved financial security and opulence. The job of saving America is a job for everybody, and when we consider starting to draft 18-year-old boys for almost 3 years' service in the Army, we had better be certain that others, whether willingly or through compulsion, are required to contribute their share to the defense effort.

I can very well remember the way many of us felt after long years in New Guinea, when we heard reports of great prosperity and free spending at home, mostly made possible by the building up of a national debt with which to saddle us upon our return. We must not now do this to another generation of Americans. Those of us who are fortunate enough to remain at home must pay the bills and pay them now. This will be more difficult because of the necessity of paying interest on the debt for the last war, but we should not compound the felony by adding more debt onto the existing one.

Getting back to the question of prices, I have today introduced a bill which would remove the prohibition which now prevents control of food prices below the parity level. Surely the patriotic individual farmers of the Nation are willing to accept the same controls placed upon everyone else in spite of the attitude of the farm lobby. The restrictions favoring the farmers, placed in the Defense Act of 1950, make it appear that farmers expect special treatment and are not willing to take their chances on controls being fair, along with everyone else. I do not believe that farmers wish to be singled out for special treatment. They are one of the most sound, hard-working, and deserving groups in our Nation. We all want to assure them a fair share of the national income, but in doing this there is no necessity for the exception, supposedly for their benefit, written into the Price Control Act. The farmers are not a selfish group, and they should not be made to appear selfish by the special treatment accorded them in the matter of price control.

Some of the gentlemen who insist upon special governmental assistance for farmers are the same ones who brand every attempt to help other segments of the population as socialistic. Republican leaders almost never make a public statement without emotionally denouncing the administration for sponsoring what they call socialistic schemes, but few Government-assistance programs are actually as directly socialistic as the farm price-support program of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Yet the market manipulations of this agency are not considered socialistic by the Republican leaders who desire to hold the farmers' vote. Incidentally, it might be a good idea to suspend some of the wasteful activities of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the duration of the emergency. It is hard for people to understand why one agency of Government is compelled to bid prices up, thereby making purchases by consumers and the Armed Forces more costly, while such agency, at the same time, actually destroys some of the food it purchases. I want to emphasize that this financial manipulating by the Government, and this entry of the Government into the field of food finance is certainly just as socialistic as the programs the Republicans denounce. How can they contend that it is right for the Government to help the farmer obtain high prices for his products, but socialistic to set a minimum wage for workers, or to provide assistance for the blind, the aged, the disabled, and needy children. If the Republicans are so anxious to curtail the so-called socialistic domestic expenditures in the interest of national defense, why do they not also propose curtailment of farm subsidies, price supports, and other costly farm programs.

It is evident to all that the cry of socialism, the malicious name calling, the petty faultfinding, the fight for special consideration, the scramble for high profits, the willingness to take advantage of the emergency—all of this must end, if we are to move forward, united and resolute, toward the better day that will only come if we are willing to equally share the necessary sacrifices to bring it about. When everyone feels that everyone else is doing his part, when we are not ashamed to reaffirm the ideals of our forefathers, when we raise our sights to a high spiritual plane, with faith in God and the laws governing the universe, then only can we create the high resolve required during this critical period. We desperately need inspiring leadership, and the inspiration that comes from high ideals. We cannot defeat communism by reducing ourselves to the ugly and sordid level of animalistic materialism. We can defeat it, and we will defeat it, by proudly, unselfishly, and confidently moving forward together, united in defense of our way of life.

WAGE-PRICE FREEZE ORDER

Mr. LANTAFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANTAFF. Mr. Speaker, during the last few days, I have received, from the citizens of the Fourth Congressional District of Florida, numerous letters that I believe are expressive of the views of the average workingman and housewife in America.

I know that the people in my district are willing to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to adequately prepare America to resist Communist aggression. However, it is not fair to require one group of people to make sacrifices, and, at the same time, take action to insure that another segment of our economy is guaranteed all of the principles of business as usual.

As I have said before on the floor of this House, it is imperative for the Government to have the confidence of the people, if we are to realize our maximum effort. We cannot possibly have that confidence, if the people are forced to continue to pay highly inflated prices for the necessities of life. The Eighty-first Congress authorized price and wage controls, but I am sure it was not the intent of that body to freeze prices at the highest level they have reached since June of 1950. As one of my constituents has written me, we have put a ceiling on Cadillac automobiles so that they sell today for the same price they sold for in February 1950, but we have frozen the necessities of life at their highest, inflated levels. Another writes me:

> On or about January 22, 1951, I purchased a 1-pound can of sodium perborate manufactured by Merck & Co., manufacturing chemists, at a Miami drug store for 59 cents, which is the price I have been paying for several years. Yesterday, January 29, I purchased the same article, and paid the new control freeze price of 98 cents; an increase of 39 cents, or approximately 70 percent over the former price.

On Monday, January 29, 1951, the Miami Herald, a prominent newspaper in my district, published a pertinent editorial on the wage-price freeze order. I would like to quote from that article:

> The war with Korea began on June 25, 1950.
> Almost immediately, there was a demand for official action against inflation—another way, in this instance, of saying shoddy patriotism and boundless greed.
> Almost immediately, too, there began the feared upward spiral in prices of most commodities.
> As quickly as it could Congress gave the President the power to act by legislation completed on August 31. * * *
> The Government found itself paying sharply raised prices for its war-needed and other goods.
> The taxpaying consumer found the cost of articles already manufactured, and in many instances already on the shelves awaiting purchase, being marked up.
> These boosts were not made once, or on some regulated or justifiable scale, but steadily and as often as the trade would allow.
> Further, the desire to get prices up to a fantastically artificial level in order to create a compromise area of high values in which to negotiate once a price fix was ordered helped to achieve the sky-high price brackets. * * *
> The order by Price Director Michael V. Di Salle, announced last Friday, essentially fixed prices at the high level which they had attained between December 19, 1950, and midnight of last Thursday.
> That means at the xenith; at the point to which they had been driven by all the considerations of greed and of compromise-area fiction.
> With one fell swoop, it sheared Congress, evidently, of any power to bring about renegotiation of those contracts which the Government has had to make while the cost rampage ran.
> In Key West last week, Senator BURNET R. MAYBANK, of South Carolina, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, said he hoped to save and recover billions of dollars for the Government through such renegotiations.
> But you cannot renegotiate when there is no arbitrary lower, established price level at which to settle.
> The renegotiated contracts would have saved the taxpayers those billions of dollars at a time when they are confronted with the biggest budget in our peacetime history, the highest taxes they have ever been called upon to bear, with Presidential warnings of even higher exactions; at a time, too, when the President is futilely seeking to inspire or win them with phrases closely approximating Winston Churchill's "blood, sweat, and tears." It is a mockery.
> The taxpayers must now supply the money to pay for the billions exacted in the artificial spiraling of prices of articles and materials needed by the Government, and he must supply it while himself paying highly inflated prices for many of the things he needs.
> And, if he be a wage earner, he must produce the money from dollars that have shrunken mightily in value and the number of which have been frozen to him.
> For the decree approving prices at the high level of the December 19 to January 15 period fixes his wages at the date of his last adjustment.
> The price fix will evoke no criticism from the uninhibited profiteer.
> By Government fiat, he has gotten his—more than he thought was coming to him—and now is assured that he will continue to get it.

On behalf of the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Florida, I appeal to Price Director Michael V. Di

Salle to reconsider the recent freeze order, and roll prices back to the pre-Korea level, in order that the housewives of America will not have to deny their families the necessities of life.

THE LOWLY GROUND HOG

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House that the Punxsutawney ground hog took the "freeze" spotlight from the Government today by forecasting six more weeks of winter weather.

Precisely at 8:41 a. m. today the seer of seers cast a shadow as black as the world's outlook for peace and then announced to his millions of anxious followers that the severe winter weather would continue until mid-March.

The forecast was made before loyal followers of His Chuckship who gathered at the Weather Works on Gobbler's Knob for the momentous occasion. Heading the contingent of officials from the Punxsutawney Ground Hog Club who gathered at the weather capital for the famous seer's appearance was Dr. F. A. Lorenzo, club president, who was the only one permitted to interview the great weather prophet.

Immediately after casting the shadow that portends six more weeks of winter weather, the groundhog exclaimed: "If you think the Government's freeze on wages and prices is something, wait till you see the freeze you're in for from the weather. You'll have cold, snow, rain, ice, slush, and wind—everything that goes to make up 6 weeks of the darndest weather you've ever seen."

After the chuck's shadow had been recorded by official shadowgraphers of the Punxsutawney Ground Hog Club, the ground hog was asked if there were any thing in particular he wanted to get off his chest. He paused momentarily and then launched into a tirade against the National Geographic Society and the report that it has moved to discredit him as king of the world's weather prophets.

"Why, I was forecasting the weather—and accurately—before some of those boys were out of knee pants. Their scientific explorations are all right, I guess, but they had better stick to their geography and leave this business of forecasting the weather to an experienced head who has been giving out the right dope for more than 50 years."

The seer of seers then launched into a castigation of his mortal enemy, the Quarryville polecat, and all other pretenders, opportunists, interlopers, and nature fakers of a low degree that live in reflected glory and who are wont to intrude on the sacred tradition of the Punxsutawney ground hog.

"Why, that squeal pig in Quarryville is even using a Geiger counter to help him," he asserted. "And, even then, he'll filch my forecast by means of a telegraph spy system," he said.

His Chuckship was apologetic as he turned to his followers and said: "I'm sorry, fellow. I couldn't forecast an early spring. The Lord knows you deserve it after all this severe weather and recent price and wage freeze. But it just was not in the books for an early spring."

And as he ambled off into the woods he turned and said, "As for that editorial in the morning paper entitled 'Exposé,' ordinarily I would not dignify it with a reply, and all I can say is puf, pooh-pooh, and phewie."

[From the Washington Post of February 2, 1951]

Exposé

This, as no doubt you have been reminded in other quarters, is ground hog day, one of the more notable festivals of American journalism; but the best advice we can give you is to ignore the whole business. If, however, you feel that you must celebrate something, why celebrate the nine hundred and ninety-eighth anniversary of the coronation of the Holy Roman Emperor Otho I or the memory of the great composer Giovanni Palestrina who died 365 years ago. (This date has other and even better-known associations which, out of deference to the sensibilities of certain readers, we forbear to mention; though doubtless they could be ascertained by discreet inquiry or by a little research in a good reference library.)

But as for the ground hog, we regret to inform you that trained investigators have been working on his case for some time. The accumulating evidence in their files indicates that he is not to be trusted at all. In the first place he has been operating all these years under an assumed name. His real name is woodchuck, although he has been called contemptuously marmot by the Europeans (which shows you how they talk about Americans behind their backs) and Marmota monax by snobbish Latinists. Secondly, it has been discovered that, notwithstanding the lying hypothesis foisted upon generations of innocent American school children, he never chucked so much as a twig in all his life, or ever lifted a paw in any kind of useful labor. He prefers, like all his worthless kind, to live at the expense of the hard-pressed American taxpayers, either in luxurious zoological gardens or in the wild state by devouring grains and vegetables that honest and hard-working American farmers are subsidized for raising. To put it bluntly the ground hog is cadger, a dead beat, a bum; and if he doesn't relish being called such names, let him sue us for libel and we will prove what we say up to the hilt in any unprejudiced court.

The first thing we shall do is to have our attorneys subpena the files of the National Geographic Society. The Geographic Society, it may interest you to know, has had its operatives at work looking into the shady history of this woodchuck, alias marmot, alias ground hog. These files support everything we have said about the various sinister rackets with which he has been identified, the vast sums he has cost the taxpayers and his scandalous neglect of his family responsibilities. The Georgaphic Society is known all over the world for the scholarly objectivity and restraint of its reports; but here is the sort of terms it uses to describe the character of this woodchuck-marmot-ground hog: "A phony prophet * * * a menace to America's food supply." Brothers, let us tell you that when the Geographic Society finds its necessary to use language like that, it is time for freedom-loving, law-abiding Americans to wake up.

Happily, this woodchuck fellow is as ignorant as he is vicious. He wouldn't know an isotherm from an isobar, or chile-mac from chile-con, or barometric pressures from beer posters. Those who are satisfied to take his word over that of the loyal, decent civil servants of the United States Weather Bureau are victims of one of the most outrageous propaganda hoaxes ever perpetrated. So our advice is to snub him; for if you don't he will certainly snub you. He won't even know or care whether it's clear or cloudy today. He will be sound asleep in the cozy little den or the swank little zoo cage for which in either case he pays no rent while you and we are out in the weather trying to scratch together one honest dollar for ourselves and another for the collector of internal revenue.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully call to the attention of the Committee on Armed Services that in meetings such as the one arranged by the committee to hear General Eisenhower in executive session, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs also has a deep interest. Our committee would greatly appreciate the chance to have all the information possible to help it in its work. We would appreciate very greatly an invitation to join with the Committee on Armed Services or any of the other committees when there are to be meetings which would be helpful to the members of our committee. Our committee has the care of the men and women who serve the country. We have the care of the men and women who pay the greatest price—the men and women who are the casualties of war. I believe it would be a great comfort and satisfaction to the veterans and future veterans to know that their committee was invited by other committees to listen to testimony which might help us to understand the great problems involved in their care and help.

Yesterday we were tremendously impressed with the excellent and inspiring report of General Eisenhower on the situation relating to the free nations of the world. We know the meaning of his sincerity, courage and positiveness. He has undertaken the most difficult job ever given any soldier. He is equal to his responsibility. The free world has complete confidence in him. I do not believe there is anyone, anywhere, who can successfully do the great work that is ahead other than General Eisenhower. I trust, and believe he will have the complete cooperation and support of the Congress. To win out, and we can win out, we must work together, all of the nations of the free world behind the brilliant and confident leadership of this top soldier-statesman of the century. I know our prayers and good wishes go with him as he marshals the forces of the free world together.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN FUND

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include two letters.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the friendship that I show to my Republican friends from time to time and the advice I give them was probably responsible for the receipt by me several days ago of a letter from the Illinois Republican State Central Committee, signed by Mr. Campbell, its chairman, in which he pleaded for a contribution to their magnificent souvenir program. He offered me a 50 percent reduced rate—the only reduction available to any group.

In my reply to Mr. Campbell I stated briefly why it was impossible for me to contribute. I can fully understand their need for all the funds they can collect, but unfortunately I was in no position to be of help to them. My heart and conscience would not permit me to make such a contribution to the Republican Party.

The letter from Mr. Campbell and my reply are as follows:

ILLINOIS REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
Chicago, Ill., January 24, 1951.

DEAR MR. SABATH: Plans for our fifty-fifth annual Lincoln Day dinner are progressing splendidly and all indications point to the most successful event of this type we have ever staged. Tickets are going more swiftly than in any previous year and Senator TAFT's announced desire to use our platform for an address of major importance promises to bring our program into millions of homes via radio network.

We are, however, disappointed at having had no assurance from you that your county will be represented in our magnificent souvenir program. In order to encourage participation we offered your county organization a 50-percent reduced rate, the only reduction available to any group. A number of counties have already taken their space, but we must have complete support from our county chairmen so that by deadline date, February 3, our roll call will show all present.

Time is short. Please let us have your space contract, check, and copy by return mail.

With best wishes, I am,
Cordially yours,
CARLOS W. CAMPBELL,
Chairman.

JANUARY 29, 1951.

Mr. CARLOS W. CAMPBELL,
Chairman, Illinois Republican State Central Committee, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I am in receipt of your form letter of January 24 stating that you had not heard from me as yet, indicating your disappointment at my negligence in failing to contribute to your magnificent souvenir program.

As a lifelong admirer of the great Abraham Lincoln and his espousal of the cause of the common man, my recollection is that he defeated the Whigs, the Tories, and the reactionaries in 1860. The fact is that at heart he was a Democrat, and were he alive today he would still be a Democrat and a leader in the fight against the reactionary Republican Party policies.

I am sure you will understand why I cannot participate in, or give any assistance to, the present Republican Party's activities because they are so far removed from the principles laid down by Abraham Lincoln.

Sincerely yours.

WILLIAM H. AYRES

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, now that we have done everything to the ground hog except fumigate him, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has all but helped the Republican administration along financially, let us recur to the regular routine of legislative procedure and let me say something nice about a real man. About one of my colleagues, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. WILLIAM H. AYRES, who is one of the new Members of Congress of whom we are all proud.

Mr. AYRES has just recently been given a very distinguished honor in his home community and by his home people. Mr. AYRES lives in Akron, Ohio, which is no mean city; it is the rubber capital of the world. Mr. AYRES has been recognized as the outstanding young man of the year in that community. Ohio has produced a great many political leaders, but one of our greatest political leaders, Senator Charles Dick, once said that one of the finest guaranties of successful public life is that one much be popular at home. Mr. AYRES has achieved that distinction for the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Akron has selected him as the outstanding young man of the year. To quote the Akron Beacon Journal, one of Ohio's leading newspapers, they say among many other complimentary things that—

A man who lifted himself by his own bootstraps was hailed as Akron's outstanding young man of the year for 1950.

Further quoting, they say, "We choose him because he is representative of the successful small-business man" and because "he is willing to work."

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, because I know that he and all the other Ohio Members are glad for the distinction that has come to a capable and successful young man.

Mr. VORYS. I wish to join in extending congratulations to Mr. AYRES.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on Thursday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

AMERICAN OCCUPATION POLICIES IN GERMANY—EISENHOWER AND McCLOY

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a resolution calling for a bipartisan Presidential commission to investigate American occupation policies in Germany. I do this because of the sharp conflict between the views expressed by General Eisenhower as to the Germans and the actions of High Commissioner McCloy who yesterday felt, in reducing and commuting many sentences of war criminals, including, I emphasize, those involved in the Malmedy massacre of American soldiers, that wooing the Germans was the right policy to pursue.

This is what General Eisenhower told the Congress yesterday about our occupation policy in Western Germany:

I am not even going to mention my several conversations in Germany, and for a very specific reason. I personally think that there has to be a political platform achieved, an understanding that will contemplate an eventual and an earned equality on the part of that nation before we should start to talk about including units of Germans in any kind of army. Certainly I, for one commander, want no unwilling contingents, no soldier serving in the pattern of the Hessians, serving in our Revolutionary War, in any army of my command. It would only be a source of weakness. Therefore, until the political leaders, the diplomats, and the statesmen find proper answer to that one, it is not for a soldier to delve in too deeply.

On the same day we read the news that High Commissioner McCloy has granted or there has been granted within his jurisdiction, commutations, reductions in sentence, and the discharge of German war criminals convicted and sentenced by the Nuremburg courts and other United States courts in Germany, including Krupp, who laid the industrial base for German aggression and the remaining criminals in the Malmedy massacre, whose sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. This was done on the advice of a distinguished board of advisers, and is one of a series of actions under the High Commissioner's power of executive clemency as our proconsul in Germany.

The New York Times comments editorially today on this decision of High Commissioner McCloy under the heading "Compromise at Frankfurt," as follows:

There is politics—or, if one likes, diplomacy—in these decisions.

I think that the family of every United States soldier who died fighting Hitler's Nazi legions, the family of every soldier who was a victim of the Malmedy massacre, the families of the millions who died in concentration and extermination camps under the Nazis have a right to ask whether this represents appeasement, German style, or normal justice, American style. This is especially true as this decision comes from Frankfurt the day after the great victory for morality in international affairs in the condemnation—under United States leadership—by the great majority of the nations in the General Assembly of the United Nations, of Communist China as an aggressor in Korea, all those who counseled appeasement and delay to the contrary notwithstanding. It is also an appropriate time to emphasize that the Russians are steeped in the immorality of traffic with former Nazi leaders and have employed them openly and brazenly in organizing the East German army—thinly disguised as a police force—and in other tasks behind the iron curtain. At least, Mr. McCloy's decision has proceeded in the fundamental and moral assumption that vast and grave crimes have been committed and that punishment is due.

General Eisenhower has struck the note of realism which was missing up to now in all our considerations about making Western Germany an integral part of Western Europe's reconstruction and unified defense against the Soviet Communist bloc. We do not want unwilling allies, he implies, for the very hard reason that they are undependable and likely to prove ineffective. The fundamental problem with Western Germany, therefore, is to win a willing and cooperative ally and a dependable ally for Western Europe, for us and for the cause of freedom everywhere. This cannot be done by appeasement and that is what raises the grave question about the High Commissioner's policy in general quite apart from and without going into the details of the disposition of each particular one of the war criminal cases. For we must answer the question whether our wooing of the Germans, relaxing rapidly the restrictions of the occupation statute, the vast money and material support to maintain German living standards at a tolerable minimum basis, enhancing their prestige by letting the Bonn Government open consulates and establish direct diplomatic relations with other nations and now leniency to the war criminals, has been effective. The reaction to this policy has been, I do not doubt, factually and without any desire to evaluate, nevertheless expertly stated by General Eisenhower. The Germans, in his judgment, still remain outside the class of willing allies in the struggle for freedom.

This must be contrasted with the course of our occupation policy culminating in decisions on the war criminals which certainly have the capability of being very disillusioning to the tens of millions in Western Europe who suffered the tyranny, executions, and police action of Nazi occupation and whom we count on now to be our allies in fighting communism. We should also ask ourselves the question whether it does not have the capability to make the West Germans themselves cynical and embolden further the former Nazi elements, who already have a tradition established in 1939 of combining with the Communists against the free peoples, while discouraging and setting back the position of the democratic and liberal elements in Western Germany.

Yet Western Germany has the potential for playing a vital, perhaps even a determinative, part in the defense of freedom in Europe. For one, there is her geographical location; for another, her own division between a democratic West Germany and a Communist East Germany. The Germans are a people who know the military art and have the greatest industrial capability in Europe—a capacity of almost half the steel production, for instance. The very violence of the reaction of the Soviet—expressed especially to the British and French in an effort to intimidate them—to the suggestion that German military contingents be incorporated in the NATO forces would be calculated almost alone to motivate the normal citizen of the United States in favor of it.

But General Eisenhower's calm appraisal that we do not want German contingents as unwilling allies has also high lighted a fundamental difference in approach. This difference is between concessions and appeasement in Western Germany which appear to be producing little result either in the rehabilitation of the German democratic spirit or in firming up the will of the people in West Germany to join with the other people of Western Europe in the defense of their liberties and putting the Germans on their mettle and reciprocating with concessions when they have been earned and deserved. This fundamental difference of view demands, it is my conviction, a revival of the proposal there should be an investigation of our whole occupation policy in West Germany by a Presidential bipartisan commission with a full disclosure of the facts and the results achieved and that kind of airing of the situation which has always proved so useful in crystallizing United States public opinion and in determining United States action. For this purpose I am introducing today a resolution for the appointment of such a commission.

TELEVISION FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a joint resolution in the House directing and authorizing the Federal Communications Commission to investigate the possibility of allocating certain television wave lengths for educational purposes. This same resolution was introduced yesterday in the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. I believe the matter should be brought to the attention of this House also, as well as the other body.

I should like to add that the only educational television station now in operation in the United States is the one at Iowa State College, at Ames.

The authorities of that institution some months ago saw the educational possibilities in the utilization of television for educational purposes and they secured a license and have erected a station there, I might say, without any direct tax expense to Iowa. For a good many years the radio station operated by Iowa State College, WOI, has rendered splendid service to the great Midwest, especially to the farm people. Operating through amplitude modulation and frequency modulation in daylight hours, and by frequency modulation only at night, WOI has given its listeners news coverage and farm market coverage not equaled by any other radio station that I know about.

In addition, its musical, educational, and informational broadcasts are outstanding. Without derogating or reflecting in any way on any of the other fine radio stations in our State, both commercial and educational, I pay tribute to the service rendered by the radio broadcasting service of WOI at Iowa State College, Ames.

The television broadcasting of this station is relatively new. But from all reports it is developing in a manner creditable to the college and the people of Iowa. Since it is now the only television broadcasting service in central Iowa, all the television for the middle part of that State comes from WOI-TV. Fortunately, through the energy and foresight of the college administration, the license for television was applied for, granted, and the station erected before the Communications Commission discontinued the issuance of further licenses for TV.

Iowa State College is thus an experimental and proving ground for the use and effectiveness of television as an educational medium. I sincerely hope and expect that WOI-TV will show to the Communications Commission and to the public generally that a portion of the wave band for television should be allocated for educational purposes.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PAY OF GI'S SHOULD BE TAX-EXEMPT

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, we just heard a long treatise and report on the part of the President of the United States, and we heard a great many recommendations as to the tax program.

I agree with Mr. Truman that we ought to tax the higher bracket incomes. The Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States enjoys a considerable tax-free salary. The boys in Korea are going to have a difficult time this year as they lay in their foxholes in the subzero hills of Korea, scraping up enough dollars to pay taxes. They are going to have a difficult time to scrawl their names on their income-tax returns. Today I am introducing a bill entitled "To make all GI salaries tax-free, excluding commissioned officers. Be it enacted that all salaries of the enlisted personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States shall be tax-free."

What is fair for the Commander in Chief is fair for the buck privates.

If the Commander in Chief can enjoy the tax-free privilege, then the rank and file of GI's should enjoy the same privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

WILL THE FCC PROHIBIT THE FREE EXERCISE OF RELIGION?

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include therein an article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, how many here know that it may soon be impossible for any church or religious group to obtain a license to operate a radio station in the United States? This will happen if the FCC does not act before February 6 to reverse a recent decision of one of its hearing examiners.

On December 29, 1950, Examiner J. D. Bond declared that the Mormon Church could not be given a license to operate a noncommercial radio station because of the first amendment of the United States Constitution, which provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

It is my contention that in this instance the FCC would violate the first amendment not if it granted the license, but rather if it failed to grant the license. It would be an obstruction of the free exercise of religion to deny a license solely because the applicant is a religious organization. This authoritarian abuse of discretion is a result of the false totalitarian belief that the Federal Government is the complete and sole proprietary owner of all the airwaves, and not merely a regulator of their use.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the legal name for the Mormon Church, applied for a permit almost 2 years ago. In the initial decision rendered by hearing examiner J. D. Bond, on December 29, 1950, Mr. Bond found that this Mormon Church was financially and technically qualified to operate a radio station. He found that the church, except for the fact that 1 of its 18 officers was an alien, was legally qualified to operate a station. And in the case of this one alien he did not deem this a sufficient deficiency to warrant a denial of the church's application. Mr. Bond found that the proposed radio programs would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

He found that—

> The program service proposed by the reorganized church as typified by its program schedule exhibit and the testimony of its witnesses evidences an analytical recognition of, and a plan to fulfill, the diverse radio broadcast needs of the community's religious, civic, charitable, governmental, agricultural, labor, and industrial interests. * * * we therefore conclude that its proposed programs in these respects would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

But, Mr. Bond further found "because the Constitution so requires, the reorganized church application should be denied, even though it might be otherwise legally qualified to hold a broadcast station license."

This conclusion of the hearing examiner was preceded by the following statement:

> The hearing examiner has carefully considered the constitutional principles herein discussed in relation to the applicant's proposed program service and the purposes which the broadcasts are intended to serve. They are inseparable. He concludes that the Commission has not been, and could not be, empowered to find that the public interest or convenience or necessity would be served by licensing this applicant to use the proposed broadcast facilities to foster its religious objectives. This constitutional limit is no less compelling even though the public interest concepts of the applicant may wholly coincide with ours and might be wholly adhered to in a diversified program structure of balance and impartiality. * * * The hearing examiner is convinced that this Commission may not and should not license, and thereafter necessarily regulate as required by law, the applicant reorganized church to construct and operate the station as proposed because an intended use thereof—be it even a small portion of the entire purpose—is to further the religious interests of the applicant.

I have faith and confidence that the FCC will not abide by this illogical decision of its hearing examiner but will take action to reverse it before the February 6 deadline. However, I wish to point out the type of dangerous thinking that appears to be infesting more and more of our bureaucratic administrators.

An unexpressed but totally false premise of the hearing examiner in this case is the concept that the Federal Government is the complete and sole proprietary owner of all the air waves. That the Federal Government owns the air waves and can dispense them to whomever it sees fit. This is an authoritarian and totalitarian idea which is foreign to our history.

Naturally, it is true that the air waves must be subject to Federal regulation and that they are affected with a public interest, as indeed is all property. And in the case of radio waves, Federal regulation is an absolute necessity because of the fact that the unregulated use of the air waves would result in a hopeless jumble of sound which would benefit neither the broadcasters nor the listeners. But regulation by the Government does not mean complete control.

As the terms of the law creating the Federal Communications Commission indicate, the primary purpose of regulation of radio stations is to see that those who are licensed to operate, serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity. As long as the public interest, convenience, and necessity is served, the FCC has no right to deny a license to an applicant, unless, of course, such a granting would cause hopeless radio interference with other stations already operating. In this present case of the Mormons, it must be remembered the examiner had already determined that the public interest, convenience, and necessity would be served by this station and that there would be no interference with other operating stations, and yet the examiner denied the license because he believed that to grant it would violate the first amendment.

I contend that the FCC has no right whatsoever to deny this license. On the contrary, it has a definite duty to grant this license, and I further contend that the FCC, if it denies this license, is acting in violation of the first amendment. Part of the first amendment prescribes that Congress shall make no law prohibiting the free exercise of religion. What greater violation of this amendment by Congress could there be if Congress so created the FCC, that it would have the power to deny a radio station to a church or religious group solely because it was a church or religious group?

The free exercise of religion necessarily implies a free right to propagate and teach that religion. Christ himself admonished his apostles "go ye therefore and teach all nations." A religion by its very nature impels its followers to spread its gospel to others.

In upholding this right to teach, our Supreme Court has protected the right of various creeds to preach on the streets and to distribute its literature—Murdock v. Pennsylvania (319 U. S. 105, 109); Martin v. Struthers (319 U. S. 141); Jamison v. Texas (318 U. S. 413); Marsh v. Alabama (326 U. S. 501); Tucker v. Texas (326 U. S. 517). The Court in these cases has recognized this right to preach in the streets to be of "the same high estate under the first amendment as worship in the churches and preaching from the pulpits."

In this age of mechanical and scientific advance, the radio is an ordinary and normal means of projection of one's ideas and thoughts. To a large extent it has replaced the street preaching of old. What would be freedom of the press without a pen or a pencil, or in this day and age, without a printing press? What then, too, is the right of freedom of religion or freedom of speech without a radio channel?

Further error in the examiner's decision lies in the fact that he assumes that the mere licensing of a radio station is "a law." A law, as we lawmakers should know, is a broad rule of action to govern society, not a specific license. If the FCC issues a license to a church or religious body for a radio station, can that be construed to mean that Congress thereby is making a law respecting an establishment of religion?

The act of issuing a permit to construct and operate a radio station is a mere license. To extend this erroneous application of the FCC examiner to other regulatory bodies would apparently mean that no church could get a building permit from any city or State to construct a church. It would mean that no religious group could get an automobile license to operate a motor vehicle.

Extending the equal protection of the laws to a religious group by issuing to them a license upon the same terms as it would be issued to any other applicant, can by no means be construed as establishment of religion. Further evidence of what our founding fathers meant by establishment of religion can be found by consulting the Annals of Congress.

It is interesting to note therein that Representative Huntington of Connecticut feared that the words of the amendment might be taken in such latitude as to be extremely hurtful to the cause of religion. That "others might find it convenient to put another construction upon it." To assure Huntington that such was not the intent of the amendment, James Madison suggested that the word "national" be inserted before religion—volume 1, Annals of Congress, pages 730, 731.

Certainly, it is unfortunate that our founding fathers did not add the word "national." They saw no necessity to add it for they could not believe, as Huntington feared, that someone like the present FCC examiner would make such a distorted interpretation of this amendment.

Remember, the license was not denied in this instance because the examiner thought that the public would not be interested in hearing the programs to be put on by the Mormons. The proposed station planned its program to be divided as follows:

	Percent
Entertainment	62.8
Religious	13.9
Agricultural	3.6
Educational	3.7
Discussions	1.2
Talks	10.0

The Commissioner found that these programs would be in the public interest. Some of you might conclude that this station would be even more in the public interest than most since it was to be operated on a nonprofit basis, without the constant clamor of singing commercials. But in any event the listener should still be the final determinant. If he does not like the program, he can still swing the dial.

Strangely enough, to support his position, the FCC examiner quoted the Supreme Court in the Everson case, as stating that James Madison eloquently argued that a true religion did not need the support of law.

The long litany of martyrs throughout history bears witness to the truth of James Madison's statement. But does that justify the persecutions? Certainly Madison in making this statement was not trying to justify the state in obstructing the practice of religion.

In the present instance the Mormons are not asking for the support of law. They are merely asking that they should be treated equally in the law; that they should not be discriminated against and obstructed in the free exercise of their religion; and most particularly here, that our Government itself does not violate the first amendment by prohibiting their free exercise of religion.

I make no brief here for the Court's arguments in the Everson case—Everson v. Board of Education (330 U. S. 1 (1946)). The Court in that case did not take a very sympathetic view toward religion. But even so in that case the Court said that the first amendment requires the state to be neutral in its relations with groups of religious believers and nonbelievers; it does not require the state to be their adversary. State power is no more to be used so as to handicap religions than it is to favor them.

How in the light of the above decision, which the hearing examiner contends supports his position, can it be concluded that this decision not to grant a radio license to the FCC does not handicap religion? This whole dispute can be brought down to one simple requirement of justice, fair play.

In connection herewith I wish to include an excellent article by Edward J. Heffron, director of community relations for the firm of Johnson & Johnson, which appeared in America, a leading Catholic periodical, on February 3, 1951:

THREAT TO RELIGIOUS BROADCASTING

(By Edward J. Heffron)

The fat—of "separation of church and state," I mean—is in the fire again. This time it is not religious education, however, but religious broadcasting that faces a roasting in the oven of the first amendment. Let me spell out what has been happening.

On February 6, 1947, a group that is known as the Kansas City Broadcasting Co., headed by the Reverend Wendell Zimmerman, pastor of the Kansas City Baptist Temple, filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission for a license to operate a standard radio station in Kansas City, Mo. On March 3, 1949, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints applied for a license to operate a station on the same frequency, only 7½ miles away, in Independence, Mo. Since the applications were conflicting, they were consolidated for purposes of consideration by FCC.

By the Communications Act of 1934 Congress reserved the control of all radio and television channels to the Federal Government. This act provided for the creation of the Federal Communications Commission to exercise such control. It specified that the Commission might grant or renew broadcasting licenses only for limited periods of time—now 3 years—and only to those who undertake to serve "the public interest, convenience, or necessity."

An applicant for a broadcasting license is entitled to a hearing. He is usually heard by an FCC hearing examiner, who then hands an initial decision up to the Commission. This the Commission may reject, remand, or affirm; except that if nothing is done about it—if the Commission does not take contrary action and if no objection is entered—the initial decision becomes the final and official decision of FCC 40 days from the time of public notice.

An initial decision was first handed up in this consolidated case on December 9, 1949. Hearing Examiner J. D. Bond ruled against the Kansas City Broadcasting Co.—originally a partnership, later incorporated—on the ground that the officers and directors were not possessed of an understanding of business and accounting practices sufficient to enable them to operate a radio station in the public interest.

This left the application of the reorganized Mormons to be disposed of. To understand Mr. Bond's startling conclusions in their respect, we need to know one or two facts about a third case then pending (and still unresolved) before FCC.

On February 23, 1949, the radio commission of the Southern Baptist convention and the executive board of the Baptist general convention of Texas filed a petition with FCC. This petition asked FCC to amend its rules, which reserved a certain band of FM frequencies for educational stations, in order to permit religious organizations to share that reservation; or else to reserve an additional band for religious organizations. On October 21, 1949, FCC set this petition down for hearing on two specified issues. One of these was "Whether the Commission may, consistently with the provisions of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, establish a specific category of religious broadcast stations." Shades of Vashti McCollum.

It was pointed out at the time that if the first amendment were held a bar to reserving a band of frequencies to religious licensees, it must by the same logic be a bar to reservation of a single frequency to a religious licensee; and that if it were considered a breach of separation of church and state to permit full-time religious broadcasting on Government-controlled radio frequencies, it could be held that part-time religious broadcasting was likewise unconstitutional. In other words, if FCC held contra on the aforementioned issue stipulated in the Southern Baptist case, all religious radio stations, and indeed all religious broadcasts, would be in danger of being held unconstitutional.

The Commission had not yet decided this issue when J. D. Bond handed up his initial decision re the reorganized Mormons on December 9, 1949. Mr. Bond held that "the application of the reorganized church * * * is wholly in compliance with the Commission's rules and standards of good engineering practice. * * * This applicant * * * possesses the legal qualifications requisite to the assumption and performance of the duties of a broadcast station licensee * * * the applicant is financially qualified * * * its proposed programs * * * would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity."

But, said Mr. Bond: "It is suggested * * * that a favorable consideration of the application * * * would result in a grant of these facilities to an organized minority religious group in aid of their church objectives. * * * We are thus confronted with a serious obstacle to favorable action upon the independence proposal * * * because of that provision of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States which directs that, 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.'"

Referring then to the pending issue in the Southern Baptist case, Mr. Bond declared:

"We, therefore, conclude that, although the proposal of the Reorganized Church is in all other respects acceptable, its application must be denied at this time because of the presently undetermined applicability of the first amendment to licensing radio stations for religious purposes."

On December 30, 1949, the Southern Baptists amended their petition. Instead of asking for a reservation for "religious organizations" it now sought the reservation for "all recognized nonprofit organizations, including charitable, civic, fraternal, and other such organizations in addition to religious groups." This seemed to take the Commission off the hook as far as the constitutional issue was concerned.

As a consequence of this amendment of the Southern Baptist petition, FCC remanded the Reorganized Mormon case to Hearing Examiner Bond, instructing him to write another initial decision. The Commission stipulated certain issues—whether the Reorganized Mormons were citizens within the meaning of the Communications Act, whether their program undertakings promised to subserve the public interest, etc.—but nothing about the constitutionality of their request.

Bond entertained some amended pleadings, heard some additional testimony, and finally handed up a new initial decision on December 21, 1950. As indicated, the Commission stipulated no issue of constitutionality. Bond nevertheless managed to find that question implied in the issue of the "public interest, convenience, or necessity."

After making a finding adverse to the Reorganized Church on the question of whether all the officers and directors of the applicant association were citizens as required by law, Bond went on to the issue of "whether the program proposals of the Reorganized Church * * * would be in the public interest." After analyzing the concept of "public interest" as it had always been understood by the FCC, he decided that the application of the Reorganized Church satisfied the requirement.

This would seem to have disposed of the question. But not for Mr. Bond. No, sir. Since the Supreme Court erected the wall of separation between church and state in the Everson and McCollum decisions, Mr. Bond was determined to see that it was not breached. "One of the applicant's purposes," he wrote, "is to exercise its rights under that license to foster its religious interests. * * * There may be present correlation in all respects between those interests and the public interest, but we cannot decree that this applicant shall be empowered by license to construct and operate the proposed station under its stated concepts."

True, as he said, this stated concept merely includes the purpose of fostering the church's religious interests. But even if [that purpose] be even a small portion of the entire purpose, he declared, the license must not be issued. Bond was telling FCC not merely that it ought not grant the license, but that it could not. He even undertook to tell the Congress that it could not authorize FCC to grant such a license.

Bond supported this thesis with three arguments, based on the premise of the Everson decision that the founding fathers sought a government which was stripped of all power to tax to support, or otherwise to assist any or all religions, or to interfere with the beliefs of any individual or group.

1. His first argument was merely implied, i. e., that for a Government agency like FCC to grant a radio license to a religious group for religious purposes, even though such purpose be secondary and inconsequential, would be to put the Government in the position of supporting or otherwise assisting any or all religions.

2. His second argument was more ingenious. When FCC grants a license, it is under obligation to regulate its use in the public interest, convenience, or necessity. But for FCC to regulate operation of a station owned by a religious group would be, in the words just quoted from the Emerson case, to interfere with the beliefs of [an] individual or group.

3. Bond derived his third argument from an excerpt he quotes from the McCollum case. He argued:

"We may not so commingle the religious interest of the Reorganized Church with the public interest as to find harmony and thereupon ignore the first amendment. Else we might * * * find discord in the dual concepts and precipitate the church-state imbroglio which the Constitution was designed to avert."

A religious station becomes unthinkable because antireligious groups might not like what it proposes to broadcast and start an imbroglio.

These three arguments, I submit, bear with equal force against all stations operated by religious groups. Bond would presumably qualify this by saying provided only that they broadcast religious programs. But such a qualification is obviously meaningless. A religious group wouldn't have a radio station if it didn't mean to use it, in some slight measure at least, for religious broadcasting. The last time I checked there were 33 such stations, counting AM and FM operations separately, 8 of them operated by Catholic educational institutions.

But the mischief of this initial decision goes even deeper than that. In my judgment it affects religious programs on commercial stations as adversely as it affects religious stations. If this decision becomes final it will, in my opinion, outlaw all such broadcasts. That seems to be a large order, too exorbitant to be credible. But let us see.

The Federal Government would be giving unlawful assistance to the Reorganized Mormons, Bond says, if it enabled them to broadcast Mormon doctrine by granting them a radio license. But FCC is just as truly assisting the National Council of Catholic Men in enabling them to broadcast Catholic doctrine by granting the National Broadcasting Co. its several licenses and permitting NBC to give radio time to NCCM for the Catholic Hour. Let it be remembered that FCC does not cease to be responsible for the use made of every minute of broadcasting time simply because it delegates that time to NBC in chunks of 18 hours a day.

According to Bond, if FCC granted a license to the Reorganized Mormons to broadcast religious programs, its obligation to regulate in the public interest, convenience or necessity would compel it to interfere unconstitutionally in the affairs of this religious body. But FCC's regulatory duty follows all radio time into whatsoever hands it may be delegated or subdelegated. If FCC permits NBC to delegate a half-hour a week to NCCM, FCC still has the statutory duty to regulate use of that time, meaning that it must regulate NCCM's use of the time. The latter is just as truly interference with a religious group as the former.

The applicability of Bond's third argument to religious programs on commercial stations is even clearer. If it is constitutionally incumbent upon FCC to avoid religious imbroglios by keeping Morman programs off Mormon stations in Independence for fear antireligious groups may kick up a fuss, it would seem to be at least equally incumbent upon it to keep Catholic programs off Nation-wide networks for the same reason.

Is it unthinkable that this initial decision should become final? I'm not so sure, certainly not any more sure than I would have been, prior to July 1946, that the opinion handed down in the Robert Harold Scott case was unthinkable; or than I would have been, prior to March 1948, that the McCollum decision was unthinkable. All I know is what is undeniably the fact at this writing, that is, that J. D. Bond's initial decision in the case of the Reorganized Church, et al., will automatically become final and effective 40 days after its release date, December 29, 1950, or on February 6, 1951, unless some objection is filed or FCC takes it up on its own motion. Very likely the Reorganized Mormons will object. But they objected a year ago, and now they get exactly the same dose, only more elaborately spelled out. They should not be left to carry the ball alone. And besides, were they now to give up in disgust and allow the initial decision to become effective by default, who could blame them?

THE LATE ALFRED S. BUDGE

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include two editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, about a week ago there passed away one of the grand old men of Idaho. I might say he was the father of our colleague, Mr. HAMER BUDGE. Alfred S. Budge was 83 years old at the time of his death. He was a grand old man, a grand old-timer. He was justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho for a great many years. He had a numerous family and one of the best families in Idaho.

I wish to express my appreciation of the fact that we might have such a life in Idaho, and, if I may, also to tender the sympathy of this House to my colleague, HAMER BUDGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on Monday next, following the regular business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered.

ESCAPE CLAUSE IN RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, on January 30, I introduced H. R. 2194 which, if enacted, will be known as the Trade Agreements Regulation Act of 1951.

I shall endeavor to have the principles of this bill amended into H. R. 1612, which will be before the House this week. I can see no reason why the Tariff Commission should not establish the point below which a tariff should be reduced, and that the Congress should be notified if such reduction will be fatal to an American industry.

Too many of our industries have been ruined and employees thrown out of work because of ill-considered tariff reductions. An escape clause should by law be a part of all trade agreements. But for the war in Korea, and preparation for war, millions of our American people would be idle today. We should not permit our leadership to get us into a position from which only a war can extricate us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

PRODUCTION OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include a press release from the National Petroleum Counsel and the text of a House resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, the unanimous action of the National Petroleum Council on January 29, upon the request of the Department of Interior to take action toward meeting the requirement of an additional 1,000,000 barrels daily of petroleum products, was correctly characterized by Mr. Walter S. Hallanan, chairman of the council, as one of the most important assignments that the National Petroleum Council has been called upon to undertake.

The current estimate of a requirement for an additional 1,000,000 barrels daily is most significant. It should be considered in terms of the estimate made by the council on January 26, 1950, as reported in the progress report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce May 15, 1950—House Report No. 2055—at page 5, as follows:

The National Petroleum Council estimates that taking into account all factors, including drilling activities in 1948 and 1949, a reasonable figure for the availability of all petroleum liquids is 6,300,000 barrels daily for the year 1949 and 6,450,000 barrels daily for December 1949.

Domestic demand for all petroleum liquids in 1949 of 5,789,000 barrels daily, accordingly, was some 510,000 barrels less than the average available producing capacity.

The council concludes that at the end of 1949 there existed a substantial reserve crude oil productive capacity of some 700,000 barrels daily, and that productive capacity of some 1,000,000 barrels daily probably will prevail in the period 1950–53 in the absence of any new developments tending to upset the present outlook for supply and demand.

This action also points up the imperative necessity of the immediate continuation of the comprehensive survey of this country's petroleum resources undertaken by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the Eighty-first Congress under its authority and responsibility through the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. That authority could well be supplemented by prompt enactment of House Resolution 107, which I introduced on January 30 and which is now pending in the Committee on Rules.

The many related problems as to the availability of steel, the forecast as to the possibility and the terms of rationing, and as to the question of use of alternative fuels, as well as the present status of the development of synthetic fuels are matters of grave importance not only in terms of national defense, including our productive capacity, but in terms of the economy of the country and the health, welfare, and safety of the American people. I urge that we insure that our responsibilities shall be met by taking immediate action.

Mr. Speaker, the following is the text of a release of yesterday from the National Petroleum Council covering this development:

Preliminary steps toward meeting a military and civilian need for an additional 1,000,000 barrels daily of petroleum products were taken today when Walter S. Hallanan, chairman of the National Petroleum Council, announced the appointment of a committee on capital and materials requirements for increasing availability of petroleum products.

The action was taken after the Department of the Interior informed the National Petroleum Council that preliminary studies indicated that in the event of war there would be a sharp increase in the demand for petroleum products to meet military and essential requirements which would require large quantities of capital and materials.

Hallanan said: "This assignment bears a close and immediate relationship to the problems of national defense. Certainly this is one of the most important assignments that the National Petroleum Council has been called upon to undertake." He added that: "The council at its meeting in Washington, D. C., January 29, unanimously approved the Government's request. I have today appointed Dr. Robert E. Wilson, chairman of the board of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), Chicago, Ill., as chairman of the committee."

Other members of the committee as appointed today are: H. T. Ashton, Western Petroleum Refiners Association, St. Louis; Howard A. Cowden, Consumers Cooperative Association, Kansas City, Mo.; Fayette B. Dow, National Petroleum Association, Washington; J. Frank Drake, Gulf Oil Corp., Pittsburgh; R. G. Follis, Standard Oil Co. of California, San Francisco; Jake L. Hamon, Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association, Dallas; B. A. Hardey, Shreveport, La.; Eugene Holman, Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), New York; A. Jacobsen, Amerada Petroleum Corp., New York; B. Brewster Jennings, Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc., New York; J. Paul Jones, National Stripper Well Association, Bradford, Pa.; W. Alton Jones, Cities Service Co., New York; A. C. Mattei, Honolulu Oil Corp., San Francisco; L. F. McCollum, Continental Oil Co., Houston; Joseph E. Pogue, Chase National Bank, New York; Frank M. Porter, American Petroleum Institute, New York; M. H. Robineau, the Frontier Refining Co., Denver; W. S. S. Rodgers, the Texas Co., New York; Roland V. Rodman, Anderson-Prichard Oil Corp., Oklahoma City; P. C. Spencer, Sinclair Oil Corp., New York; J. Ed Warren, Independent Petroleum Association of America, Midland, Tex.; W. K. Warren, Warren Petroleum Corp., Tulsa; and L. S. Wescoat, the Pure Oil Co., Chicago.

Whereas, in order to achieve and maintain supplies of petroleum and other fuels available in quantities adequate for an expanding economy and for the security of the United States, and for the duration of the current mobilization period, it is necessary to formulate sound national policies: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to formulate and recommend a national fuel policy adequate to meet the needs of the United States in times of peace and war, and for the duration of the current mobilization period, including recommendations for a national petroleum policy and the integration of such policy with policies relating to other fuels and energy resources except atomic energy; and for such purposes the committee shall study the current and future fuel supply and demand of the United States and shall study methods of encouraging needed developments to assure the availability of fuels adequate for an expanding economy and the security of the United States.

SEC. 2. The committee shall make a report not later than the close of the present Congress. Such report may be made to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, the committee or any subcommittee thereof—

(1) is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether or not the House is in session, has adjourned, or has recessed, to hold such hearings, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary; and subpenas shall be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or by any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member;

(2) may utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the various departments and agencies of the Government to the extent that such services, information, facilities, and personnel, in the opinion of such departments and agencies, can be furnished without undue interference with the performance of the work and duties of such departments and agencies; and

(3) may seek information from such sources and conduct its studies and investigations in such manner as it deems advisable in the interest of a full and correct ascertainment of the facts.

THE EFFECT OF CONTROLS ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the Truman administration, despite its frequent protestations of love and affection for the small-business man, is proving once again that it cares nothing at all for the fate of the little fellow who has put everything he has—time, energy, and savings—into a small-business enterprise.

Orders now being issued by the National Production Authority controlling the end use of aluminum and other so-called critical materials will force many small-business concerns into bankruptcy and leave their thousands of employees without jobs. To the business which has invested in it everything the owner has saved, plus everything he can borrow for equipment and machinery which can produce only consumer goods, and which cannot be used for war production, these orders are a death sentence.

The control-happy bureaucrats who are issuing these ruthless orders are doing so without having before them anything resembling a program. One of these officials, appearing recently before the Senate Small Business Committee, did not know, for example, how much bauxite—the basic raw material from which aluminum is produced—is available; what our aluminum-production capacity is; how much is now on hand; how much will be needed for the defense effort now, on April 1, or 6 months from now, or at any time. He did not know how much will be required to maintain some semblance of a civilian economy. In short, he is issuing orders which will inevitably cause serious financial dislocation and large-scale unemployment, without even knowing whether there is any necessity for so doing. He appears to be acting more from fright than from necessity.

Large corporations and big businesses, with their unlimited capital and great flexibility, are not hurt by such orders. They have the experienced staff and contacts that enable them to get war contracts, while the little fellow is faced with an insurmountable mass of red tape and administrative indifference. The big boys can buy or lease new equipment and convert their plants, while the little fellow has neither the money nor the priorities to do this.

Military procurement officials would rather deal with a few big corporations than to go to the trouble of working with a lot of small producers—this despite the urgent military need to disperse our war production so that it will be less vulnerable to air attack.

Mr. Speaker, all of this proves once more that the Truman administration's oft-repeated concern for what it calls the little fellow is synthetic. Its actions continually tend to make big business bigger and to squeeze the little fellow out.

THE RAILROAD DISPUTE MUST BE SETTLED WITH EQUITY AND DISPATCH IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST—DYNAMIC LEADERSHIP WOULD BRING ABOUT HARMONY AND UNDERSTANDING—AMERICAN WORKERS ARE ENTITLED TO CONSIDERATION OF THEIR JUST GRIEVANCES

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief for any strikes in our transportation lines when men are dying in Korea, but I do remember that one of the things for which they are dying is fairness and justice.

The Government took over the railroads some 4 months ago, many months after the men in certain branches of the work had asked for a readjustment of their wages and their hours. Nothing has been accomplished during these months of Government control. Small wonder that an end came to their endurance.

Life has taught me that there are always two sides to every question. Certainly at this point it would seem as if Government should give an accounting of its inaction, which in itself is one of the main causes for the action of the railroad workers.

They are men who are just as good Americans as you and I, who have been brought near the end of their endurance after many months of inaction on the part of Government.

As far as I can see, they are asking no more than has been granted many railroad workers, and most of industry otherwise. It is a sad commentary on our understanding that we must let things drift to the point where good Americans are put in the position of defying Federal court orders over questions that should have been resolved months and months ago.

When the Federal Government took over, the men felt there might be a settlement of the problem. But thousands are still working at wages established more than 2 years ago. Many work from 56 to 60 hours a week, with no adequate basis for overtime. Only a very few have been put on a real 40-hour week, with overtime pay for 48 hours or more.

Surely, if there is to be any fairness in the wage-price structure the yardmen, the switchmen, the men who work out of doors in all kinds of weather, who protect us from accident and keep trains moving safely—certainly they who are skilled workers in their field, who have waited far more patiently than skilled workers in industry at large have done—are entitled to consideration.

This is in no way intended to condone their defiance of the Federal Government and of their own unions. But it should make us all wonder as to the methods of a government that can let so vital an issue drag on month after month, its only tactic that of procrastination over a problem which affects the very heart of our productive capacity.

Under the unanimous consent granted me I shall include an editorial from last night's Washington Daily News, They Are Wrong. It expresses the very general feeling that railroad strikes at this time simply must not be.

In addition, however, the editorial gives something of the picture of the conditions that have continued to exist under the nominal Government takeover of the railroads—conditions that have finally brought the men to the end of their endurance.

Are these men the only ones who are wrong, Mr. Speaker, or do we not share that wrong?

Do we not all have a definite responsibility when we permit situations such as exist today in our railroads to continue? Certainly no settlement can be made without all of us recognizing the obligation that is ours as Americans to create an atmosphere in which unity of purpose will bring understanding.

Many of you had opportunity yesterday, as I did, to talk with some of these railroad workers who have come to plead their case. They are loyal Americans—coming to us who represent them in the Congress to plead for understanding and for a fair adjustment of wages and working hours. These men have waited 23 months. They are discouraged and deeply troubled, knowing full well that to continue such a strike will injure many, including themselves.

I am convinced that these men would go back to work instantly if they felt we would act in their behalf. They do not want special privileges, but they do want adjustments comparable to those the men in other industries have had, comparable even to those already granted some of the branches of the railroad industry.

Perhaps there is a 44-hour week in theory, as the News editorial says, but these men are working—some 56 hours, some 60 hours a week. What family life can they have? What can they know of their children? One man, now on a real 40-hour schedule, who spoke of being "in luck," said to me yesterday, "Until 2 years ago I was practically a stranger to my two children."

I have said before that I am not condoning this strike, but a middle way can be found if one tries to find it. These men came to us as a last resort to ask that we find some way to that middle road, where there may be an equitable solution.

I know, as every man and woman in America must begin to realize, that we as a Nation must prove our right to the freedom and the way of life about which we talk so much and do too little. This is a struggle for survival—no less—and no country whose people are divided will survive.

And we need do so little, Mr. Speaker. Is it so impossible for us to sit down together? Can we not talk together about our common problems? Can we not at least attempt to understand each other?

I have talked with these men who drove all night from Cleveland to lay before us as a last hope their plea for understanding, and no one can tell me that this strike cannot be settled.

There is no problem in all of life that has but one side, Mr. Speaker; and if my life has taught me anything, it is that my side is not always right.

Dynamic leadership must be found to settle this dispute in the national interest and in justice to our railroad workers.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Daily News of February 1, 1951]

THEY ARE WRONG

Again, as in mid-December, unauthorized strikes by railroad yardmen in Washington and other key centers threaten the Nation with a disastrous tie-up of rail traffic.

This newspaper repeats what it has said before—that the strikers are good Americans who feel they have a great grievance.

But, no matter how great their grievance, they are gravely injuring their own cause as well as their country.

They are affronting public opinion when they greatly need its sympathetic understanding.

They are striking against their Government, for the roads are under Federal seizure and Army operating control.

They are defying the President of the United States, who termed their December strikes unlawful and called on them to return to work.

They are violating a Federal court restraining order, issued at Chicago last month, and risking severe punishment of their unions.

They are disobeying their union leaders, who have disowned the strikes and instructed the strikers to get back on their jobs.

At the time of the December strikes, the Scripps-Howard newspapers advised the yardmen to return to work and promised, if they did so, to help them put their case before the court of public opinion.

Last week we kept that promise by publishing an article written by W. P. Kennedy, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. Mr. Kennedy made some impressive points.

The yardmen and switchmen got their last wage increase in October 1948. Since then most workers in other industries have had repeated raises. Many organized workers, including a million nonoperating railroad employees, have the 40-hour week with premium pay for overtime. Yardmen and switchmen do not, and their current wage rates are much lower than those of other skilled workers in many industries.

Their present wage controversy with the railroads began almost 23 months ago. Last June their unions rejected—as they had a legal right to do—the recommendations of a Railway Labor Act fact-finding board appointed by President Truman. On August 27, Mr. Truman ordered Government seizure of the roads to head off a threatened strike for better terms.

After the unauthorized strikes in December, union officers and management representatives were called to the White House for new negotiations. They signed, finally, what the public certainly understood to be a firm agreement for settlement of the long controversy.

Under it, the yardmen were to get a raise of 25 cents an hour, bringing their average hourly wage to about $1.83. An escalator clause guaranteed further increases if the cost of living kept rising. The 40-hour week was accepted in principle, though its actual application was to be deferred until the manpower situation improved. The four unions involved were to observe a 3-year, no-strike moratorium on new-wage-and-working-rules demands.

Mr. Kennedy and other union negotiators now contend that the agreement was merely tentative. Governing bodies of their unions have rejected it. And the yardmen, still on wage rates fixed more than 2 years ago, are trying to paralyze the railroads with their country at war and in danger of greater war.

Their impatience is understandable, but their strikes are wrong.

Public opinion might support them in an effort to obtain further concessions through renewed negotiations. It will be dead against them unless they stop these strikes without delay.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on next Friday, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

GENERAL EISENHOWER'S REPORT

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege this morning as a member of the House Committee on the Armed Services to listen to Gen. Dwight Eisenhower give a detailed explanation of his findings based on his recent tour of Europe.

Without doubt, General Eisenhower's observations were the most complete and factual report that has ever been presented to the House Committee on the Armed Services since I became a member of that committee following my return from World War II.

I am convinced after hearing General Eisenhower that the rearming of Europe is essential to world peace, and that while it presents a risk that America must assume there is no other solution than to accept the task.

With the information that General Eisenhower has given us we have a clear picture of the risk, and I feel after hearing him that as a Member of Congress I am better qualified to legislate in the best interest of the American people.

Now that we have the authoritative review of conditions in Europe and understand the risk that lies ahead I urge President Truman to order Gen. Douglas MacArthur to return immediately and submit a similar report on Asia. In the opinion of millions of people General MacArthur knows Asia as General Eisenhower knows Europe, and his views are vital at this moment so that Congress and the American people may have a complete picture of what we are faced with in Asia and Europe.

The problem confronting us today from a world standpoint is not clearly understood by the American people and by many Members of Congress. We have heard from General Eisenhower now let us hear from General MacArthur.

GENERAL EISENHOWER'S REPORT

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]. He said the Armed Services Committee has a comprehensive statement by General Eisenhower. Certainly we who went to the Library of Congress yesterday got no comprehensive statement from Eisenhower.

I hope that the Armed Services Committee at the earliest opportunity will advise the Members of the House, and all of them, what is contained in that comprehensive statement. I for one was very disappointed and very disillusioned by Eisenhower's performance yesterday.

STRIKES

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] and I am sorry she went out, with reference to this wage-hour controversy between the union men and the railroads, one thing is sure, and there is no doubt about it, and that is this Nation cannot carry on a war if the transportation workers or the coal miners or any other group or organization whose members are engaged in activities essential to that work are to be permitted to strike every time they feel like it. I know nothing about the merits of this dispute. I do know it was once, I think twice submitted to a board appointed by the President. If we are to draft 18-year-old boys, if we are to draft married men with children, or men who have once served, I say it is time that strikes stop.

There is a way to stop them. The unions exist today, and they have the power they exercise because and only because of special privileges given them by the Congress of the United States. If they will not play fair, if they will not be good, if they will not use decently the powers we have given them, let us take these powers away from them. When men can be conscripted to be shot, they can also be conscripted to work.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three separate instances, in each to include newspaper articles.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana (at the request of Mr. PHILLIPS) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MEADER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

RENEGOTIATION

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, January 23, the House of Representatives passed H. R. 1724, the renegotiation bill. During the debate, under the 5-minute rule, I offered an amendment to strike from the bill the authority for the Renegotiation Board to grant permissive exemptions from renegotiation, and supported my amendment by a brief discussion.

Because this bill may again come before the House after conference, in case the Senate version of the bill differs from the House version, I believe the RECORD should contain a more complete and a stronger presentation of the facts and considerations bearing upon the wisdom of the amendment I offered.

I also believe that I owe a duty to the Members of this House, upon whom I urged a certain course of action, to amplify the facts and reasons bearing upon the question. This may serve to dispel any impression that the amendment, which I offered for the first time on the floor of the House, was proposed lightly or in a casual fashion.

My failure to make this more complete presentation at the time the bill was before the House results, primarily, from the rapidity with which this far-reaching proposal was brought before the Members of the House for their consideration and vote. Until the morning of the Saturday preceding the Tuesday on which this bill was passed, I had no knowledge that this measure was to be considered by the House. This provided me with only one business day in which to study the bill, and to make preparation for any position I might take with respect to it.

Furthermore, although I requested a copy of the hearings from the committee, none was available. It was only after the bill had been passed that I was able to persuade the committee staff to loan me a committee copy of the hearings, so that I might familiarize myself with the evidence on which the committee had acted.

In passing, I want to register a vigorous complaint against this blitzkrieg procedure. I realize that every one of us in the House of Representatives must assume responsibility for the national policies which emerge from this body. I am no magician, and I don't think any of the rest of you are. I do not believe we can adopt wise policies on hunches, emotions, or headlines. We must have the facts, and we must be aware of the arguments and reasons for and against proposals on which we are obliged to take a position.

One day's study, without the record of the committee available, was not enough time for me to explore this important subject to my satisfaction, particularly when my time also was required for study of two other important measures passed by the House that same week—the Armed Services insurance bill and the reorganization of the Air Forces—and, in part, for the problems of my constituents and of the committee of which I am a member.

I do not want to dwell on this complaint at this time, but it seems to me that the Congress could do much better in informing itself of the facts and considerations without which wise policies can be decided only as a matter of accident. This is particularly necessary if the Congress is to strengthen itself and if it is to recall the legislative power it has permitted itself to lose to the executive branch of the Government in the past two or three decades.

I have some views on this subject, which I will want to present at greater length to the House at a later date. For the moment, I only want to call attention to this situation to explain why the remarks I am making today were not made a week ago Tuesday when the bill was before the House.

I have embodied a more complete statement of the reasons why the power to make discretionary exemptions should not be vested in the Renegotiation Board, created by H. R. 1724, in a letter addressed to Senator WALTER F. GEORGE, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. I have sent a copy of this letter to each of the members of that committee. I will present those reasons to the House by reading from that letter.

However, before doing so, I think it is in order to explain that in this particular instance my study of the question was not limited to the brief time which has elapsed since I had notice that this bill was to be considered by the House. It was my good fortune to have had some intimate contact with renegotiation problems through my service as counsel for the United States Senate War Investigating Committee. I have drawn upon that experience, upon the testimony of experts in the renegotiation field, and upon the documentary evidence received by the Senate War Investigating Committee on that subject, as well as on unrecorded conferences with renegotiation officials and with war contractors subject to renegotiation.

It is because of that experience, and the views which evolved therefrom, that I feel confident that my recommendation that permissive exemptions be stricken from the bill is clearly in the public interest. Since the passage of the bill, I have reviewed the reports and the hearings of the Senate War Investigating Committee and the record of the House Ways and Means Committee on which this bill is based.

I have also conferred further with a former renegotiation official, in whose judgment I have confidence, with the result that my conviction of the soundness of the proposition I urged has been fortified. This review also has persuaded me that this evidence should be placed before the Members of the House and should appear in the RECORD.

I will not read the letter I have written to Senator GEORGE:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1951.

Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE,
Chairman, Senate Finance Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GEORGE: I call your attention to a provision in H. R. 1724, renegotiation of war contracts, which passed the House on January 23, 1951, by a unanimous vote. I refer to section 106, subsection C, which vests in the Renegotiation Board authority to grant certain permissive exemptions, in addition to the statutory and mandatory exemptions from renegotiation.

I called the attention of the House to this authority to grant permissive exemption by offering an amendment to strike it, which amendment was defeated. The discussion on the floor of the House on this point was quite brief and appears on pages 631-632 of the RECORD for Tuesday, January 23, 1951. If I had had a little longer notice that this legislation was coming up in the House, I believe I could have made a more effective presentation and, perhaps, might have persuaded the committee to accept my amendment. I was informed by the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and by a member of the staff, that this particular matter had not received any specific consideration by the Ways and Means Committee. I have subsequently reviewed the hearings of the committee and find that there was no testimony on this point justifying its inclusion in the bill.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

I am attaching for your information a copy of the report on renegotiation filed with the Senate by the Senate War Investigating Committee on February 20, 1948. This report appears as an appendix to the final report of the Senate War Investigating Committee, and I have marked passages on page 229 and 234 of that report, which show that both the War Department renegotiation officials and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that all of the discretionary exemptions from renegotiation, and most of the mandatory exemptions, should be eliminated in any future renegotiation law.

You may recall that Brig. Gen. Maurice Hirsch, Chairman of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board, became—during World War II—probably the outstanding authority on renegotiation. I believe that I can say that he was very highly regarded by those Members of the Congress who were familiar with his work and, particularly, by the members of the Senate War Investigating Committee. On Friday, January 31, 1947, General Hirsch testified before the committee on the renegotiation law, and his testimony appears, beginning on page 23255 of part 39 of the hearings of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program of the United States Senate. General Hirsch was most emphatic in opposing the discretionary exemptions. I would like to quote two passages from his testimony:

"Senator FERGUSON. Now, this may have been one of the cases, which I think we ought to cover here this morning if possible, of the exemptions, where the Government made a contract where they did not renegotiate. Was there any standard set up as to why they made contracts not requiring renegotiation?

"General HIRSCH. The Senator has put his finger right upon one thing, which, based on the question of the chairman, I should like to make response to. Those of us in renegotiation do not believe that there should be in the law the privilege of granting any such exemptions.

"Senator FERGUSON. But there was.

"General HIRSCH. That was entirely apart from our operations.

"Senator FERGUSON. But after the law provided for those exemptions, were there standards established so that they would only be granted in cases anticipated under the law?

"General HIRSCH. I am sure, sir, that the procurement authorities in those cases felt that they were operating correctly, but I cannot answer for them because you see we did not grant those specific contract exemptions.

"The CHAIRMAN. Now, as I understand, you are firmly of the opinion, and those associated with you in renegotiation, that any such discretionary powers——

"General HIRSCH. In procurement, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. That it is not wise.

"General HIRSCH. That is our opinion, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is based on your observation and experience of the last 4 years?

On page 23270, General Hirsch further testifies:

"The CHAIRMAN. We will appreciate whatever report you may want to furnish, and then we will want to ask you in later. I think the benefit of your recommendations on the over-all picture in the event of another emergency is what this committee wants to direct its attention primarily to, and you may want to take a month or two in order to think that over.

"General HIRSCH. I have been thinking it over, and the one real recommendation that I would like to make is the elimination of exemptions. That is the one recommendation that I would make.

"Senator FERGUSON. That is any exemptions?

"General HIRSCH. Yes; because there ought to be enough incentive with the kind of profit that the ones in renegotiation would accord, that ought to be enough incentive for a contractor to do his work well.

"The CHAIRMAN. You mean over the $100,000?

"General HIRSCH. Yes, because under that it is too small.

"Senator FERGUSON. What is the highest profit to your knowledge, of anyone who was exempt? I do not mean by the statute, but under renegotiation.

"General HIRSCH. I do not recall, sir, but the thing that impresses me about it is—

"Mr. MEADER. We have heard that profits might be as high as 40 percent.

"General HIRSCH. I do not know of any such. But a 15-percent profit might be outrageous if it is with reference to $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of business, where the difference between what might be accorded—now talking percentagewise—of 7 or 8 or 9 percent and the 15 percent amounts up to a lot of dollars.

"Mr. MEADER. Your organization has records of those exempted contractors, I believe, does it not, which can be furnished to the committee?

"General HIRSCH. Well, the departments have. I do not believe that we have. Of course, if that is a segment of the business of a contractor, then it would be reflected in our report, but that is something that we had to look at just as if it was civilian business, and frankly it has distorted a great deal of the picture in those instances where a substantial segment of the contractor's work was excluded by exemption.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you feel that renegotiation provisions probably would be an essential part of any future emergency, that there is no other way of meeting this particular problem?

"General HIRSCH. I have carefully scrutinized so many of the things that have been presented, particularly in the earlier days, and I am convinced that it is the best of the methods that have been suggested."

I would also like to call your attention to hearings of the Senate War Investigating Committee, held in October 1947. Mr. John R. Paull, Chairman of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board (successor to General Hirsch), likewise opposed authority in the act to grant permissive exemptions from renegotiation. See part 42, Hearings, Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, page 25499.

Unfortunately, although the committee sought repeatedly to do so, specific instances of excessive profits on exempted contracts were never obtained from the military services. That information would be extremely pertinent to the present consideration of the provision in the bill before your committee.

It seems to have been generally recognized that renegotiation officials in World War II were of exceptionally high caliber. We cannot be certain that we shall be as fortunate in the membership of the Board created by the new bill. Should this extremely broad power be vested in a weak Board, the consequences might be disastrous. In this connection it should be noted that the power to delegate and redelegate such authority remains in the bill, as drafted.

As far as I know, only two arguments have been advanced in favor of authorizing permissive exemptions. Neither of them appear to me to be valid.

It is argued that renegotiation entails a great deal of bookkeeping and auditing work, both on the part of the contractor and renegotiation officials, and that, by exempting specific contracts from renegotiation under the discretionary authority, this administrative burden can be minimized. Where all of a particular contractor's war contracts are exempted this would be true. However, it is more likely that a contractor will have some contracts which are exempted under the discretionary exempting power, and some which are not exempted. In this situation the administrative burden is not lessened but increased, for the reason that renegotiation officials must look more closely into the contractor's costs to ascertain whether or not the contractor has sought to throw costs, properly chargeable to the exempted contract or contracts, against the contracts which are renegotiable, whereas, if all of the war business of the contractor were renegotiable, such a segregation of costs would be wholly unnecessary.

I am informed by a former official of the War Department Price Adjustment Board, in whose judgment and reliability I have great confidence, that this argument that the administrative burden can be lessened through the allowance of permissive exemptions is wholly without merit.

The second argument advanced in favor of permissive exemptions seems to me to prove too much. This argument is that contractors do not like to be renegotiated and do not like to have their excessive profits taken away from them and, accordingly, would enter more eagerly into the production of war goods if their contracts were exempted. This principle, if true, would seem to apply equally to all war contracts and would lead, logically, to the proposition that there ought not to be any renegotiation whatever. If we accept the basic philosophy that renegotiation is the proper technique for the prevention of exorbitant war profits, it would seem logically to follow that it should be uniformly applied, without discrimination or favoritism. To the extent that the inhibition against exorbitant war profits adversely affects the morale of our production system, it would seem logical to assume that the damage to morale would be least where all contractors were confident that they would be treated alike, and would be greatest where there is knowledge or belief on the part of war contractors that some, with inside connections, are being favored.

I assure you that I have no interest in this matter, except that I believe that the legislation should be passed in the light of as complete factual information as can possibly be collected within the time within which legislators have to act, and I feel that this phase of the bill was not given as close scrutiny by the House of Representatives and its committee as it deserves.

If there is any further way I can be of assistance, please do not hesitate to call upon me.

Sincerely,

GEORGE MEADER.

Mr. BROWNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNSON. Under ordinary circumstances I would believe that the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle were equally interested in the nonpolitical administration of affairs pertaining to the war. Having learned from my own State of the method by which economic stabilization personnel are being employed, I am somewhat in doubt as to that point. On the basis of your best investigative experience, would you say that partisan politics would be more apt to play a part in this procurement program under the bill as submitted, than if the permissive exemptions were removed?

Mr. MEADER. I think it is clear that if the authority did not exist in the Board there would be no opportunity for them to play partisan politics with such power. But nobody knows what they will do. The Renegotiation Board during the last war seemed to be made up of very high caliber men. However, the selection of administrative personnel is always important. No law can be passed which will insure its good administration. If weak or politically minded persons are appointed to the Renegotiation Board set up by this bill, who are allowed to redelegate that permissive exempting authority down the line to procurement officials, and if there should be weakness or political inspiration in any of those to whom this power is to be redelegated, the opportunity for political favoritism, or other kinds of favoritism, would be great. If this authority were stricken from the bill they could not play politics with power they would not have.

I only want to add this thought to the remarks I have made: The Senate War Investigating Committee during World War II, under the leadership originally of Senator Truman, now President Truman, and subsequently under the leadership of former Senator Mead, now chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, both loyal Democrats, conducted an investigation of this particular method of preventing exorbitant profits in wartime.

After the end of the war, the committee, in its continuation under the chairmanship of Senator BREWSTER, reviewed renegotiation as one of the very many subjects they reviewed in seeking to draw out of the experience of World War II all of the knowledge that was gained then, and to epitomize the work of that committee in its final report.

Both Democrats and Republicans unanimously recommended that in any future renegotiation law permissive exemptions should be eliminated. They were supported by the best thought in the War Department itself, by the views of men, who had had experience working under the permissive exemptions that existed in the 1943 act.

Are we going to do again in this emergency the same thing we did at the beginning of World War II, namely, overlook and neglect to notice all of the experience and hard thought that had been given to the similar problems that had existed in previous wars and previous emergencies?

I say the Congress of the United States ought to be guided by the experience, which is so recent, that we had in World War II. I say that the recommendations of the experts in the military services and the experts on the War Investigating Committee, steeped in all phases of this particular war activity, ought to be given due weight. We ought not to act in ignorance or disregard of the experience of the past.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADER. I yield.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I wish to compliment the gentleman from Michigan on the splendid statement he has made. He, being a new Member of this body, deserves a special compliment for this splendid address.

Mr. MEADER. I thank the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, on January 3 I introduced House Joint Resolution 52.

This resolution is nonpartisan, having been adopted by both major parties in their national platforms. For this reason it is receiving support from many Members on both sides of the aisle.

At a time when women are likely to be drafted and have already proved that they are willing and able to serve their country whenever called, it would seem only just that they should be made first-class citizens. Something they are not today.

The women of this country and the two major political parties ask simply that this amendment be submitted to the several States for ratification and are willing to abide by their verdict.

Let us stop hypocrisy in this matter and either give the people of the several States the right to vote on this amendment or else drop it from our national platforms and tell the world that the women of the United States want security, not freedom, and that they prefer special privileges for the few rather than equality for all.

All this amendment does is to state this very simple proposition:

SECTION 1. Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex. Congress and the several States shall have power, within their respective jurisdictions, to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

SEC. 3. This amendment shall take effect 1 year after the date of ratification.

The equal-rights amendment has been a plank in the Republican platform since 1940 and in the Democratic since 1944. In 1948 it was in the platforms of the Republican, Democratic, and Progressive Parties.

It is, therefore, a matter that is entirely outside and above party politics and it seems rather cynical not to say plain dishonest, that after all these professions of policy and planks in the platforms, nothing has been done to carry out these solemn promises.

I would like to quote from the speech of a woman attorney, Helen Elizabeth Brown, before the Lawyers Civic Association of Maryland, because she answers specifically the question that is always brought up by the opponents of the amendment: "In what way are women, under the law, inferior to men?"

Men, aliens and corporations are persons entitled to the equal protection of the laws in this country; American women are not.

It is unconstitutional to try a Negro man with a jury from which Negro men have been excluded; it is not unconstitutional to try a woman, black or white, with a jury from which women have been excluded.

It is unconstitutional to place restrictions on men's liberty to contract; it is not unconstitutional to restrict women's liberty of contract.

It is constitutional to bar women from any lawful means of earning a living; such laws as to men are unconstitutional and void.

Women may be subjected to labor restrictions; men may not.

Women may be excluded from business and the professions; men may not.

Women in business and the professions may be discriminated against; men may not.

Women may be deprived of their property without due process of law; men may not.

Now all the nonsense about seats in factories for women and maternity benefits are so much "eyewash."

There is no more reason why women should not have seats if they need them than that the GI's should not have special educational advantages that are not open to ordinary civilians. There is no reason why a woman should not have maternity benefits, any more than that a veteran should not have a bonus. She is doing just as much for her country as the soldier, and in both instances they are each doing something the other could not do.

If women have the right to vote they certainly have the right to be considered equal under the Constitution.

The fight for suffrage was more intense and vehement than this one, but this amendment will be written into the Constitution in time. It is the last step on the long road toward freedom for women in the United States. We want equality, not protection. We want justice, not privilege.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I want to congratulate the gentlewoman for having reintroduced the resolution this year and to say, as I think she already knows, that I am in complete support of her resolution. I do not know whether she includes me in the 101 or 102 but I hope she does. I want to say further that I have again introduced a similar resolution and I am very glad indeed to support hers. I think she should add that in addition to the national parties' platforms of 1940, 1944, and thereafter, the State platforms have also included this same provision. I know in my own case that the Republican platform in California held to it as far back as 1940. I am glad indeed to support the gentlewoman from New York.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to assure him that he is listed among the sponsors and supporters of the resolution.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Ever since the gentlewoman from New York first came to the House of Representatives she has led the fight in this House and in the Congress in the interest of the equal rights amendment for women. I want to take this opportunity to compliment her for the wonderful job she has done and for the splendid representation she has given her own district and also the women of America. She is deserving of the greatest praise. It is my personal opinion that this great issue would not have the fervor or the fire in this House if it were not for the energetic and vigorous action which the gentlewoman from New York has exerted in its behalf.

May I also say in passing that I join with the gentlewoman from New York in her fight for this equal rights amendment and to assure her that in the event the resolution comes to the floor of the House for consideration, which I am sure it will, I will go down the line for this amendment and for the resolution. I think it should be passed and I believe if it should come up for consideration during the present session with the gentlewoman as its sponsor it stands the greatest chance it ever has in passing.

It is not so far back since suffragettes were going about the streets agitating for women's right to vote. As a small boy I remember seeing them considered somewhat brazen and out of the usual manner when they agitated allowing women to vote in our elections. Today it is an accepted fact that women vote, and it is well known that the women have cleaned up to a large extent the political mess which the men were responsible for, and I am sure that the same thing will apply if the gentlewoman's amendment and resolution is passed sponsoring the equal rights amendment. I want to compliment her on her distinguished remarks at this time.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I thank the gentleman for his very kind and encouraging words. He has always been very stanch in believing in this amendment and has supported it as long as he has been in the House. I welcome his support and I am looking forward to his help when this amendment finally comes to the floor of the House, for final passage.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that there are many Members in this House on both sides of the aisle who are very favorably inclined to this amendment but who have not yet seen the light enough to come out for it as sponsors.

Mr. Speaker, I include as part of my remarks the names of all the sponsors of this amendment:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. KING] is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE TAX MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the President of the United States, demonstrating, in my opinion, a high degree of statesmanship, invited for the first time in my memory the entire membership of the Committee on Ways and Means to his office to discuss the tax message which he was then preparing to submit to the Congress. I believe the entire membership of the Committee on Ways and Means were in attendance, and in all humility the President proceeded to discuss his budget and the tax message about to be submitted. He invited criticism, and during the course of perhaps 1 hour there was hardly a critical word offered by those in attendance either from the membership of the Republican Party or our own.

Today the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means issued a statement that has now been delivered to the press which, Mr. Speaker, is not only unkind and disrespectful, but is, in my opinion, a statement as subversive to the well-being of our country as anything I have read from a recognized and respected Member of either House of the Congress in my tenure of 9 years as a Member. I am going to quote in part from this statement:

> Either the administration has no such over-all program to raise the $16,000,000,000 or the President's tax message is so politically clever as to amount to downright dishonesty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read from the President's message a statement that I believe demonstrates the manifest sincerity of the President in inviting the entire membership of the Committee on Ways and Means to confer in the preparation of the tax message. I am quoting the President now:

> I know the Congress will want to consider these problems very carefully, and to review my recommendations in the light of their own independent analysis. The Secretary of the Treasury is prepared to discuss these matters in detail with the committees of Congress.

Surely this reflects a candor and frankness on the part of the President which are the antithesis of dishonesty.

Mr. Speaker, in times such as now confront us, with problems accumulating to a point that has never before been equaled in our country's history, taxation of our citizens, as necessary as it may be, is at best now becoming a disagreeable and distasteful task. To have Representatives of a major party in our country seek to shake the faith of our people in the honesty of the President gives aid only to the Communists of the country—and frankly, this is precisely what they are doing; they are attempting to shake faith, to make people who do not know better of their own knowledge believe that their country is being run by people who are "downright dishonest"—is wrong, it is bad. The statement by the distinguished minority member of our committee that the President of the United States is lending himself to a tactic that is downright dishonest will be circulated widely throughout all our land before midnight tonight.

A few minutes ago reference was made on this floor to the splendid speech of General Eisenhower, effectively dedicated to the strengthening of the morale, the courage, and the faith of the free world. In contrast, the intemperate statement I have just quoted, intentionally or inadvertently, must have only the opposite effect. This is not the time to have men of rank make reckless statements which undermine the faith of the people. Even if it were the honest opinion of the minority party that downright dishonesty was in the minds of the men who worked for months building the budget and preparing the tax message, we have the equipment and the machinery and the capacity here within the Congress to make any necessary corrections. In fact, the President reminded the committee, upon the occasion of our visit, and again in his message, that it is the job of the Congress to review his recommendations in the light of our own independent analysis.

Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly the necessity for my remarks here today, particularly when they involve directly or indirectly the gentleman from New York, for there are few men for whom I have greater regard and of whom I am so personally fond. It is well known that his diligence, his patriotism, and his attendance to his duties are excelled by none.

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Utah.

Mrs. BOSONE. May I ask the gentleman from California if the speaker whose remarks the gentleman has quoted had the opportunity to interrogate the President of the United States?

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. KING. I am pleased that the gentlewoman has asked that question. All the Members who visited the President had ample opportunity and were invited to offer suggestions in connection with the tax message to be presented by the President of the United States.

Mrs. BOSONE. Did that gentleman ask any questions?

Mr. KING. I do not recollect that any questions of a critical nature, or that could be interpreted as critical, were presented to the President at any time during the interview.

Mrs. BOSONE. Then the gentleman would say there was a misinterpretation of the President's attitude throughout?

Mr. KING. Completely so; precisely so.

Mrs. BOSONE. It looks as though there is a certain pattern being followed, such as we had to face in the last campaign. Is not that the same pattern?

Mr. KING. It is.

SIZE OF THE MARINE CORPS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, several bills have been introduced in the House, one at least in the Senate, to increase the size of the Marine Corps.

Such legislation may or may not be necessary or helpful. As the question of the roles and missions of the Marine Corps was given consideration when the National Security Act of 1947, since amended, was written, excerpts from the testimony of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower on the subject and excerpts from the exchange of views of General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz as carried in the Joint Chiefs of Staff 1478, may not only be of interest but informative. The excerpts of testimony read as follows:

(From the testimony of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower testifying before a House Committee on May 7, 1947, on the proposed National Security Act of 1947, the following is taken—page 273:)

Mr. Chairman, I have little to add to the general statement I have made, except there is one thing I would like to make clear. I have found around this town in the last year that I have been accused of being an enemy of the Marine Corps.

I want to give you some facts:

Long before I came back from Europe, the President had given us an order in all of the services to try to get together on a military program which would be a truly unified one, which could be sent to Congress, as a unified program of security for the country.

I inherited the War Department part of that chore.

It was very difficult to find ways, means, and methods of getting together on this thing. I finally adopted the method of making concrete and specific proposals.

Only recently I have looked up my own statements to see what I said.

This exchange of letters between the Navy and ourselves was merely a way to get something started. I found it necessary, as was reflected in my papers of that time, to mention the Marine Corps, and certainly no hostility was shown toward it.

I proposed what at that time seemed to me to be a very decent sort of figure from which to start. I proposed a strength for the Marine Corps that was approximately three times as big as its maximum peacetime prewar strength, and that was put in the paper.

I am nonplussed to find out why I have been considered an enemy of the Marines or why the Army should want them in the Army.

There is one other point with respect to the Marines I would like to clear up:

The War Department has been accused of a certain unfriendly attitude by reason of omissions of their names in certain documents.

I will confess to this; that up until a very recent discussion which came about, I had always looked upon the Marines as part of the Navy, an essential part like their battleships, their carriers, or anything else.

When I have referred to the Navy I have meant the Navy with all of its parts and I have never by implication meant to ignore the Marines, because I was not aware of the fact that I should say "naval armed services" in order to use a term inclusive of the Marines. I have always meant when I spoke to the Navy, to include the Marines.

Those are the only two points in addition to my written statement that I wanted to clear up. That is merely for a matter of record to show exactly what I meant in the things I have said and the things I have tried to do.

I should like to repeat that I earnestly believe that the purpose of this bill, the effect of this bill, would be to give us a single civilian with an appropriate group of assistants, who would be enabled each year to study the continuing and changing needs of national security, and who would be in a position to come down and give you a rounded and integrated picture.

I see nothing in the bill that attempts to get into the business of Congress, that of maintaining and supporting armies and determining what they shall do.

I do believe that the great step forward of this bill is to give you a civilian who comes down and gives you each year the rounded picture, either when you take up enabling legislation or the budget. I personally think that is the greatest forward step of this whole thing.

Those were the three points I wanted to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever recommend a reduction in size or in the functions of the Marine Corps at any time?

General EISENHOWER. No, sir. I should make this clear:

I have said in papers and everything else that we should be very careful about not getting into each other's hair, that the Marine Corps should no more attempt to establish a big land army than we should attempt to have destroyers and cruisers, or that sort of thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I had reference specifically to a memorandum which was said to have been written to Admiral Nimitz.

Was such a memorandum written?

General EISENHOWER. I checked and found that in that memorandum I said, as a point to start, suppose we take a Marine Corps of 50,000 or 60,000 men. I looked up the strength of the Marines before the war. In 1939 there were 18,000 and in 1940, their strength was 24,000.

I thought I was starting with a reasonable figure. At that time I did not know that by law the Marines have an authorized strength of 20 percent, I believe, of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that the Marines may be employed on the beaches or to furnish shore parties, signal men, furnish commando-types for raiding operations?

General EISENHOWER. I believe they should do that.

I think we have been a bit remiss and one of the reasons I am anxious for all of us to get together very closely is we have always had to resort to improvisation when we went to this business of landing. Someone must give special attention to this whole business, even including boat crews, the business of shore parties, keeping everybody in touch, and particularly and, above all, signal communications.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you consider that a limitation?

General EISENHOWER. No; I have also said that the Marines should be sufficiently strong to seize advance bases where only the Navy was interested. The Marines, to my way of thinking, have no principal function when you take a great land operation such as was in Europe, in contradistinction to that in the Pacific.

There, if you made good your landing in the Pacific, you knew the battle was won. The enemy could not reinforce and the battle was won.

The landing in Europe was merely an incident to the whole campaign. It was merely a start.

I also said that the Marines should be equipped to seize those forward bases in which the Navy held primary or single interest.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, was it suggested that the Marines be used as crews for the landing boats?

General EISENHOWER. Yes; I asked why they should not do that. I found out later that in naval conception that is wrong. The bluejackets actually provide these crews. We had this experience in the beginning of the war, Mr. Chairman. We were trying to develop landing craft as early as 1942. It was perfectly clear that if you didn't begin early to develop landing craft and get ready for amphibious operations we were not going to win the war.

The Navy was vitally interested in restoring the fleet and combating the submarine.

When we wanted to start this, one of the things we ran into was that the Navy had no men to train as crews for these small landing boats and the Army had to do it. General Somervell undertook and did provide engineering brigades to man these boats. It took a long time before we could transfer them to the Navy. They did not logically belong to us but it seemed to us in retrospect that the job that had not been done in advance should be specifically charged to someone.

I found out that the Navy considers that specifically their job and the Marines had nothing to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it also suggested that our marines follow the pattern of duties of the British marines?

General EISENHOWER. I cannot recall that. I may have at times used the British marines in comparing records, but as a matter of fact, I am not sufficiently familiar with the organization of the British marines to use that as a specific reference.

The CHAIRMAN. The only purpose of my question, may I say, was to remove any fear that someone in the Navy or elsewhere might have that there was an attempt being made by this legislation to limit in some way the marines.

General EISENHOWER. I think we should all be limited. That is one reason for putting us all together so we do not do each other's job. Each should be limited, but if they have a specific job that they do better than everybody else, each of us should have that responsibility.

I do not mean to diminish those things they do that everybody knows they do better than others.

The CHAIRMAN. You would have no objection to writing some safeguard of that kind into this legislation?

General EISENHOWER. When you came to the business of writing things into legislation, Mr. Chairman, I personally feel that if we go into the job of writing detailed legislation, we get on dangerous ground.

I took this problem to myself: Suppose you should ask me to go back and write the missions of the Army. I tried to correlate that in my mind with what the Army had to do during the war. We had to do everything; we had amphibious operations, we provided boat crews for a time, we had airborne divisions and mountain divisions, infantry and armored divisions. We had to conduct civil government and military government in occupied territories.

I am afraid, really, of writing too many of these things into the bill.

On the other hand, I say this: Whatever the Congress decides to do on this thing is perfectly acceptable to us. It is not my job to be writing legislation. I prefer to see the intent of Congress stated very clearly as to what they intend, and charge the various departments, under the President, with the duty of carrying it out, and to go ahead on that basis, and Congress to keep correcting year by year, both through the budget and such amendments to the act, as are necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. General, of course while it is the duty of Congress to write the legislation, many of us are so unfamiliar with the subject that we must have dependence upon the judgment of you gentlemen who are in charge.

Now the question is this: There is a widespread fear on the part, perhaps, of some in the Navy and perhaps elsewhere, that this legislation is designed to limit the duties and functions of the Marine Corps beyond the limitations heretofore imposed.

Now to dispel that fear, whether it is founded or unfounded, would you or your associates be willing to have written in there a broad, general provision that the Marines should carry on, exercising the same functions that they have heretofore?

General EISENHOWER. I should think, sir, that a suitable preamble to that bill could state the intent of Congress so clearly that the detailed amendments all through the bill should be unnecessary.

Excerpts from the Joint Chiefs of Staff papers give the following exchange between General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz.

In the memorandum forwarded by General Eisenhower, then Chief of Staff, United States Army, among other things we find this:

The conduct of land warfare is a responsibility of the Army. Operationally, the Navy does not belong on the land; it belongs on the sea. It should have only technical and administrative functions on land in connection with its headquarters, bases, or other naval installations. The emergency development of the Marine forces during this war should not be viewed as assigning to the Navy a normal function of land warfare, fundamentally the primary role of the Army. There is a real need for one service to be charged with the responsibility for initially bridging the gap between the sailor on the ship and the soldier on land. This seems to me properly a function of the Marine Corps. I believe the Joint Chiefs of Staff should give serious consideration to such a concept. The need of a force within the fleet to provide small, readily available, and lightly armed units to protect United States interests ashore in foreign countries is recognized. These functions, together with that of interior guard of naval ships and naval shore establishments, comprise the fundamental role of the Marine Corps. When naval forces are involved in operations requiring land forces of combined arms, the task becomes a joint land-sea, and usually Air Force mission. Once Marine units attain such a size as to require the combining of arms to accomplish their missions, they are assuming and duplicating the functions of the Army and we have in effect two land armies. I therefore recommend that the above concept be accepted as stating the role of the Marine Corps and that Marine units not exceed the regiment in size, and that the size of the Marine Corps be made consistent with the foregoing principles.

To that view, Admiral Nimitz, under date of March 30, 1946, replied:

The basic and major issues considered in Joint Chiefs of Staff 1478/10 and Joint Chiefs of Staff 1478/11 comprises a proposal on the part of the Army (a) to eliminate the Marine Corps as an effective combat element, reducing it to the status of a naval police unit with possibly certain ancillary service functions in respect to amphibious operations, and (b) to abolish an essential component of naval aviation which operates from coastal and island shore bases. To these ends these papers propose to discard agreements on these matters which have been arrived at between 20 years and which have resulted in a responsibility for functions proven highly effective in World War II.

In matters so vital both to the Marine Corps and to naval aviation, I consider it appropriate and desirable that the Joint Chiefs of Staff should have the benefit of the views of General Vandegrift, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and of Vice Admiral Radford, the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air. Their comments are attached as enclosures A and B, respectively.

I agree with the Chief of Staff, United States Army, that further exchange of papers on the subject of the missions of the land, naval, and air forces will serve no useful purpose. It is further apparent that the question is part of the larger one of the merger of the War and Navy Departments, which proposal was, at the Army's insistence, referred to the President and which is now before the Congress. Thus the matter now under consideration has already reached levels higher than the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

General Spaatz, commanding general, Army Air Forces, wrote:

I recommend therefore that the size of the Marine Corps be limited to small, readily available and lightly armed units, no larger than a regiment, to protect United States interests ashore in foreign countries and to provide interior guard of naval ships and naval shore establishments.

General Eisenhower, Chief of Staff, United States Army, also wrote:

The following is proposed for consideration: * * *

1. That the Marine Corps is maintained solely as an adjunct of the fleet and participates only in minor shore combat operations in which the Navy alone is interested.

2. That it be recognized that the land aspect of major amphibious operations in the future will be undertaken by the Army and consequently the marine forces will not be appreciably expanded in time of war.

3. That it be agreed that the Navy will not develop a land Army of a so-called amphibious army; marine units to be limited in size to the equivalent of the regiment, and the total size of the Marine Corps therefore limited to some 50,000.

Report by Army members of Joint Staff planners proposal:

Provide landing parties with the fleet to protect United States interests ashore in foreign countries in operations short of war, and in time of war to conduct raids and small-scale amphibious demonstrations.

* * * * *

Perform necessary functions aboard ship, at naval installations, and in the ship-to-shore phase of amphibious operations.

THE BUDGET SITUATION

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I have a very high regard for my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. KING]. I know his sincerity as well as I know his ability. I also have a very high regard for the gentleman from New York, to whom he made refernce. I know nothing of the statement by the gentleman from New York to which the gentleman from California referred, and I know nothing of the circumstances of the consultation in the White House, but I would like to ask my friend the gentleman from California whether this situation might not have been involved: The committee upon which he serves and the committee upon which I serve have a great deal in common. It is necessary that between these two committees the taxpayers of the United States must bear the great burden that they are to be called upon to bear. I think, therefore, that the gentleman from New York may have felt—and I ask this as a question of the gentleman from California—the gentleman from New York may have felt, as we feel, and as the distinguished Senator from Virginia, Senator BYRD, a member of his own party, feels that not enough consideration has been given in this budget or in the tax program to a practical reduction in the cost of government which, in the words of the Senator from Virginia, Senator BYRD, could go as far as $7,000,000,000, and would, therefore, reduce the tax burden to that amount. Is not that the problem before all of us, rather than any desire on the part of the gentleman from New York either to speak disrespectfully of the President—which I am sure he would never do—or, as the gentleman from California and the gentlewoman from Utah intimated, to incite controversy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WERDEL (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) until February 19, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 5, 1951, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1951

(Legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1951)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Kiyoshi Tanimoto, minister, the Nagaregawa United Church of Christ, Hiroshima, Japan, offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the great blessing Thou hast granted America in enabling her to build in this last decade the greatest civilization in human history.

We thank Thee for America's great spiritual heritage expressed so beautifully in her sacrificial rehabilitation of human life throughout the war-torn countries; thus halting the ravages of postwar conditions which would have been greater than the destruction of war itself.

We remind ourselves, O Father, how mercifully American officials and humanitarian leaders have treated the defeated nations and exemplified to them the true way of democracy.

We thank Thee, too, O Lord, for the policy-making achievements of this Senate which graciously stands behind these American leaders around the world.

We thank Thee, God, that Japan has been permitted to be one of the fortunate recipients of American generosity. We thank Thee that our people have been given the gift of freedom, enabling them to rise from the ashes of ruin and be reborn. Under the leadership of the United States we pray Thee, our Father, that Japan may receive a new birth of freedom and take her place with the Christian democracies of the world.

God, bless all Members of this Senate and grant unto each Member of it Thy abundant blessing, Thy spirit, Thy wisdom; and lead them in their great tasks of turning this confused world into the final goal of Thy kingdom, of the oneness of the human race, and the peace of Thy dear Son, in whose name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Thursday, February 1, 1951, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, Mr. HOLLAND was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate during this week.

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LONG was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate during this week.

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. FULBRIGHT was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of the week.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under an order of the Senate made many years ago, it devolves upon the Chair to appoint a Senator to read Washington's Farewell Address on the 22d day of February. Such appointments alternate between the two sides of the Senate. Inasmuch as a Democrat was designated last year, the Chair now designates the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] to read the address this year.

TAXATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 53)

The VICE PRESIDENT. On last Friday, February 2, the President sent a message to the House of Representatives on the subject of taxation which was read and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day. In view of that fact, the Chair does not deem it advisable to have the identical message just received from the President printed in the RECORD as of today. It is sufficient that reference be made to the fact that it appears on pages 884–885 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, February 2, as presented to the House of Representatives.

The message will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators be permitted to make insertions in the RECORD, to submit reports, to introduce bills and present petitions and memorials, and transact other routine business, without speeches.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT OF NATIONAL CAPITAL HOUSING AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 5 (a) of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the National Capital Housing Authority for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1950.

June 30, 1950 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

REPORT ON WAR CONTRACT TERMINATIONS AND SETTLEMENTS

A letter from the Administrator, General Services Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on war contract terminations and settlements, for the period October 1 through December 31, 1950 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF POTOMAC ELECTRIC POWER CO.

A letter from the president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the company for the year ended December 31, 1950 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT CO.

A letter from the president of the Washington Gas Light Co., Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the company, for the year ended December 31, 1950, together with a list of stockholders (with an accompanying report and document); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the board of trustees of the village of Park Forest, Ill., favoring the enactment of legislation to include the village of Park Forest in any system of rent control; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A resolution adopted by the National Music Council of New York, N. Y., offering its services for use in musical activities in the Armed Forces and throughout the Nation for the stimulation of the people in the national emergency; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. LANGER:

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Senate Resolution 1

"Resolution calling upon Congress and the President to withdraw our troops from Korea, develop a strong home defense, and unify American views on foreign policy

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota, That the Congress and the President of the United States are respectfully urged to take immediate action for the following purposes:

"1. To withdraw all troops and military personnel from Korea;

"2. To recognize the principle that no political or military commitment with respect to foreign policy that may involve the lives of Americans is binding upon the people of the United States unless it is first approved by the Congress;

"3. To strengthen our continental defenses and prepare for effective action when the safety of our Nation is imperiled;

"4. To provide leadership on foreign policy in which the people may have the utmost confidence;

"5. To provide the people of the United States with realistic information so that public opinion may crystalize in the form of a unified and unselfish foreign policy that history will applaud; and

"6. To disassociate ourselves from the Korean policy, a policy which has brought to our youth the tragedies of war without a candid recognition of the existence of a state of war, a policy which has made us the policeman of the United Nations without the United Nations assuming full responsibility for the eventualities of police action, a policy which risks war without first determining whether the objects sought are worth the risk, or a willingness to accept the risk when encountered. That a copy of this resolution be signed by the president and secretary of the senate and sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and to each Congressman and Senator from North Dakota.

"RAY SCHNELL,
"W. J. TROUT,
"Secretary of the senate."

DRAFTING OF CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS—RESOLUTION OF GRAND ISLAND (NEBR.) POST, NO. 53, THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by Grand Island Post, No. 53, the American Legion, of Grand Island, Nebr., relating to the drafting of conscientious objectors.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it has come to the attention of Grand Island Post, No. 53, the American Legion, Department of Nebraska, that there is a problem facing the local draft boards of various counties in the State of Nebraska, regarding the deferment of conscientious objectors; and

Whereas it is our considered opinion that the provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1948, pertaining to conscientious objectors, are being abused and used as a loophole for draft evasion, and that such abuses are hampering these local draft boards to the extent that they are unable to meet their monthly quotas: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned to amend the existing Selective Service Act of 1948, so that the conscientious objectors shall be drafted or accepted into the Armed Forces of the United States, and assigned to duties therein, as consistent as possible with their objections, in order that they shall be given the privilege and opportunity in aiding in the maintenance and defense of our freedoms.

Done at Grand Island, Nebr., this 10th day of January 1951.

E. C. ALCORN,
Commander.

OUTLAWING THE COMMUNIST PARTY—RESOLUTION OF JEWISH WAR VETERANS OF UNITED STATES, DEPARTMENT OF MARYLAND

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, Department of Maryland, calling for outlawing of the Communist Party.

The views expressed in the resolution will appeal, I am sure, to every patriotic American.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, Department of Maryland, call upon our National and State legislators to outlaw the Communist Party which heretofore has enjoyed the privilege of using the elective processes of our freedom-loving Government.

We are convinced that the Communist Party has no place in our democratic way of life. We believe it to be inspired by Soviet direction and policy; its existence here in our Nation is a sham and a fraud; a hypocrisy and deceit.

It is a crafty stratagem to keep Soviet ideology before our people and intends to destroy and demolish every basic principle which we hold dear and precious.

We brand the Communist Party of America as a dangerous menace to our institutions; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our brother veteran organizations, the public press and all high officers of Government now entrusted with leadership and responsibility.

Attest:

SAMUEL M. MICHELSON,
Adjutant.

REDUCTION IN FEDERAL NONDEFENSE SPENDING—RESOLUTION OF BALTIMORE (MD.) ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the board of directors of the Baltimore Association of Commerce adopted, on January 26, 1951, a resolution calling for reduction in nondefense spending by the Federal Government, which is so much in line with the thinking not only of our own citizens in Maryland, but of millions of citizens throughout the country, that its publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will serve a sound purpose, I am sure. Therefore, I present the resolution for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Baltimore Association of Commerce believes that not only accelerated military preparedness but a sound budget is essential to our survival in these critical times; and

Whereas businessmen, like all Americans, are willing to make all proper sacrifices necessary for the common defense, but at the same time believe that new socialistic experiments and other projects masquerading under the false pretense of promoting the national defense—or having but a remote and indirect connection with it—should and must be exposed and eliminated from the Federal budget; and

Whereas the nondefense items of the budget should be drastically reduced so as to provide in part the funds and manpower so desperately needed for military purposes; and

Whereas the association believes that such proposals as that of Senator BYRD to reduce the national budget by $7,000,000,000 should be supported, and that Congress should assert its constitutional powers over appropriations, and should not in this crisis blindly follow the proposals of the executive department; and

Whereas it will profit us little to build up the necessary military defense and yet to suffer defeat through inflation and national bankruptcy; and

Whereas this association takes great pride in the fact that our Maryland delegation in Congress, in accordance with our Maryland traditions and irrespective of party, has consistently supported efforts to prudently manage our national fiscal affairs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association earnestly urges our Maryland Senators and Representatives to make a determined effort to eliminate from the budget all waste and all new socialistic experiments and other projects not necessary to the defense effort, and to reduce where possible nondefense items, to the end that our country may remain financially strong and that we may thus back up our military forces with a sound economy; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent (1) to the Maryland delegation in Congress; and (2) to the members of the Association of Commerce and commercial and trade organizations throughout the State.

DISPERSAL OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES—RESOLUTION OF MARYLAND-NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the people of Maryland in the area adjacent to the District of Columbia are very much interested in, and somewhat concerned over, the pending proposals for the dispersal of Government departments and agencies.

A great deal of time and thought has been expended, with very beneficial results, in the planning of the newer developments in that area and it is sincerely hoped that any further developments, whether by the United States Government or within the limits of private enterprise, may be integrated with the long-range plans of the area.

I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, dealing with this whole question of planning, which thoroughly deserves the attention of the Congress in connection with any plans for dispersal of Government agencies.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is now under consideration by the Congress of the United States a bill (S. 218) (H. R. 1728) to authorize a program to provide for the construction of Federal buildings outside of, but in the vicinity of and accessible to, the District of Columbia and for other purposes; and

Whereas the proposed bill appears to be an essential measure to provide for Federal building in dispersed areas to permit continuity of important governmental functions in case of an attack on the Nation's Capital; and

Whereas the said bill provides not only for acquisition of sites by the Administrator of General Services but for appurtenant and accessory facilities, such as utilities, roads, highways, bridges, and other off-site facilities, as may be necessary, and authorizes the Administrator of General Services to enter into contracts with State and local bodies for such purposes and to such extent as he may find to be in the public interest; and

Whereas one of the stated policies of the bill is to provide "for the sound development of the District of Columbia and its adjacent areas"; and

Whereas any program for dispersal will necessitate the immediate and rapid extension of plans to guide the development of the outlying areas and will require coordination and integration of proposed new facilities with others existing and presently planned in the area, including highways, utilities, and other public facilities and services; and

Whereas the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a bicounty agency of the State of Maryland, is authorized by chapter 992 of the Laws of Maryland, 1943, and amendments thereto, to make and adopt and, from time to time, amend, extend, and add to a general plan for the physical development of the Maryland-Washington regional district, embracing some 320 square miles of Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Maryland, adjacent to the District of Columbia; and

Whereas this general plan is for the purposes of guiding and accomplishing the coordinated, comprehensive, and systematic development of the said Regional District and the coordination with public and private development of other parts of the State of Marylard and that of the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the Commission is authorized to act in conjunction and cooperation with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, is designated by the State of Maryland as its representative, and is empowered to act in conjunction and cooperation with other representatives or officers of the United States Government; and

Whereas the Maryland Commission is further authorized and empowered to exercise any of its functions in portions of Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties outside the said Maryland-Washington Regional District upon the request of the governmental agency having jurisdiction over the area: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission hereby endorses in principle the said dispersal bill, since it appears to be essential in the interest of defense of the seat of government and the vital functions thereof concentrated in the Washington area; and be it further

Resolved, That, for the purpose of carrying out the intent of Congress in the provision for sound development of the District of Columbia and its adjacent areas, an amendment be inserted in the said bill to accomplish the following purposes:

1. To designate the National Capital Park and Planning Commission as a central planning agency for Federal operations and for the coordination of Federal plans with local plans;

2. To allocate, from the funds appropriated for the purposes of the said bill, a reasonable allotment to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission for the purpose of extending its studies in the dispersal area and surrounding communities; and

3. To make provision for the reallocation by the said National Commission to local planning agencies of such funds as may be required to assure and expedite local planning coordination with the dispersal program; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be transmitted to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works and to the chairman and members of the Senate Subcommittee on Public Buildings; to the chairman of the House Committee on Public Works and to the chairman and members of the House Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds; to the Honorable HERBERT R. O'CONOR and the Honorable JOHN MARSHALL BUTLER, Senators from the State of Maryland; to the Honorable HARRY FLOOD BYRD and the Honorable A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, Senators from the Commonwealth of Virginia; to the Honorable LANSDALE G. SASSCER, Representative from the Fifth District of Maryland, and the Honorable J. GLENN BEALL, Representative from the Sixth District of Maryland; to the Honorable HOWARD W. SMITH, Representative from the Eighth District of Virginia; to the Administrator of General Services; to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission; to the county commissioners of Prince Georges County, Md., and the county council of Montgomery County, Md.; and to the Upper Montgomery County Planning Commission, the Northern Virginia Planning and Economic Development Commission, the Arlington County Planning Commission, the Fairfax County Planning Commission, the Falls Church Planning Commission, and the city of Alexandria Planning Commission.

IRWIN I. MAIN,
Chairman, the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

INVESTIGATION OF PROBLEMS RELATING TO BANKING AND CREDIT LEGISLATION, SMALL BUSINESS, AND ECONOMIC STABILIZATION

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report an original resolution, to investigate problems relating to banking and credit legislation, small business and economic stabilization, and I submit a report (No. 79) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and, under the rule, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The resolution (S. Res. 64) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the Eighty-second Congress, until February 15, 1952, to make a full and complete study and investigation of such problems as it may deem proper relating to (1) adequacy of banking and credit legislation, including (A) international banking matters; (B) encouragement of venture capital investment in new enterprises; (C) problems relating to the Federal Reserve System and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, such as credit policies, bank reserves, marginal requirements, merger of Federal Reserve banks with State banks, and deposit insurance; and (D) adequacy of present monetary system; (2) small business, including matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, (A) financial aid to small business enterprises, (B) financial aid to veterans operating small business enterprises, and (C) adequacy of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan authority and extensions thereof; and (3) economic stabilization, including (A) construction of housing, (B) permanent and temporary war housing, and (C) proposed amendments to the rent control act and administration of rent control legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-second Congress, until February 15, 1952, (1) to make such expenditures as it deems advisable; (2) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable; and (3) with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government.

SEC. 3. Expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

PROHIBITION OF LABOR ESPIONAGE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to prohibit labor espionage, and I ask unanimous consent to make a few remarks in connection with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 795) to prohibit labor espionage, introduced by Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. NEELY, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. LEHMAN, and Mr. MORSE), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. How much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. MURRAY. Approximately a minute and a half.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have just introduced a bill to prohibit labor espionage. Senators NEELY, HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, and MORSE have joined me in sponsoring this measure. If enacted, it would make labor espionage in interstate commerce a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment.

It came as a great surprise and shock to me to learn that such legislation is needed. The very term "labor espionage" recalls the jungle of violence in which labor existed prior to enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Wagner Act, and other progressive labor legislation.

Many years ago in Montana I had personal experience with labor espionage. At that time, during the great Montana mining boom, when miners were subjected to pitiless exploitation by ruthless mine owners bent on quick riches regardless of the cost to humanity, labor unions began to spring up spontaneously in the mining camps. They were met by every form of resistance from subtle propaganda to murder. Thugs, strike breakers, and labor spies were imported and paid to destroy unionism by crime and oppression. Of them all, perhaps the most dangerous and revolting was the labor spy.

While paid to do everything in his power to prevent self-organization, it is the function of the labor spy to pretend to believe in unionism, to infiltrate the ranks of the workers, to agitate for unionism and thus ascertain those most sympathetic to it, to appear in the guise of friend so that he may the more effectively destroy; and, by earning under false pretenses the confidence of his fellow workers, place himself in the most effective position to betray them.

Many times the practices of labor espionage have been exposed, by Congress and courts, in factual studies and even in fiction. The last great exposé was that of the LaFollette committee during the middle thirties. And since it had been so completely exposed, we supposed that it had thereby been annihilated. But we were wrong.

Mr. President, during the last year the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, has found that labor espionage still flourishes in some American industries. Most decent employers have long since abandoned it for the loathsome thing it is. But in some of our industrial byways, it still sprouts and poisons labor-management relations. We have found it in the textile industry, in the furniture industry, and elsewhere. The most shocking system of labor espionage we discovered in the marine divisions of some of our great oil-tanker companies.

It is only fair to say that once we exposed it the responsible officers of American industry have disavowed it and suppressed it. But it still presents a challenge to Congress.

Mr. President, in time of international emergency our maritime industry is at once vulnerable and of paramount strategic importance. Since it is almost exclusively interstate commerce, it is peculiarly the problem of Congress. It is the duty of Congress to take every possible step to promote stability of labor relations in the maritime industry and to prevent sabotage by excluding, so far as possible, criminals and subversives. Labor espionage, of course, is an unfair-labor practice under the Taft-Hartley Act. However, the act carries no deterrent other than condemnation by the Board and courts. It is quite clear that the type of character who would engage in labor espionage is more apt to be deterred by punishment than by public censure.

For these reasons the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations has unanimously recommended the introduction of a bill to punish labor espionage as a crime, and the standing committee on Labor and Public Welfare has unanimously adopted the report of its subcommittee. I assume my bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRIBUTION OF MOTOR-VEHICLE TIRES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LANGER submitted amendments in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 629) to provide for the distribution of motor-vehicle tires, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION AFFORDING EQUAL RIGHTS TO WOMEN—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, on January 8, 1951, I introduced a joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 3, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women. I now ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to announce the names of Senators who desire to cosponsor the joint resolution, and I ask that their names be added as cosponsors of the joint resolution. I further ask that I may be permitted to address the Senate for 2 minutes on the joint resolution.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the joint resolution?

Mr. O'CONOR. The purpose of the joint resolution is to afford equal rights to women.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Maryland may proceed.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the joint resolution, the purpose of which is to submit to the States of the Union a proposed amendment to the Constitution affording equal rights to women, is cosponsored jointly by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the senior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the junior Senator from California [Mr. NIXON], the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the junior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

It would seem to be a late day to have decided the simple and single issue of whether such a great proportion of our population should be guaranteed similar rights and privileges as are enjoyed by the remaining citizenry. Yet better late than never it is imperative that the Constitution proclaim to all the fundamental guaranty that no discrimination because of sex shall be legalized.

Especially at this period of conflicting ideologies should it be declared in unmistakable terms that American citizens of both sexes are accorded equal rights.

Those who espouse foreign ideologies point critically to the fact that women are denied certain privileges in the United States while members of their sex are entitled to every right guaranteed to men under foreign flags. We should tolerate no such condition which is seized upon by our enemies to decry our democratic institutions.

Singularly enough this proposal has been before the Congress since 1923, and has never received an unfavorable report. But session after session it has failed to achieve approval by both Houses of the Congress.

The equal rights movement began at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848—over 100 years ago. It was just after the conclusion of the First World War that the women of America won national suffrage for the first time. Their contribution to victory in that conflict was great, but the production miracle of the Second World War, for which women of our Nation were also partly responsible, has earned them, at the very least, equality of economic opportunity and equal rights under the laws of our land.

Can we ignore the remarkable progress which women of America have made, particularly in recent years, in all fields of endeavor, the professions, the industries and the arts—yes, and in public office—and tell them that even these accomplishments are insufficient to warrant removal of the discriminatory restrictions under which, and despite which, they have made such outstanding progress?

Certainly, in the field of government there is not only wide opportunity but great need for the peculiar talents and abilities which the women of America can bring to bear upon today's problems. In my own State of Maryland, during the 8 years in which I was privileged to occupy the governor's chair, we found it desirable, and in many cases I might even say necessary, to call upon outstanding women of the State for assistance in matters of government, and particularly in matters affecting the welfare and safety of our people during the emergencies of the war years.

We can no longer tolerate discrimination against American women either in the Nation as a whole or in the several States. The equal rights amendment is the instrument by which this discrimination can be eradicated.

TELEGRAM BY SENATOR THYE TO THE PRESIDENT REGARDING THE PRESENT TRANSPORTATION CRISIS

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to read into the RECORD a telegram which I have addressed to the President of the United States:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1951.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:

The transportation crisis must be ended. Supplying of food, ammunition, and medical supplies for American boys fighting and dying on the battlefields in Korea, as well as meeting the general public health and welfare needs of our people, must not be further jeopardized by continuation of the slowdown on our railroads brought about by the absence of railroad workers in large numbers reporting illness. Mr. President, I appeal to you to use every power of your great office to bring an end to the present crisis. If there is a real epidemic among the workers, have the medical resources of our armed services and the agencies of the Public Health Service been utilized to the fullest extent? As Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, have you used every power to prevent absenteeism of civilian employees of the railroad, now under Army control, which menaces life and health? Have you used the powers of the Executive to bring about arbitration of the dispute that will assure our workers a fair wage but will not permit shutdown of vital transportation? If you need additional powers, what steps have you recommended that Congress take to help you deal with this situation? Severe winter conditions throughout the Nation, but especially in Northern States, which have experienced the worst winter in years, have accentuated the shortage of fuel shipments on the railroads to the point where an emergency situation exists. Hardship and suffering are certain to result to many of our people. Our men in uniform, already making the greatest of sacrifices, will feel the dire results of our failures at home. A supreme obligation rests upon the Government to end this intolerable situation. I urge you to take every necessary step open to you as President and as Commander in Chief to meet this grave crisis.

EDWARD J. THYE,
United States Senator.

VOLUNTEER FREEDOM CORPS—LETTER FROM FORMER CZECHOSLOVAK AMBASSADOR

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter which I have received from Dr. Juraj Slavik, former Czechoslovak Ambassador, concerning the proposed legislation which has been introduced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], and myself, providing for the enlistment of aliens in a Volunteer Freedom Corps.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 11, 1951.

Mr. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR LODGE: I am hastening to congratulate you and your colleagues who signed the bills S. 238 and S. 239. I hope that the Congress of the United States will enact very soon this very important legislation. Your statement gives very good arguments for such an action, which would be welcomed not only by the anti-Communist refugees from behind the iron curtain, but also by the peoples of the enslaved satellite nations of Soviet Russia. I am convinced that those nations, and especially my compatriots of Czechoslovakia, would be happy to join the glorious Army of the United States in securing freedom and giving hope and encouragement for the victims of Communist aggression. I am further convinced that, in spite of the fact that the Kremlin masters and their Czechoslovak gauleiters are purging constantly the Czechoslovak Army and especially the officer corps—which seem to them unreliable—the Czechoslovak Army as well as the other armies behind the iron curtain are basically opposing the Communist doctrine and practice in the same percentage as the population in general, and that therefore—should these armies be used against the western democracies—they would gladly go over to the western armies so as to be able to fight communism and get rid of their oppressors and tormentors. Such situation would need at least cadres for national armies, and I therefore think that the Volunteer Freedom Corps should be—fighting under the American flag—the nucleus of such national units. I would therefore prefer that the different nationalities enrolled in the Volunteer Freedom Corps should be organized in special units and should be allowed also some distinction in the national colors of the respective nationals. That would facilitate in a later state to form national units, including those anti-Communist forces that would come over in great numbers from the Soviet lines. Such national units would form a great attraction to all Czechoslovak nationals in exile, but even a greater one to those who would be forced to fight against the allies in the satellite armies. Mass desertion would result, and the existence of national units abroad would be the most important driving force to join these national units.

I am sure that thousands of my young compatriots would take the opportunity to join the Volunteer Freedom Corps. I got hundreds of letters from Czechoslovak political refugees—many of them veterans of World War II—in Germany, Austria, and in free countries after the Korean aggression, who offered their services for military service against the aggressor. So did also former Czechoslovak airmen who served in the RAF in Great Britain. There are more than 45,000 Czechoslovak refugees who escaped from the country after the Communist coup. Many thousands of them are young men, eager to fight communism.

I have another suggestion, which would necessitate a slight change in the bill—section 6. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to appoint civilian citizens of the United States and of other nations to serve with the VFC. I agree, of course, with this provision, but I suggest to authorize the Secretary of the Army to appoint also former officers of other nations and to change therefore the words "civilian citizens" to "persons" or only "citizens," as to enable to employ in such future national armies, as I suggested above, also Czechoslovak, Polish, Hungarian, etc., generals, colonels, and other officers who are, of course, more than 35 years of age.

I would be very grateful should you consider it possible to discuss this problem with me or with Czechoslovak military experts, who are at your disposal in Washington.

Very sincerely yours,

JURAJ SLAVIK,
Former Czechoslovak Ambassador.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, immediately following the letter which I have just had printed in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed an editorial from the Boston Post bearing on the same subject, and an article from the Washington Post, in which it is stated that the national commander of the Catholic War Veterans also favors this proposed legislation.

There being no objection, the editorial and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston (Mass.) Post of January 31, 1951]

ANTI-RED SLAVS

With all the emphasis placed on raising manpower for the defense of Europe, it is surprising more has not been done toward mobilizing the 2,000,000 anti-Communist Slavs that could be made available for military duty with a little effort. Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., mentioned this number in a recent speech and also revealed that he has been doing what he can to make it possible to employ the services of these men, who are so eager to oppose the Reds on personal and spiritual grounds. They certainly should be given their chance to join the ranks of the defenders of freedom. As Senator LODGE pointed out, these men cannot fight in the armies of their own countries, since those countries are already under Communist rule, but that should not mean they ought not to be given an opportunity to oppose the forces that took freedom from their homelands. On the contrary, they can be depended upon to be counted among the most valiant defenders of a way of life that they can truly appreciate.

[From the Washington Post]

VOLUNTEER ALIEN ARMY CORPS URGED

The national commander of the Catholic War Veterans last night urged Congress to speed legislation that would permit enlistment of aliens in an Army "volunteer freedom corps."

Commander Donald J. McQuade called for the action at a testimonial dinner in his honor sponsored at the Elks Club by the District department of Catholic War Veterans.

McQuade pointed out that thousands of qualified Poles, Czechs, Hungarians, Yugoslavs, and members of other nationalities would rush to enlist in such a corps as haters of communism.

"These men," McQuade said, "would be welcome additions to the comparatively few American, French, British, and Italian divisions now available for the defense of Western Europe.

"They would also conserve American manpower and, in case of war, unquestionably would save many American casualties."

McQuade said he supported Senate bill 238, introduced by Senator LODGE, Republican, Massachusetts, for this purpose.

Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle, of Washington, was represented at the dinner by the Reverend Philip J. Hannan, vice chancelor of the archdiocese. Thomas R. Callahan was toastmaster. Other speakers included Commander Edward Peters, of the District department of Catholic War Veterans, and the Reverend James H. Brooks, department chaplain.

RECRUITMENT OF AN AMERICAN FOREIGN LEGION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, on this day, when a series of Lincoln Day observances is beginning throughout the country, I should like to read a letter which has come to my attention, bearing the endorsement of Abraham Lincoln. It will take but a moment to read the letter into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Maine may proceed.

Mr. BREWSTER. This letter came to me only this morning. It deals with a matter bearing on the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and several other Senators, regarding the recruitment of a foreign legion. The letter, which is from the National Committee for the Liberation of Slovakia, reads:

FEBRUARY 2, 1951.

Hon. OWEN BREWSTER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I like to bring to your kind attention the following historical event, which I beg you to use in some way at the Lincoln Day celebration. This would help our resistance movement and also encourage the Americans of Slovak origin to participate wholeheartedly in our fight.

On February 4, 1861, the following letter was sent to President Lincoln by Capt. G. Mihalotzy, who as a Slovak fled his native country after the revolution in 1848:

"To the Honorable A. LINCOLN.

"DEAR SIR: We have organized a company of militia in this city composed of men of Hungarian, Bohemian, and Slavonic origin. Being the first company formed in the United States of said nationalities, we respectfully ask leave of your excellency to entitle ourselves 'Lincoln Riflemen of Slavonic Origin.'

"If you will kindly sanction our use of your name, we will endeavor to do honor to it, whenever we may be called to perform active service.

"Respectfully in behalf of the company,

"G. MIHALOTZY,
"Captain."

To this letter, the Great Emancipator responded in his handwriting:

"I cheerfully grant the request above made.

"A. LINCOLN."

I am enclosing a printed copy of that letter.

In this connection I like to inform you that the chairman of this committee, Dr. V. S. Krajcovic, who is an exile of Slovakia overridden by communism maintains the position that now is the time to organize freedom militias—as it was during the Civil War—from all the descendants of all those countries under Communist domination. Since we have thousands of exiles like Mihalotzy, his memory and heroic deeds will inspire everybody for the liberation of countries behind the iron curtain.

That is the end of the letter which I received. It seems to me it has a very interesting bearing on the proposed legislation which is now being considered by the Congress, regarding the possibility of forming an American foreign legion.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA—STATEMENT OF APPRECIATION BY SENATOR HILL

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this is National Boy Scout Week, and I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point a statement of appreciation of the Boy Scouts of America and their fine work.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR LISTER HILL

The Nation's Capital, because of its very significance, has received hundreds upon hundreds of distinguished visitors over the years. Kings, princes, potentates, prime ministers, and other men of responsibility have come and gone in the everyday transactions of world affairs.

Last night (Sunday) there arrived in Washington an American citizen who holds a distinction rare among his fellowmen. He is just completing 41 years of service as scoutmaster. I refer to Charles A. Kelso of Troop 55, Boy Scouts of America, St. Louis, Mo. Scoutmaster of that same troop since 1910, a unique record in the annals of Scouting.

Scoutmaster Kelso is coming here as part of a Nation-wide observance of Boy Scout Week, an observance in which more than 2,000,000 Scouts and leaders will participate in every part of the United States.

President Truman will officially open Boy Scout Week when he receives at the White House 12 young men, all Eagle Scouts, who will travel from the various regions of the Nation, representing the entire membership of the Boy Scouts of America. Scoutmaster Kelso, who will be a member of the official party, will represent 78,716 fellow scoutmasters, cubmasters, and explorer leaders, all of whom are giving their services on a voluntary basis.

These Eagle Scouts when calling upon the President, will leave with him a Report to the Nation, indicating not only the steady growth of the Boy Scouts of America, but their remarkable record of service on a community and national basis. Hundreds of thousands of Scouts have lived up to their slogan, "Do a good turn daily."

This Boy Scout Week we are celebrating the forty-first anniversary of the Boy Scouts of America. From a small beginning in 1910 the movement grew steadily, enrolling over the years a total of 17,500,000 boys and leaders in all parts of the Nation. Today's membership of 2,750,000 is the all-time high in the history of Scouting.

The Scout program and its code of high ethical living has enriched the lives of many of today's leaders in the Nation's business, for numerous Boy Scouts of yesterday are now to be found in high places everywhere, yes, even this distinguished assembly may count among its members men who were Boy Scouts in their teens.

A listing of prominent business executives, judges, bishops, college presidents, leaders of the Armed Forces, scientists,

United Nations representatives, and other successful men—all former Boy Scouts—would be formidable. Yes, gentlemen, the Boy Scouts of America has taken its rightful place in our national life and is recognized everywhere as one of our greatest assets.

Scouting is teaching our boys to be honorable, to be self-reliant, and to be participating citizens when they attain manhood. Through its program of camping, hiking, swimming, life saving, and other skills, it is preparing our young men to take care of themselves and to help others in time of emergency. Many a veteran of the last world war, yes even in Korea today, has survived or has been able to save the life of a fellow serviceman, because of his Boy Scout training.

Boy Scouts do their best to live up to the Scout oath and law. Before he may become a Scout, a boy must promise: "On my honor I will do my best: to do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout law; to help other people at all times; to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

What a challenge that is for all of us. What a world this would be if every boy in every nation could be a Scout and as a man conduct his family, business, and civic affairs on the basis of the Scout oath. What a lesson we legislators may learn in meeting our various responsibilities, not only in the United States, but throughout the world.

Scouting is organized in 47 different freedom-loving lands. It is not permitted in Soviet Russia and has been suppressed in countries now under control of the Kremlin.

The Boy Scouts of America were instrumental in reestablishing the Scout movement in Korea after 1945. Boy Scout handbooks in the Korean language were donated by our Scouts and large shipments of uniforms were sent to the Scouts of that nation. Much of this has been destroyed, but the Korean Scout leaders are prepared to reorganize as soon as peace comes to that unhappy land. Since the overthrow of the former government at Peiping, nothing has been heard from the Chinese Boy Scouts Association. Communism will not tolerate the Boy Scout movement anywhere.

One of the significant events in the history of the Boy Scouts of America was the great national jamboree held at Valley Forge, Pa., last summer. A total of 47,163 Boy Scouts and leaders camped together for 1 week on ground hallowed by the memory of George Washington and his faithful band of men who suffered so much for our freedom and liberty during those winter days of 1777–78. Scouts traveled to Valley Forge from all parts of our great Nation; and were thrilled when President Truman, as honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America, officially opened the jamboree on the evening of June 30. They were again enthusiastic hosts to General Eisenhower on the evening of July 4. The national jamboree was a great assembly of brother Scouts dedicated to their 2-year crusade to "strengthen liberty." It was a great patriotic pilgrimage, and profoundly enriched the Scouts' appreciation of their own United States. This national jamboree was the largest gathering of boys in the Western Hemisphere.

As Scouting completes its forty-first year, let us be thankful that we have in our Nation's life a movement which is dedicated to the character building and citizenship training of our boys and young men. The Boy Scout movement deserves the wholehearted support of the American people. It is a most effective program in preparing tomorrow's men for their duty to God, to other people, and to themselves in their Nation and the world.

ADMINISTRATION OF BLACKFEET RESERVATION IN MONTANA

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a news release issued today by George Pambrun, a full-blooded Indian, of Browning, Mont. He is chairman of the Tribal Council of the Blackfeet Tribe of Montana.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIAN BUREAU INCITING MONTANA RANGE WAR

(Statement of George Pambrun, chairman of the Tribal Council of the Blackfeet Tribe of Montana)

The Indian Bureau is doing its best to stir up an old-fashioned cowboy-and-Indian war on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana. I predict that the Indian Bureau will not be successful in its efforts to persuade white sheepmen and cattlemen to run their stock on Indian lands and to ignore Indian protests. The Blackfeet Council has run a series of public advertisements in leading Montana newspapers warning sheepmen and cattlemen to keep their stock off tribal lands unless they secure tribal consent. The advertisements point out that the Indian Bureau is violating the law by issuing grazing permits for the use of Indian land without tribal consent and in violation of the Federal law requiring "the consent of the tribe."

Indian Bureau bureaucrats are selling grazing permits on our Blackfeet tribal land over the protest of the tribal council. They are doing this in defiance of the Federal law requiring the "consent of the tribe" for grazing permits on Indian land. They are fooling some cattlemen and sheepmen by telling them that the Blackfeet Council has consented to the sale, when in fact our council has adopted several resolutions—all by unanimous vote—withholding consent to such sales of grazing permits. After all, this land belongs to us Indians. The Indian Bureau bureaucrats charge us with being "picketers" because we warned bidders that the auction was unauthorized and illegal.

Since when does an American citizen become a "picketer" just because he wants to hold on to his own land and refuses to allow a Federal bureaucrat to lease his land without his consent? We Blackfeet may have red skins but we believe in private ownership. The Indian Bureau is now using methods of Communist dictatorship against our people. We are now denied the right to lease or use our own lands as we see fit. Indians, especially veterans, who are running small herds of our own cattle on our own lands are now being liquidated by a 100 percent increase in rentals that the Indian Bureau is imposing, despite the protests of the tribe. The Indian Bureau grazing experts say they know best how our lands should be used, but in fact they are using their control over our Blackfeet lands to reward their friends. Stalin could learn a lot about how to run a dictatorship just by watching the Indian Bureau.

Bidders stayed away in droves from the "phony" Indian Bureau auction of Blackfeet grazing leases last week.

There was active competition on only about 1 percent of the grazing units. On about 39 percent of the range units only a single bid was received, in many cases from friends of Indian Bureau officials. The Indian Bureau wants to dispose of about 50 percent of the grazing units on its own terms to nonbidders. On another 10 percent of the range units the Indian Bureau could not find any bidders or non-bidders to take good Blackfeet land on Indian Bureau terms.

We are asking Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman to set aside the phony Indian Bureau auction and to see that the Federal laws guaranteeing our own rights to our own land are observed. If that is done, we are prepared to auction off grazing permits to the public on the land we don't need for our own Indian cattle.

THE PRICE OF EGGS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a letter dated February 3, 1951, from Oakes, N. Dak. The letter reads as follows:

OAKES, N. DAK., February 3, 1951.

Hon. Senator LANGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Producers are receiving 25 cents for eggs in Oakes while our relatives and friends in Twin Cities—referring to Minneapolis and St. Paul—are paying 69 cents to 72 cents a dozen.

Eggs cannot be produced for 30 cents a dozen. What's to be done about this?

Yours truly,

B. A. STEVENS.

I have also received a letter from Pingree, N. Dak., dealing with the price of eggs, and enclosing a slip showing the price for which the farmer sold eggs. I ask unanimous consent that the sales slip be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the sales slip was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Name: C. E. Brady.

	Dozen	Eggs	Price	Amount
PB's	2	1	.0.33	$0.69
No. 2		4	.23	.08
B (Large air cells)	4	7	.26	1.19
Tota. amount				1.96
Total	6	12

Date: Jan. 12, 1951.

PETERSON-BIDDICK CO.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I invite attention to the fact that while farmers are receiving only from 21 to 25 cents a dozen for their eggs, the prices of things which the farmer buys have greatly risen, as is indicated in a letter I have received from George Schonberger, president of the Nonpartisan League of North Dakota. He says:

In 1945 a swather canvas cost me $16. I replaced it in 1949 and it cost $32.50. John Sinner bought the same one in 1950 and paid $51.50, and none compared with the one I bought in 1945.

So we have a situation in which the price of a canvas for a swather jumped from $16 in 1945 to $32.50 in 1949 and $51.50 this year. That is a striking example of how the price of everything the farmer must buy has gone up, while the price of the things he sells remains about the same.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN OFFICE OF PRICE STABILIZATION AND THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE ON ENFORCEMENT OF CONTROLS

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article entitled "Enforcing of Controls in Dispute," written by Marshall Andrews, and published in the Washington Post of today.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENFORCING OF CONTROLS IN DISPUTE—LANGUAGE OF ACT LEAVES DOUBT OVER HANDLING OF CASES—OPS HALTS RECRUITING

(By Marshall Andrews)

An apparent discrepancy in the Defense Production Act yesterday threatened a dispute over wage and price enforcement which may have to go to the White House for settlement.

The act under which the Office of Economic Stabilization was set up specifically provides that all litigation arising out of it must be conducted by the Justice Department. But elsewhere it says enforcement of controls cannot be "delegated" to any other agency.

This seeming conflict in the law came to a head Wednesday. F. Joseph Donohue, installed Monday as enforcement officer for Michael V. DiSalle's Office of Price Stabilization, called DiSalle's attention to the language of the law after studying it closely. He told DiSalle OPS apparently was unable to enforce its orders and recruiting of an enforcement staff was temporarily halted.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, had announced formation of a special unit to handle price-control litigation under the Production Act. In some quarters this move was interpreted as a move by Justice to seize powers which should belong to OPS.

This view was rejected flatly last night by Peyton Ford, assistant to the Attorney General. Ford told the Washington Post the Justice Department normally handles all litigation for all but a few Federal agencies.

"We have charge of all litigation under the Defense Production Act," he said, "and we intend to do our duty."

He added that he thought court action by the Justice Department on the basis of investigation by OPS would enforce controls "more effectively than under the old Office of Price Administration," which handled its own civil litigation during World War II.

Civil cases under the act are those in which the Government sues for damages, seeks court orders to obey its rulings, and the like. Criminal cases are those in which an individual or a firm is charged with violations of the act which carry fines and jail sentences as penalties.

One price-control official suggested two methods by which the differences arising from the apparent contradiction in the law might be ironed out:

1. Let the Justice Department redelegate civil prosecution to OPS by appointing several OPS lawyers acting assistant attorneys general.

2. Have Congress amend the act to permit OPS lawyers to appear in court to prosecute civil cases.

Ford said last night that such authority had been redelegated to "many" agencies as suggested by the OPS official. He did not say that this action was contemplated in the present case.

Unless some amicable arrangement is reached, OPS officials fear paralysis of the price-control effort by lawyers for defendants challenging in court the authority of either OPS or the Justice Department to prosecute.

In any event, it seemed clear that somebody will have to decide, at least for the time being, what Congress meant when it wrote a seeming contradiction into the law.

MAYORS' AID ASKED

No doubt Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston or Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson can decide whether OPS will surrender prosecution of civil cases. But only President Truman can resolve the difference if the stabilization agency insists on its interpretation of the law.

DiSalle, meanwhile, opened a Nation-wide drive for citizens committees to stimulate voluntary observance of control orders. He telegraphed mayors of 1,523 cities asking them to appoint committees whose task would be to keep citizens informed of control measures.

At the same time he promised "relentless prosecution" of price-control violators and told businessmen, who complied with voluntary price ceilings in December, they would be given higher ceilings when compulsory orders go into effect.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a 2-minute statement with regard to the article which has just been placed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, on the first page of this morning's Washington Post there appears an article headed: "Enforcing of Controls in Dispute." The article was written by Mr. Marshall Andrews. It pertains to a controversy which has arisen between officials of the Office of Price Stabilization and the Department of Justice. The difference of opinion stems from what Mr. Andrews calls "an apparent discrepancy" in the Defense Production Act of 1950.

Mr. President, as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I recall the hours and the effort which went into the drafting of this legislation. As the author of one of the sections to which this newspaper article refers, I feel some responsibility for defending it and for resolving, if I can, the current misunderstanding. There may well be discrepancies in the Defense Production Act, but there is none in the sections now in dispute. From their language, and from the report of the Senate on the bill, I believe the intent of Congress is as clear and unambiguous as words can make it.

The first section in question is section 403 of the act, which prohibits the delegation of enforcement powers. It reads in part as follows:

> At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally * * * he shall administer such controls * * * through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency * * * shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

This language was drafted by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, and was accepted by the committee of conference to achieve and preserve a close interrelationship between the price- and wage-control programs, and to insure that the over-all responsibility would lie in the hands of a single administrator, to whom the Congress might address itself. In the words of the Senate report:

> The committee was fearful that the delegation of Presidential authority to various executive agencies might lead to the dispersion of the price authority, for example, to two or more agencies with different standards of treatment for different classes of producers; or that the authority to control wages might be too far removed from the authority to control prices. In such cases the coordination by the President could be only nominal because of the great burdens borne by the President. The committee therefore provided that a single, new, independent agency should be responsible for the enforcement of all aspects of the program.

The new and independent agency to which the report refers is, of course, the Economic Stabilization Agency, and the man who is firmly responsible for its operations is Mr. Eric Johnston. So much of the congressional intent was apparently clear and was acted upon accordingly.

Mr. President, were the act otherwise silent on this matter, there would be merit in the contention of the official of the Price Stabilization Agency quoted in the news article in this morning's Post. But the act is specific and detailed with respect to litigation arising under it. Section 706 (b) of the act provides in part:

> All litigation arising under this act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

Again, I do not see how the intent of the Congress could have been made more clear. Mindful of the abuses which arose during the administration of price controls during World War II, and anxious to avoid a repetition of such miserable administration, the Congress wisely exempted the power to appear in court from the enforcement powers granted to the price and wage control agency, and vested that power where it belongs—in the hands of the Attorney General of the United States. This salutary action on the part of Congress represented no lack of confidence in Mr. Johnston or Mr. DiSalle or Mr. Ching. At that time they had not been appointed, and no one imagined who the personnel would be. It represented, rather, a demonstration of the recognition by Congress that court appearances on behalf of the Government of the United States are peculiarly the exclusive province of the Attorney General. It represented the confidence of the Congress in the integrity of the Attorney General and the United States attorneys throughout the Nation. It represented a protest against and a safeguarding against the methods used during the last attempt at enforcing price and wage controls by a centralized agency in Washington. Finally, it represented a firm belief on the part of the Congress that this law, as any other law, should be finally enforced in court by the properly constituted local representative of the Government of the United States.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I was struck by the suggested remedies for the situation, as reported in this article, attributed to an unnamed official of the price control agency. They are, first, to let the Justice Department redelegate—although there was no delegation in the first place—the powers assigned it to the Office of Price Stabilization, from whom Congress withheld those powers. The second suggestion is that Congress amend the law. At the risk of seeming to propose a revolutionary change, Mr. President, I respectfully suggest a third alternative, namely, that the price-control agency comply with the law as enacted by the Congress of the United States.

REDUCTION OF BUDGET PROPOSALS—ANALYSIS BY SENATOR BYRD

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an analysis with recommendations as to the reduction of budget proposals.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS BY SENATOR BYRD

In a letter to the President on December 22, 1950, I suggested reductions in nonessential spending totaling $7,600,000,000, based largely on estimated expenditures during the present fiscal year.

On January 15 the President submitted his budget for next fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, recommending domestic-civilian expenditures totaling more than $1,000,000,000 in excess of the estimates for this fiscal year. For this reason I am now revising my proposal to reduce nonessential Federal expenditures by $9,100,000,000 in comparison with the President's budget for next year.

Conditions confronting us make an austerity budget imperative, and that is what I propose. At a time when our survival depends upon national sacrifice I would strike pet projects and political spending not essential to defense. Even then my figure would allow more for domestic-civilian purposes than we spent in 1946 when we were descending from peak defense requirements.

For 1952 the President lumps foreign military and economic aid in a total of $7,500,000,000 and it is difficult to determine whether a large part of it is for military or economic assistance. I propose to eliminate all economic aid except that in the so-called pipeline. Previous estimates indicated economic aid this year would approach $4,000,000,000. If economic aid expenditures next year are comparable my proposal would save some $3,500,000,000. We can't send butter and guns.

I agree with the President that we must tax until it hurts and I would go further and reduce nonessential spending until it hurts. Without this combination we cannot hope to balance the budget or curb inflation, and we would impose an impossible burden on the free-enterprise system. We would start a series of deficits which may end in financial disaster.

The free-enterprise system is a greater deterrent to world conflict and a more dependable guardian of peace than a United Nations organization ever will be. It is the only force in the world today that Russia fears. It must be preserved.

TAXES

Within the past year Federal taxes on income of individuals and corporations have been increased $8,000,000,000.

In his January budget message the President asked for $16,500,000,000 more in taxes during the coming year.

If these should be imposed Federal taxes would be increased more than 60 percent since last year.

EXPENDITURES

The President's expenditure budget proposes increases in every major category except veterans, and there the reductions are principally in World War II adjustment programs which are expiring. There are increases for interest, defense, foreign assistance, and domestic-civilian programs. Interest is the only category in which reductions are impossible.

The President has proposed domestic-civilian expenditures totaling $9,800,000,000, exclusive of defense, foreign assistance, interest on the debt, veterans, and exclusive of military supporting activities such as stockpiling, NACA, selective service, Merchant Marine, Coast Guard, Alaska and Panama development, and atomic energy.

This is an increase of $1,300,000,000 over estimated expenditures for domestic-civilian items for the current year. It is $500,000,000 more than we spent for domestic-civilian items last year. It is $3,700,000,000 more than we spent for domestic-civilian items in 1948 when postwar peace and prosperity were thought to be inclined toward stability. It is $6,200,000,000 more than we spent for domestic-civilian items in 1946 when, as now, we were in a semiwar economy.

Just as in the World War II period, agencies all over the Government are again attempting to increase their expenditures on the grounds that they are contributing to national defense.

Actually the proposed domestic-civilian items in the President's budget include all the major socialistic programs of recent years—socialized housing, agriculture, and medicine, and federalized education. This year we are told they are imperative to preparedness and national defense.

While the domestic-civilian programs include the so-called defense production and civilian defense items, many of them are both priced excessively in the budget and are open to boondoggle exploitation by Federal, State, and local agencies. For instance there would be enough so-called "defense production business loans" available to fill the woods with Lustron corporations.

DEFICIT

When the budget appeared there were increases in more than half of the domestic-civilian programs, decreases in about a third, and the remainder were about the same as estimates for this year.

The President said we must be taxed until it hurts. He did not propose that we reduce domestic-civilian expenditures until it hurts. Instead he relies on last September's $4,000,000,000 tax increase twice doubled to provide a balanced budget. This of course would assume:

1. Enactment of such tremendous new levies on individual and corporate income;

2. Our free enterprise system, already taxed nearly to confiscation, can expand plant, production and employment sufficiently to generate the income to produce this additional revenue; and

3. We shall remain in a "short of war" status.

Failure of any or all of these "ifs" to materialize would precipitate deficits which might easily go to $25,000,000,000 annually, unless we reduce expenditures.

DEBT

We entered World War I with a Federal debt of little more than $1,000,000,000. We started preparation for World War II with a Federal debt of little more than $40,000,000,000. We start the present military-defense-preparedness build-up with a Federal debt of more than a quarter of a trillion dollars. On this plateau of debt we shall pile the deficits we create from now on.

Like Samson's locks, our free enterprise system is the source of our strength—economic and military. The free enterprise system has absorbed an awful lot of hurtful taxes, but it cannot survive in insolvency, or even in an atmosphere of fiscal weakness.

SUGGESTED REDUCTIONS

Obviously our strength and preparedness in all respects depend upon reduction in nonessential spending.

To this end, in a letter to the President on December 22, 1950, I suggested reductions totaling between $7,000,000,000 and $8,000,000,000 in the expenditure budget for the coming year, beginning next July 1.

These reductions included a relatively small amount in Veterans' Administration and nonessential veterans' programs, excluding, of course, veterans' pensions and medical services; a half billion dollars through reduction in civilian employment by the military establishment; $3,500,000,000 from reductions in foreign economic assistance; and $3,600,000,000 from reductions in domestic-civilian programs.

Now that the President has submitted his requests for expenditures in fiscal year 1952, beginning next July 1, I restate my reduction suggestions in comparison with his new proposals. My suggestions may be summarized as follows:

	Billions
1. The Veterans' Administration, now employing nearly 200,000, uses manpower excessively and it has been my observation that its administrative costs could and should be reduced without impairment of any services for veterans to whom the Government is obligated for bona fide war-connected sacrifices. Under terms of the recent single appropriation bill the Director of the Budget has demonstrated the accuracy of this observation and the President's budget proved still further reduction can be made. I suggest additional reductions in administrative costs and nonessential programs to the extent of	$0.2
2. The Armed Forces are notorious for extravagant use of civilian manpower. They have been employing approximately 1 civilian for each 2 men in uniform as compared with 1 civilian for each 5 men in uniform at the World War II peak. The military effort would be strengthened if, through greatly needed efficiency, the Military Establishment's projected civilian employment of more than 1,250,000 were reduced by at least 150,000 with a saving of	.5
3. In my Dec. 22 letter to the President I proposed a reduction of up to $3,500,000,000 in foreign economic aid. This suggestion was based on the estimate then that $4,000,000,000 would be spent in foreign economic aid in the current year. When the President submitted his budget he failed to disclose his complete estimate of the foreign economic aid expenditures in the coming year. Instead he combined foreign economic and military aid. His estimate for the combined aid in the current fiscal year was a total of $4,700,000,000 and his request for the combined aid in the coming year totaled $7,500,000,000. Such detail as is available in the budget document indicates that military assistance in the current year may be estimated at up to $1,000,000,000, leaving up to nearly $4,000,000,000 in foreign economic assistance. The budget detail reveals only $2,500,000,000 for military assistance in the estimates for the coming fiscal year, leaving up to $5,000,000,000 in foreign aid and other expenditures connected with foreign relations not specifically earmarked for military assistance. The budget message said the preponderance of aid in Europe will be military, but economic aid, through point 4 and other programs, around the rest of the world, with emphasis on Asia, Near East, and South America, was discussed at length. The foreign economic assistance policy was originally adopted by this country on the assumption that it would expire next year. Military assistance is already overlapping economic aid in most recipient areas. Foreign economic aid in the new budget should not exceed commitments already made. Pending clarification and more specific estimates on expenditures for economic foreign aid I suggest reductions in economic assistance expenditures of up to	$3.5
4. With reductions suggested in detail in the tables which follow, expenditures for domestic-civilian programs, including the postal deficit, should be reduced under the President's latest proposals by	4.9
Total reductions under President's Jan. 15 expenditure budget requests	9.1

Total domestic—civilian [1]	3.6	6.1	9.3	8.6	9.8	4.9

[1] Figures may not add precisely to totals due to rounding.

Figures in the preceding domestic-civilian expenditure table, and in the more detailed table which is to follow, are exclusive of all military and related expenditure objects such as atomic energy, merchant marine, stockpile, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, Panama Canal, Coast Guard, and Alaska construction and transportation projects. They do not include any foreign military or economic aid expenditures. They do not include any veterans costs. They do not include any interest on the debt or refunds of erroneously collected taxes.

STATE AID

Expenditures for State-aid programs, now totaling nearly $3,000,000,000, account for about 25 percent of the domestic-civilian budget. They are to be found running through virtually all of the so-called major functions in this category—public assistance and health, housing, education and research, agriculture, resources development and recreation, transportation (including highways and civilian airports), business promotion, employment, etc.

In this critical period when the Federal Government must arm this Nation and meet its commitments to prop up half the world, the question of merit under ordinary conditions is not the paramount consideration. The degree to which they support the defense effort must be the controlling factor. These State-aid items must be reached if we are to reduce nonmilitary expenditures to the minimum required to give effective support to the defense effort, as the President promised in his address to the Nation on December 15, 1950. Most of them are tied to long-term statutory commitments.

Changes in State budgets would be necessary in some instances and many would require new basic Federal legislation for repeal, amendment, or suspension. It was to be hoped that the President in his budget message would recommend such legislation. But such recommendations were conspicuous by their absence. The States are now better able than the Federal Government to determine and finance the irreducible minimum of public assistance, public construction, resources development, and public health within their borders. If we are to take action in this matter, as we should, the States should be given notice immediately in order that they may conform.

CIVILIAN DEFENSE

Although the figures are scattered throughout many items in the budget document with no summary, it appears that the President has requested up to approximately $3,000,000,000 for so-called defense production loans and subsidies and for so-called civilian-defense projects exclusive of atomic energy, merchant marine, etc. In this $3,000,000,000 total there are included $265,000,000 for civilian-defense preparation including grants to States and localities for air-raid shelters, etc., something under $200,000,000 for defense housing and community facilities, $164,000,000 for dispersal of Government activities, and about $300,000,000 for economic-stabilization programs, including the cost of controls. The biggest item of all is $1,100,000,000 for so-called defense production loans and subsidies to business. The remainder of the civilian-defense and defense production money is scattered through numerous agencies and programs, including CAA, reclamation, highways, etc.

I suggest that the funds for defense production loans and civilian defense be reduced to not more than $1,500,000,000.

The principal difference between this suggestion and the President's budget proposals would be in the so-called defense production business loans and subsidies and in the virtual elimination of the proposal to disperse Government activities. I suggest elimination from the defense production loan and subsidy funds of all of the money proposed to be used as a club or blackjack over private business as a Government threat to establish plants in competition with private industry. I suggest that, as in the rest of the Nation, only those Government records and activities vital to the continuity of essential Government functions be removed to especially protected and secluded areas.

My suggestions leave adequate money for the civilian-defense program in terms of State and local shelter loans, essential emergency housing in defense areas, administration of necessary controls, and short-term business loans for defense plant expansion.

DOMESTIC-CIVILIAN PROGRAM

As I have shown in the preceding table, domestic-civilian expenditures may be grouped into 9 major functions. My suggested reductions cover nearly 100 domestic-civilian programs within these 9 major functions. In addition to the more detailed discussion of the State-aid and civilian defense programs already given, my suggested reductions within the programs should be considered in view of the following explanations:

1. With respect to the social welfare, health and security function and programs: Most of the reduction proposals would be in public assistance and institutional construction grants to the States. The contributory social security system of course would not be affected. The original purpose of other public assistance grants was to fill gaps in the social security program. Social security insurance has been broadened this year. The war effort will require the labor of all who are able to work. Scarcity of materials automatically will curtail or halt nondefense construction. After the reductions suggested in this item it would still be a quarter of a billion dollars higher than it was in fiscal year 1946 when World War II ended.

2. With respect to housing and community facilities (including mortgage purchases): Adequate war effort precludes nonessential housing construction. This program already has been curtailed. It should be eliminated with the exception of essential defense housing. No new money would be provided, but returns from previous loans should meet the cost of housing for the war effort and finance State and local shelter grants. Repayments in these programs during fiscal year 1943, when the war ended, exceeded expenditures.

3. With respect to education and general research: This item includes an increase for scientific research directed to the war effort which is not evident in the rounded figures. Other items remain virtually unchanged from the present except a reduction in funds for the census.

4. With respect to agriculture and agricultural resources (including Commodity Credit Corporation): Reductions in this item are principally in Commodity Credit Corporation price supports and nonessential rural electrification construction. Price support receipts this year are exceeding expenditures. If food subsidies have to be imposed, such as they were in World War II, price support receipts should meet the cost as they did at that time. The reduced figure contemplates expenditures for rural electrification construction essential to the war effort.

5. With respect to natural resources: Major reductions in this item would be in nonessential public works by the Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. But funds remaining for these projects would be 25 percent more than was available in fiscal year 1946 when we had both war and postwar conditions.

6. With respect to transportation and communication (including the postal deficit): Decreases in this item would be in nonessential highway, airport, and Army engineers construction, and the postal deficit. As in other categories of construction scarcity of materials automatically will halt or curtail all nonmilitary effort construction. The postal deficit should be wiped out under any circumstances. Those who use the mails should be willing to pay for the service. It disappeared during World War II. It should be eliminated now. Funds are provided for navigation aids and facilities, and regulation of transportation and communication necessary to the war effort.

7. With respect to finance, commerce, and industry: Reductions are made in expenditures for ordinary activities under this item but increases would be provided for export and domestic controls along with others provided for in the General Government function. Funds are provided also for short-term capital loans to industry for defense production expansion, but not for establishment of Government plants.

8. With respect to labor: The figures in this item contemplate the 1946 level of activity with an increase provided for labor training.

9. With respect to General Government: Provision is made for increased immigration control costs. It is assumed that some of the civilian controls incident to current conditions will be reflected in the cost of General Government functions. The suggested reduction takes into account increased costs of Federal civilian retirement.

SEMIWAR ECONOMY

It may be worthy of note that the following tables include comparative figures for fiscal year 1946. In that year we were descending from peak military requirements, and a good many wartime controls and activities were still in being, although curtailment was in progress during most of the year. In the coming year we shall be ascending in the direction of peak military requirements with controls and war-economy activities building up. Under my suggested reductions total expenditures for domestic-civilian programs in the coming fiscal year would be 30 to 40 percent higher than they were in fiscal year 1946.

Reductions suggested in domestic-civilian expenditures by programs within major functions are shown in the tabulation which follows:

EFFICIENT OPERATION OF GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 3 or 4 minutes at this time, in making a statement for the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, in this time of expanding and wasteful Government, I desire to pay public tribute to a man and an agency for proving that efficient economy can be practiced—even here in Washington. It only takes the will to do it.

I refer to Lindsay C. Warren, the Comptroller General of the United States, and to the General Accounting Office which he heads.

I understand every Member of Congress received a copy of the letter of Mr. Warren dated January 29. The letter mentioned several important facts, including the reduction in personnel achieved by GAO in the past 5 years. In April 1946 the agency reached a peak of 14,904 employees. This number was whittled away, until it was down to 7,063 by the beginning of 1951. This was a reduction of 7,841 persons. It was done by increasing efficiency.

However, there are some figures which were not included in Mr. Warren's letter. I asked for them. I have just received the information, and want to call it to the attention of the Senate. It is further proof of the remarkable job done by Mr. Warren.

The salaries of the 14,904 employees in 1946 totaled $39,236,900 for that year. If there had been no reduction in staff during the past 5 years, the various salary increments to Federal employees in that period would have brought the total salaries up to $61,702,560 for this year.

But the General Accounting Office's budget for the new fiscal year asks only $30,325,000 for salaries. Thus, the saving in personnel will mean an important dollar saving for the taxpayers in the 1 year. It comes to $31,377,560.

Let me go further and remind the Senate of another point. In the past several years, most Federal agencies have grown in staff size. They have not reduced. Consider the millions of additional dollars it would cost our citizens if the General Accounting Office had been growing.

The GAO is an example of how big cuts can be made in the civilian personnel of the nondefense agencies; and I am sure greater efficiency and economy could be brought into the defense agencies, as well.

The saving of 7,841 persons in personnel is the equivalent of more than two full regiments of infantry.

If this kind of efficiency were spread all across the Government, we would have hundreds of thousands of civilians who could be used for the Armed Forces and for essential jobs. It would go a long way toward reducing the manpower squeeze. The saving could bring many divisions to the armed services.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, Mr. Warren's letter, a copy of which was received by every Senator.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 29, 1951.

DEAR SENATOR: With the many vital problems before the Congress today, I know you don't have time to read annual reports of Government agencies. Anyway, ours is still in the process of printing. But, knowing of the interest of Members in the General Accounting Office, an agent of the Congress and a part of the legislative branch, I believe there are certain facts you will want to know. That is the reason for this letter.

The General Accounting Office is an independent and non-political agency. It is a part of our system of checks and balances. It audits and settles the accounts and claims of the Government, and advises and assists the Congress and the agencies on matters relating to expenditures.

The Comptroller General is appointed for a term of 15 years and cannot be reappointed. He can be removed from office only by the Congress.

During recent years, when it seems the Government has been expanding beyond all reasonable comprehension, the GAO has proved that it is possible to reduce employees. In April 1946, the number of employees reached a peak of 14,904. There were 7,063 employees on January 1, 1951, a reduction of 7,841 in the last 5 years, of whom 779 were transferred to the Post Office Department. This has been accomplished through constant surveys of our work and the elimination of procedures which serve no useful purpose under present conditions.

For example, just recently I abolished the Accounting and Bookkeeping Division of the GAO. This Division employed 325 people. Certain of the work formerly carried on by that Division has been transferred to other divisions. However, it will be possible to carry out the work transferred with 61 people, making a reduction of 264 people and an annual salary savings to the GAO of nearly $1,000,000. There will be no loss of control of public funds. In fact, the revised procedures should enable the GAO and the Government generally to do a more competent job.

While practically every agency of the Government will ask for increased funds for 1952, the GAO will request less money than was made available to us for 1951.

A few statistics on our work in the last year: 25,300,000 vouchers audited; 492,000 claims settled; 318,000,200 checks reconciled; 12,400 decisions rendered to departments, agencies, claimants, and others; inspections made of 945 different Government offices; 34 comprehensive audits submitted to Congress (for the first time since the Government Corporation Control Act of 1945 audits of Government corporations were up to date); 685 reports made to Congress and its committees; and 3,500 replies made to inquiries from individual Members of Congress.

The GAO is one of the few agencies that not only pays its way but in addition makes a substantial contribution each year to the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES DIGITIZED

Treasury. Collections from 1941 through December 31, 1950, total $718,100,000. This money had been illegally or otherwise improperly paid out and it is a fair statement to say that little of it would have ever been recovered except for the General Accounting Office. Collections are impressive, but also important is the prevention of illegal or improvident use of funds without waiting to collect back what has been paid out illegally.

The joint accounting program inaugurated in December 1947 by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director, Bureau of the Budget, and myself is achieving remarkable success. As a result of the program and of legislation enacted by the Congress, accounting improvements and red-tape cutting are going forward with rapid acceleration.

The GAO is expanding comprehensive, on-the-site audits which bring about broader coverage, more effective results, less paper work, and reduced flow of documents into Washington.

During the Eighty-first Congress, the GAO supported the enactment of a number of laws which made possible some of the improvements just mentioned. Probably the most important are the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, and the Post Office Department Financial Control Act of 1950. The Budget and Accounting Procedures Act, among other things, permits the elimination of certain procedures upon determination that the interests of the Government are otherwise protected. This made possible the abolishment of the Accounting and Bookkeeping Division mentioned above, but this is only an example. Many other benefits have resulted and will continue to come about. The revisions of procedures and improvements made have reached into every agency of the Government.

The Post Office Department Financial Control Act made possible the abolishment of the Postal Accounts Division of the GAO last November 15. The administrative accounting work which had been done for the Post Office Department has been turned over to that Department. The GAO should never have been given those duties in the first place. I have set up a new Postal Audit Division which will make comprehensive, up-to-date audits of postal financial transactions.

It is essential to our economic survival not only that the national defense be strengthened, but that it be done as effectively and economically as possible. On this score, the GAO bids fair to make a real contribution. We will not only audit defense spending, but will also concentrate to seek out excesses, waste, and extravagances in the defense program. At the same time, we will continue to keep a watchful eye on civilian spending to ferret out those extravagances and frills which our country should not and cannot now endure.

This letter is for your own information and no reply is necessary.

With best wishes, I am,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, Mr. Warren's memorandum to me setting forth these figures.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Appropriation for the General Accounting Office for the fiscal year 1946, when a peak of 14,904 employees was reached	$39,236,900
Had reductions in personnel not been made in the past 5 years and 14,904 were required for the fiscal year 1952, and taking into consideration pay raises that have been given employees by law since 1946, there would be required for the General Accounting Office for 1952 an appropriation of	$61,702,560
Budget estimates for the General Accounting Office for the fiscal year 1952 are	30,325,000
Projected cost on the basis of 14,904 for 1952	61,702,560
Actual budget estimates for the fiscal year 1952	30,325,000
Difference	31,377,560

WILLIAM THE SILENT AWARD

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have two matters I wish to have inserted in the RECORD, but I should like to have unanimous consent to read two pages of explanation of one, and unanimous consent to take not more than 2 minutes to explain the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, recently the people of the Netherlands established an annual journalism award, known as the William the Silent Award, to commemorate 14 brave American correspondents who were killed in an airplane crash near Bombay on July 12, 1949, on their return trip from an assignment in Indonesia. The first annual award was presented to Daniel L. Schorr, special correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, at a reception and dinner at the Waldorf Astoria on November 2, 1950. The President of the United States, deeply moved by this gesture of friendship on the part of the people of the Netherlands, gave his blessing in the following message:

I am indeed happy to take note of the gracious gesture which the people of the Netherlands are making through establishment of the William the Silent Award, in memory of the 14 distinguished American correspondents who were killed in a plane crash while returning from Indonesia a year ago. In terms of money the award is most generous, but even more impressive is the spirit which prompted it. There could be no more suitable memorial to the newspapermen who so tragically lost their lives than this splendid contribution to a better understanding among the peoples of the world.

By way of digression, Mr. President, I desire to say that it is not at all surprising that the President of the United States should send such an inspiring message to the banquet at the Waldorf Astoria on the occasion of the awarding of this particular award. One has only to read the great inspirational speech of the President last Saturday at Philadelphia in dedicating the memorial to the four war hero chaplains honored at that service to understand the deep human feelings and human understanding of the President of the United States. In this particular message which he sent to the meeting at the Waldorf Astoria in connection with this award, he again demonstrated that depth of human understanding.

Also at that meeting Dr. William Drees, Prime Minister of the Netherlands, expressed his fullest approval by the following message:

I warmly approve of the establishment of the annual William the Silent Award for Journalism in memory of the American journalists who lost their lives in the line of duty on their return from Indonesia.

The bonds between Holland and the United States of America are centuries old. Netherlands initiative has contributed to the establishment of the first settlements on the North American Continent. During the formation of the American Republic, Benjamin Franklin testified how much Americans and Dutch had in common in their pursuit of freedom. This the William the Silent medal will commemorate.

The Second World War, during which America contributed so much to the liberation of the Netherlands, has forged new ties. May this award, which through its name and its symbol is dedicated to the great founder of Netherlands freedom, further fortify these ties between us.

This event, Mr. President, is, in my considered opinion, one of great international import and deserves to be recorded in the annals of human relations. In these troublous times, when the world democracies seek to draw closer together to form an impenetrable ring against the threat of totalitarian aggression, any gesture which aims at cementing friendships between those democracies with a common goal, becomes by itself a project for the advancement of human welfare and the attainment of world peace.

The United States, Mr. President, is now facing formidable enemies whose plan and purpose are to attack the very foundation of our democracy and the concept of human dignity to which our Government and Nation are dedicated; but the United States can proudly count upon the friendship of many nations whose devotion to a common democratic ideal is well-known to everyone. Among these nations is the Netherlands. I was deeply moved, Mr. President, as were the President of the United States and many other Americans prominent in every walk of life, by the noble example of the people of Holland in connection with this award.

Although I knew casually many of the newspapermen who lost their lives in the crash in Indonesia, I had two very close personal friends among them, Frederick W. Colvig, of the Denver Post, formerly of the Portland Oregonian, and George Moorad, of the Portland Oregonian. As an Oregonian, I desire to join in my expression of deep appreciation to the officials of the Netherlands for the tribute and recognition they have given to these great newspapermen, in memory of their heroic services in Indonesia on the mission which ended in their deaths. With this in mind, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD an account of the proceedings of the presentation of the William the Silent Award, together with the text of the article which won the award.

There being no objection, the account of the proceedings and the text of the article which won the award were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST WILLIAM THE SILENT AWARD PRESENTED AT WALDORF—FOURTEEN AMERICAN CORRESPONDENTS WHO DIED IN BOMBAY CRASH HONORED IN SILENT TRIBUTE—FOUR HUNDRED GUESTS PROMINENT IN GOVERNMENT AND JOURNALISM ATTEND PRESENTATION DINNER—DANIEL L. SCHORR, CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR CORRESPONDENT, WINS FIRST ANNUAL AWARD

At a reception and dinner at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel on November 2 the first annual William the Silent Award for Journalism was presented to Daniel L. Schorr, special correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Four hundred guests prominent in journalism, education, and government witnessed the presentation of a gold medal and $2,500 in cash by Albert Balink, chairman of the award committee, to Erwin Canham, editor of the Monitor, who accepted the prize for Mr. Schorr, who is now in Amsterdam.

The award was given to Mr. Schorr for having written, in the opinion of the judges, the best article published in an American newspaper or magazine during 1949 on United States-Netherlands relations.

His article was a simple story of the reciprocation of a small Netherlands town to a town in Arkansas when it was struck by a tornado in January 1949. The town was Borculo, Holland, which in 1925 had suffered a similar catastrophe, and the American people contributed to the rebuilding of the town. Mr. Schorr's article told how the whole town of Borculo devoted all its limited resources toward the restoration of the grassroots American town.

The national committee for the award consisted of John C. L. Andreassen, Director of Administration of the Library of Congress; Herman B. Baruch, former United States Ambassador to the Netherlands; Elliott V. Bell, publisher of Business Week; Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture; George T. Cameron, president of the San Francisco Chronicle; Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor; Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of the Interior; Fred S. Ferguson, president of N. E. A. Service, Inc.; Palmer Hoyt, editor and publisher of the Denver Post; Julius Klein, brigadier general, United States Army; John S. Knight, publisher of the Chicago Daily News; James A. Linen, publisher of Time; Henry R. Luce, editor of Time, Life, and Fortune; E. B. MacNaughton, president of the Portland Oregonian; J. Howard McGrath, United States Attorney General; Curtis McGraw, president of McGraw-Hill Publishing Co.; Eugene Meyer, president of the Washington Post; Dr. J. H. van Roijen, Netherlands Ambassador to the United States; Walker Stone, editor of the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance; Theodore C. Streibert, president of radio station WOR; Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan-American World Airways System; and Alan Valentine, Economic Stabilization Administrator.

Judges of the competition were Peter Edson, president of Overseas Writers; Radford E. Mobley, president of the National Press Club; Thomas L. Stokes, president of the Gridiron Club; and Esther Van Wagoner Tufty, Washington correspondent. Members of the executive committee were Albert Balink, chairman; J. A. de Lanoy; Jan Hoven; and J. T. Pianje.

Chairman of the evening was Dr. Harry D. Gideonse, president of Brooklyn College, who introduced the other speakers. Mr. Balink addressed the gathering in his capacity as chairman of the executive committee. Following is the text of his remarks:

"We are gathered here in tribute to 14 American newspaper reporters who died in an airplane crash in Bombay, India, on July 12, 1949, on their return home from an assignment in Indonesia, which cut short their productive lives. These reporters went half way around the world seeking the truth in a complicated, explosive situation, from which emerged the new country of Indonesia. From the typewriters of these American newspapermen came neither the so-called 'Dutch' side nor the 'Indonesian side.' They only wrote the truth as they saw it. The people of the Netherlands understood and respected that.

"When the news of the death of these Americans reached Holland, the Dutch people were plunged into sorrow. The Honorable Dr. Herman Baruch, at that time the American Ambassador to the Netherlands, will tell you personally how the Dutch people took these Americans to their hearts.

"So that we may never forget them, and so that we may also honor the colleagues of these American newspapermen who are carrying on their work, the Netherlands people have established an annual award, to be called the 'William the Silent Award.' This award will be given to some member of the American working press for excellence in writing Netherlands-connected stories.

"In selecting the name 'William the Silent' the people of the Netherlands, who spontaneously made the award possible, reflect their grateful respect upon the 14 correspondents and the tradition of American journalism they represented. William the Silent was the kind of personality any newspaper writer would like to cover. He was the father of his country. He was to the seven provinces of the Netherlands what Washington is to the United States. He also might be called a 'Dutch' Thomas Jefferson. Born 400 years ago, William the Silent grew up in the perilous days of feudalism. Democracy was an unestablished ideal. But William the Silent believed in the democratic way of life, whether he called it that or not. Born a prince, he defied those of the ruling class who usurped unfair privileges. In the Netherlands history books he is quoted as saying: 'When a prince violates the peoples' right and tramples their liberties as if they are slaves, then he is not a prince but a tyrant.'

"Towering far above the times he lived, William the Silent was one of the first and one of the most valorous leaders in modern times who led the march toward the democratic way of life. He was intolerant of just one thing—intolerance. He gave all his wealth and all his inherited lands to the struggle for liberation of his country and, in a broader sense, to the cause of freedom of worship. As a result of his fight, Holland in subsequent years became the proverbial haven for the persecuted peoples of all Europe, whether they fled to this palladium of freedom because of religious or racial suppression.

"History also proclaims William the Silent as a brilliant conversationalist, and one of the most outspoken men of his time, although he was called 'William the Silent.' Some reporter of that time probably called him that because he kept his public speeches short and his secrets were kept secret. With silent strength he fought dictatorship and brought to his country freedom of worship and speech at a time of caste and prejudice. No wonder the people of Holland drafted him to be their king. Symbolically, he refused to wear a crown. So the people of Holland today put the name of their most beloved and revered national heroes upon the award honoring the American press.

"In honoring those 14 people, they aim to honor the idea of freedom of the press. Also, they humbly hope it may help two friendly countries become more friendly through a deeper mutual understanding. That's why the $2,500 annual award is to be given 'to encourage recognition of democratic kinship between the Netherlands and the United States of America.'

"The Netherlands Government, I want to make it clear, although warmly approving of this tribute, has not been asked to contribute. The sponsorship of the William the Silent Award for Journalism comes entirely from private sources—from the people of the Netherlands themselves. Benjamin Franklin and John Adams, signers of our Declaration of Independence, credited the Netherlands with holding the torch for what became the Republic of the United States. William the Silent first held that torch. The two countries have been friends ever since. They have helped each other. The Netherlands was the first to grant a loan to the fledgling Republic. The Netherlands was the first to salute the American flag. In more recent times, the two countries have fought on the same side in world struggles for freedom * * * and have worked together through the aftermath of rebuilding.

"We are honored tonight by the presence of many distinguished members of the American press who carry on the work of the men we commemorate today. We are honored tonight by the presence of many distinguished members of the Netherlands press whose reports about America to the people of the Netherlands account greatly for the admiration the Dutch people have for the people of the United States. We are honored tonight to have with us distinguished members of both Governments. We are honored to have in our midst almost all the distinguished members of the Netherlands delegation to the United Nations. We are honored tonight to have with us many distinguished leaders in business who keep going the machinery and the economy of the democratic countries.

"But all of us, as we are gathered here, whatever the exaltation or modesty of our way of life, we belong to the people. As such we are all vitally interested in the truth. Indeed, there is no one among us whose happiness does not depend on the truth. These correspondents knew it. And the newspapermen who are carrying on their work know it. They do not merely have a job. They are men dedicated to truth. They serve truth, for truth is democracy's strongest atom bomb. This constitutes a very good reason for the establishment of this journalism award. But there is another compelling reason.

"The pyramid of world peace is built by individual nations firmly working together. They build peace with the cement of truth. It is therefore, the belief of the Dutch founders of this living memorial, that there is nothing limited, that there is nothing provincial in the outspoken friendship between two democratic nations. In associating themselves with the William the Silent Award (this living memorial dedicated to truth), they are strengthening the lofty structure of the United Nations.

"The President of the United States said: 'There could be no more suitable memorial to the newspapermen who so tragically lost their lives than (the William the Silent Award) this splendid contribution to the better understanding among the peoples of the world.'

"And now in tribute may I ask you to rise while I read the names of those we honor today: Nathaniel H. Barrows, Chicago Daily News; James H. Branyan, Houston Post; Frederick W. Colvig, Denver Post; Elsie B. Dick, Mutual Broadcasting Co.; Thomas A. Falco, Business Week; Charles Edward Gratke, Christian Science Monitor; S. Burton Heath, Newspaper Enterprise Association; Bertram D. Hulen, the New York Times; H. R. Knickerbocker, radio station WOR, New York; Lynn C. Mahan, vice president, Theodore Swanson & Co.: Vincent Mahoney,

San Francisco Chronicle; George L. Moorad, Portland Oregonian; William R. Newton, Scripps-Howard newspapers; John G. Werkley, Time, Inc."

The 400 guests while standing, listened to the roll call of the correspondents in a silent and solemn tribute.

SPEECH BY AMBASSADOR VAN ROIJEN

Following Mr. Balink's address, Dr. Gideonse introduced Dr. J. H. van Roijen. Following is part of Dr. van Roijen's speech:

"The Prime Minister of the Netherlands, Dr. Drees, some months ago sent a message of encouragement and appreciation to the William the Silent Award Committee. The Netherlands Minister of Education recently announced that the designing of a medal had been decided on by the Government as a means of expressing their sympathy with and appreciation for the establishment of the award. I consider it a privilege to be here tonight, as the representative of and spokesman for that Government and to be able to add my personal tribute to theirs. The original idea of establishing the William the Silent Award was born in the minds of one or two private individuals and the funds necessary to finance the prize in this year and the coming years were donated by private persons and groups. To state this is not to reveal a secret, this fact is known and has been published before. I mention it again, however, to call special attention to what in my opinion is a very important aspect of this award and its background.

"It is fair to say that it is the Netherlands people who through some of their citizens have undertaken clearly to show that they wish to promote an ever growing consciousness of the democratic affinity between the United States and the Netherlands and that they consider the press to be one of the most effective media to achieve this end. * * *

"It is not only through governments * * * that foreign relations between nations are maintained, strengthened or weakened. There are many other media for affecting the relations between peoples. I am thinking of international conferences of scientists and experts in many fields, of exchange of professors and students, of visits of tourists, of the conduct of armed forces of occupation or of liberation, of literature and newspapers * * *. In all this, honest information is required and even essential. The press is one of the most effective means of disseminating collective information. And the press means the journalist.

"We are not here tonight however to think only about peoples and their relations. The William the Silent Award has been established to encourage journalists and authors to bring about better appreciation of the democratic affinity between our two countries. The generous donors of the award apparently assume that this affinity exists.

"I believe they are right.

"We have the testimony of American GI's who took part in the liberation of Holland. We also know, that Dutch immigrants in this country in almost all cases adapt themselves quickly and make happy and successful citizens. The affinity however goes deeper than the level of behavior and of getting along well with each other. It shows itself in a similar concept of government and nation * * *.

"The affinity between our two nations * * * is probably shown best in their conception and vindication of the right of a people to national independence even by revolution, as laid down in our Abjuration of the King of Spain in 1581 and in the American Declaration of Independence of 1776. It is a debatable point whether the text of abjuration by the States General of the United Netherlands was or was not actually used 200 years later by Thomas Jefferson when he drafted the Declaration of Independence, an interesting question for historians. However this may be, the similarity in the considerations and even in the wording of the two documents is very striking. This last example of our affinity leads me to say a few words about the man who must be considered as the founder of the Netherlands as a tate and who bore the name, given to the award which has brought us here together tonight.

"William the Silent, Prince of Orange, was the leader of the Dutch people in their struggle for independence. In that struggle he was called upon to sacrifice his son, his personal fortune, and, finally, his very life. William was also the man who gave first expression to the right, the duty even, of a people to depose a king if the king does not govern them according to justice and does not love and support them as a father his children or a shepherd his flock * * * but on the contrary oppresses them * * * exacting from them slavish compliance * * * particularly when this is done deliberately. It is apparent to all that a prince is constituted by God to be ruler of a people, to defend them from oppression and violence, as the shepherd of his sheep. This is what the law of nature dictates for the defense of liberty.

"These quotations are taken from the Dutch Abjuration. The climate of thinking and the basic principle shows a striking similarity to those laid down in the Declaration of Independence: 'All men created equal * * * endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights * * * that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men * * * that whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government * * * it is their duty to provide new guards for their future security.'

"The words of the Abjuration of King Philip of Spain were not written by William the Silent, but by the States General of the Netherlands. They were, however, inspired by him and followed by only 7 months the publication of William's 'Apology.' In this remarkable document, read before the States General on December 13, 1580, the Prince of Orange explained why he had accepted to lead the Dutch nation in its struggle against the King of Spain. King Philip incidentally had just drawn up a ban against him (March 15, 1580), proclaiming him an outlaw and the chief disturber of the whole state of Christendom, forbidding all his subjects to communicate with him openly or privately, to administer to him victuals, drink, fire or other necessaries and allowing all to injure him in property or life. As a refutation of the statements and implications of this ban, William of Orange wrote his 'Apology,' renunciating openly Philip's sovereignty. The document was laid by him before the States General with an accompanying letter, in which he wrote: 'Je vous reconnais seuls en ce monde pour mes supérieurs.' With good reason it is said by the award committee that William the Silent was an exemplar of democratic ideals 400 years ago and that he first held the torch in the Netherlands for what later became the Republic of the United States.

"Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I have perhaps dwelt too long on some phases in the history of our two peoples. A few words on the present time and on our world of today. A bronze plate is set in the wall of the main corridor of the Jay H. Neff Hall, one of the buildings of the University of Missouri, and the home of the oldest school of journalism in the United States. The bronze plate carries a description of what is considered as essential in a good journal and in a good journalist by Walter Williams, the first dean of that school. He called it: 'The Journalist's Creed.' This creed contains a few statements from which I quote the following two. First: 'I believe that a journalist should write only what he holds in his heart to be true,' and further: 'I believe that the journalism which succeeds best—and best deserves success * * * is profoundly patriotic while sincerely promoting international good will and cementing world comradeship.'

"Better understanding among peoples is needed now more urgently than ever. The truly ambitious and far-reaching plans and treaties with their almost global implications, which the Governments of the great and smaller nations have concluded and are in the process of implementing, can achieve the underlying purpose of peace and prosperity only when understood and supported by their peoples. Knowledge and correct information must precede understanding. The press is an indispensable channel to bring full information, not only on domestic matters but in no smaller degree on international issues. Here lies the responsibility of the newspaper and of the individual journalist.

"When on July 12, 1949, the 14 American reporters so tragically crashed near Bombay they were returning from a fact-finding tour, during which they had reported and intended to continue to report only what they held in their hearts to be true. The subject happened in this case to be Indonesia, but they would with the same honesty have reported on situations in any other part of the world. It is a fact that they all had been living up to the standards laid down in Dean Williams' credo: * * * 'I believe that the journalism which succeeds best—and best deserves success—is profoundly patriotic while sincerely promoting international good will and cementing world comradeship.'

"Wholeheartedly do I join those who have paid tribute to those 14 men and women.

"Finally, in stressing once more my deep appreciation for the establishment of the William the Silent Award for journalistic work on the Netherlands and the United States, I wish to express my profound conviction that bringing about a better insight into the democratic affinity between our two countries is to be looked upon as an aspect—be it to one of the highest importance—of the urgently needed strengthening of ties between all the members of the greater family of nations. In other words, as the President of the United States has written in his letter of July 11, 1950: 'The donors of the award have made a contribution to a better understanding among the peoples of the world.'

"The 14 American journalists cannot be better honored than by continued reporting on world affairs by others according to the standards formulated by Dean Williams and applied and lived up to so fully by those 14 men and women themselves."

Dr. Herman Baruch, former United States Ambassador to the Netherlands, who was accompanied at the dinner by Mrs. Baruch, in a moving speech described how the people of the Netherlands had taken the American correspondents to their hearts. He paid glowing tribute to the deep-rooted friendship between the United States and the Netherlands.

Announcement of the award winner was made by Mr. Truman Felt, chairman of the board of the National Press Club, on behalf of the committee of judges. Presentation of the award was made by Mr. Balink, and it was accepted by Mr. Canham for the absent winner. Mr. Truman Felt said that Americans were particularly impressed by the fact that the Dutch people had insisted that the award winner should be selected by a committee of American judges.

Present on the dais during the dinner, in addition to Mr. Andreassen, Mr. Hoeven, Mr. Streibert, Mr. Ferguson, Dr. Baruch, Mr. Canham, Dr. van Roijen, Mr. Balink, Dr. Gideonse, Mr. McGraw, Mrs. Tufty, Mr. Felt, General Klein, and Mr. Planje, were Larry Laybourne of Time; William Ucker of the United States State Department; Mrs. Helen

AMERICANS APPLAUD AWARD

Numerous letters and telegrams of congratulations from persons prominent in Government, journalism, education, and business were received by the executive committee of the William the Silent Award for Journalism.

President Truman wrote:

"I am indeed happy to take note of the gracious gesture which the people of the Netherlands are making through establishment of the William the Silent Award, in memory of the 14 distinguished American correspondents who were killed in a plane crash while returning from Indonesia a year ago. In terms of money the award is most generous, but even more impressive is the spirit which prompted it. There could be no more suitable memorial to the newspapermen who so tragically lost their lives than this splendid contribution to a better understanding among the peoples of the world."

Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall wired:

"I regret exceedingly that pressure of duties precludes my joining you in honoring the free press of America through the William the Silent Award. The people of the Netherlands in sponsoring the award in memory of newspapermen who lost their lives while returning from assignments in Indonesia are making a valuable contribution to freedom of the press and to understanding and peace among the people of the world."

From the White House, Mr. W. Averell Harriman, special assistant to the President, wired:

"This occasion is an extraordinary one. It is a reminder of the ties which unite Holland and the United States—ties which go back to the early days of this country when Dutch settlers brought with them a spirit of tolerance, a spirit of democracy, and a spirit of freedom that left a deep imprint on our American culture and our American heritage. It is a reminder, too, of the part which William the Silent played in the creation of these conceptions as we know them today. In these troublesome days we have rediscovered their true meaning and have united to defend them, for the great struggle of our times centers around these ideals.

"From those early days to the present, the people of Holland and of the United States have had close and friendly relations, based on mutual respect and a common attachment to these cardinal principles.

"The decision of the people of Holland to establish this award on behalf of the American press is not only an act of generosity and friendship, but an act of wisdom and insight. For in this struggle of ideas, a free press plays a major part and the men and women of the press have a special responsibility to inform, to explain, and to educate, so that our faith in these conceptions will remain strong and our determination to defend them firm.

"This simple act of establishing the William the Silent Award is an act of deep significance. It is a reminder of the past and an inspiration to the present. We are deeply grateful to the people."

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath said in a telegram:

"I heartily join with you in honoring at the William the Silent Award for Journalism dinner, the American correspondents who lost their lives in the search for truth."

Maurice J. Tobin, Secretary of Labor, sent the following communication:

"One of the greatest contributions that can be made in the interests of peace and the spreading of democratic ideals throughout the world must come from the printed word with the peoples of all nations being informed factually and accurately of current events.

"This grave responsibility rests on the shoulders of the courageous and aggressive members of the fourth estate who, since the beginning of our great country, have been the molders of public opinion in helping to shape the destiny and future of our democracy.

"The tragic accident near Bombay more than a year ago removed from this earth 14 renowned American journalists who linger in our memories as twentieth-century pioneers in spreading the gospel of freedom and democracy on a global basis.

"As we pay tribute to their memory and the great ideals they represented in their lifetime, we also hail the accomplishments of the present in bringing to the attention of all the achievements of an outstanding American journalist who has pointed up his writings with the shining light of democracy and the spirit of all for one, and one for all.

"On such a momentous occasion we pay deserved honor to a member of that great body of men and women, often unsung and anonymous in their great endeavors, who have contributed so much to what has become known throughout the civilized world as the American way of life. May your great work continue to go forward with unlimited success in cherishing the heritage of freedom of the press and expression handed down to you over the years."

Warren R. Austin, United States representative to the United Nations, wrote:

"The William the Silent Award, in the years to come, can be an important influence for peace. Peace rests on understanding among peoples, and the foundation of understanding is truth.

"American journalism has strong roots in the free traditions of the Netherlands. History is evidence that the press of both of our countries has shown great courage on behalf of the truth in times of wars and oppressions, when the penalties for reporting the truth were imprisonment and sometimes death.

"The first William the Silent Award strengthens courageous journalism dedicated to the truth, at a time when truth itself is under ceaseless attack throughout the world. The newspapermen whose tragic death promoted the creation of this award (some of whom I knew personally) would rejoice in such a memorial."

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey wired:

"It is a wonderful thing the people of the Netherlands have done in establishing this award to commemorate the 14 American correspondents who were killed in an airplane crash near Bombay on July 12, 1949. Two of these reporters, Burt Heath and Fred Colvig, were personal friends of mine, and I want to join with you in paying tribute to their memory and to the others who died in that tragic accident. Won't you also please extend my very best wishes to the winner of the award."

Senator HERBERT H. LEHMAN wrote as follows:

"I applaud the double purpose of the William the Silent Award to pay homage to the memory of 14 distinguished American writers and to assert our traditional friendship for the Netherlands.

"Men in public life, particularly at election time, may be suspected of other than pure objectivity when they undertake to speak in a complimentary vein about the 'fourth estate.' However, I feel I must say, with pride, that we in this country possess the best informed press in the world. Its development has paralleled the growth of our industrial power. Our papers, press services and periodicals send their correspondents to every corner of the world, risking the dangers that are the lot of all missionaries.

"The 14 American correspondents whose memory you are honoring lost their lives in a plane crash after returning from a survey of Indonesia, sponsored by the Government of the Netherlands. The establishment of an annual prize for journalistic achievement is not only a most generous homage to their memories but also a most friendly gesture to our country.

"We need no special occasions, such as this, for reasserting the historic ties of devotion that bind us to the Dutch people. As Senator and former Governor of this first State settled by the Dutch, I would paraphrase a compliment once paid by the great French writer Voltaire to a nation friendly to France: each New Yorker has two loves in his heart, one for his own land and one for the Netherlands.

"The whole Empire State is dotted with geographic reminders of the influence of the Dutch in this region. Many of you will not be surprised when I say that if the Dutch had done nothing more than contribute the name of Roosevelt to the American scene, that would have been a sufficient achievement.

"I am sure this first award will be only the forerunner of a long line of distinguished ones."

Edward W. Barrett, Assistant Secretary of State, wired:

"Congratulations on establishment of William the Silent Award for Journalism. It should further strengthen the bonds of friendship between the American people and those in the Netherlands and enhance the journalism profession."

Senator ESTES KEFAUVER, of Tennessee, said:

"It is very fine of the people of the Netherlands to establish the William the Silent Award for the best article by an American journalist."

Dwight Young, president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, wrote:

"I wish to commend the spirit and the thinking back of this unique undertaking. I quite agree with Mr. Truman in the opinion that the establishment of this award can be a splendid contribution to a better understanding among the peoples of the world. One of the hopeful signs today is the number of efforts in various fields of activity to bring about a better understanding between peoples and peoples."

Edwin S. Friendly, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, sent the following message:

"It seems to me most fitting that the people of the Netherlands, who, like ourselves, have long been lovers of freedom and who have been willing to sacrifice in order that their freedom might be retained, should establish an award for American journalism, which has also fought for its own freedom and the freedom of the peoples which it serves.

"This award, established in memory of those 14 American correspondents killed in a plane crash near Bombay on July 12, 1949, is a splendid tribute to American journalism, and in itself should do much to bring about a better appreciation of the democratic affinity between two great peoples, who believe in and have fought for their freedom."

Curtis W. McGraw, president of the McGraw-Hill Publishing Co., wrote:

"As you must know, we of McGraw-Hill are deeply and particularly touched by the action of the people of the Netherlands in establishing, on your initiative, the William the Silent Award in memory of the 14 American correspondents who were killed in the line of duty while returning from Indonesia just over a year ago. We look upon it as helping to keep alive the spirit of our own Tom Falco who went down in that plane crash near Bombay.

"It seems to me highly fitting that the award should take the form of an annual prize for the best article or series of articles by an American writer in an American newspaper or magazine aimed at bringing about a better appreciation of the democratic affinity between the Netherlands and the United States. I know that Tom Falco and his companions must have hoped that the assignment on which they died would contribute to a better understanding of what the people of both countries could do together to keep their common democratic objectives clear in meeting the test of history in Southeast Asia."

Palmer Hoyt, editor and publisher of the Denver Post, wired this message:

"The presentation of the first William the Silent Award for distinguished service in journalism to further understanding between two great nations, the Netherlands and the United States, is an important occasion. In these days of trial and fear, international understanding is the greatest single good that can come between nations. It is so essential and so hard to promote that many of us have thrown up our hands in despair from time to time. I know this award is being given for a really great contribution to human freedom and enlightenment. I know that that is what the newspaper men and women to whom this award is dedicated would have wanted. Fred Colvig would have wanted that, and I am sure he and the others are here with you in spirit tonight."

JACOB K. JAVITS, Member of Congress from the State of New York, wired:

"Congratulations and best wishes to the award winner. * * * Kindest regards."

Dr. Willem Drees, Prime Minister of the Netherlands, cabled:

"My congratulations for the first winner of the William the Silent Award. His work and that of his colleagues who have the task to interpret the Netherlands to the American public is considered here as an important contribution toward the strengthening of the existing ties between the two countries."

John S. Knight, editor and publisher of the Chicago Daily News, sent this communication:

"I join most heartily in this salute to the winner of the William the Silent Award, an honor to the recipient, a recognition of the warm friendship between the Netherlands and the United States and a lasting tribute to the group of fine correspondents who died in the tragic airplane accident in India. By means of this award, they will live on ever more vividly in our memories. I add my thanks also to those warm-hearted people of the Netherlands who have made possible the award and this notable occasion. I know that Mr. Barrows, whose loss we continue to feel, would give his enthusiastic approval to the award. May it gather luster with the years."

PEOPLE OF LITTLE BORCULO RALLY TO AID ARKANSAS—NETHERLANDERS BUILD FURNITURE FOR WARREN TOWN HALL

(By Daniel L. Schorr)

BORCULO, THE NETHERLANDS.—Two tornadoes—23 years and 3,500 miles apart—have united the peoples of Borculo and Warren, Ark., in a spontaneous gesture that provides the man-bites-dog story of the winter.

The 6,200 of this town and surrounding villages are working like beavers, selling baked delicacies and holding benefit meetings, to finance the building of furniture intended for a recreation room in Warren's new town hall.

Not one of the inhabitants, most of them farmers, ever has been in the United States or knows exactly what sort of town Warren is. Few even know its location, because they haven't been able to find it on their maps of the United States. But that doesn't matter.

They only know that the strange, far-off town suffered a disaster like the one they remember so well. They know just how these Arkansas people must feel. They remember the aid that came to them from American organizations in 1925. They know how much the United States helped their country during and after the war. So they want to help, insofar as they are able.

These are simple people, these residents of Borculo in the "Achterhoek" (back corner) of Gelderland Province, in eastern Holland, only 10 miles from the German border. Few of them have the organizing ability to conceive the scheme or the eloquence to explain it. It was worked out by the burgomaster and a committee of communal leaders, but the people responded with enthusiasm.

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

And not even the local intellectuals know just how it will work out.

They have gotten as far as arranging that their two furniture factories will build caneseat oaken chairs and a table, with the coat of arms of Borculo carved into them. The local parchment factory will fashion a lamp. All this will be done by the factories at cost. How the furniture will be transported to Warren they do not yet know, nor how the presentation will be made.

Here is how it all began:

Borculo is unique for having suffered a tornado, on August 10, 1925, in an area where such storms are rare. The disaster of Borculo is still a byword in this country. It was a freak storm in that it struck only at this town, stopping almost at the city limits and leaving every other populated place unscathed.

REBUILT WITH UNITED STATES AID

Within a year and a half, Borculo was rebuilt, with the aid of a Nation-wide collection and gifts from the United States. Its furniture plants and its parchment factory—believed to be the only one in Western Europe—were restored to operation.

Because the Borculo catastrophe is remembered so well by the Dutch, it seemed natural that when Warren was hit by a tornado, Willem Cnoop-Koopmans, Netherlands consul general in New York, wrote his friend, Burgomaster Paul Drost, telling him about it, as a matter of interest.

Burgomaster Drost reacted promptly. He sent a cable to Mayor Jim Hurley, of Warren, on January 7, saying "Sincere sympathy of town of Borculo in Holland with tornado Warren. Struck by cyclone in 1925, ourselves realize this disaster so much the more. May Warren soon rise from this as Borculo at that time, for which our best wishes."

Mayor Hurley replied, "Your message was very much appreciated and we are confident that our city will recover from this disaster shortly."

The spare-haired Burgomaster Drost thought the matter over further and decided sympathy wasn't enough. He called together Protestant pastors and the Roman Catholic priest, factory managers, trade-union representatives, farmers, and the Union of Women Volunteers to decide what to do next.

WOMEN PITCH IN

The idea of sending food was ruled out as impractical. Agreement was quickly reached that whatever was sent should be made by Borculo hands. Finally the furniture plan was formulated.

To open the drive the town crier went through the streets shouting the news of the Warren disaster.

Then the women went to work baking local specialties like bolussen (cookies) and oliebollen (doughnuts). The oil was contributed by an oil factory, butter by local farmers, raisins by someone who had a supply of them. The women volunteers pitched in and started baking.

Working in 6-hour shifts all through one Saturday, the women baked 8,000 oliebollen and hundreds of bolussen. It took 5 hours just to knead the dough.

Interest in the sales campaign was literally drummed up. The parchment factory contributed a drum, and a drummer beat this as he accompanied the volunteer saleswomen from house to house.

ENTERTAINMENT PROGRAM

The next step was to organize a series of entertainments—one in Borculo and one each in the three adjoining villages. Oliebollen and bolussen were also sold there, with special kosher delicacies for the 41 Jewish inhabitants of the town. The admission charge was 25 cents (about 10 cents United States).

The program bore the slogan "Borculo Helps Warren," and included all that local talent could offer in the way of folk dances, a gymnastic performance, choirs, a demonstration by Boy Scouts, the accordion society, and comedy. The local band was asked to open the proceedings by playing the Dutch anthem, Wilhelmus, followed by The Star Spangled Banner. The score of the American anthem was not available on such short notice.

The band leader found some copies of Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever, which was substituted, with no appreciable damage to the spirit of the occasion.

The programs for the occasion were provided gratis by the local printer and were sold for the benefit of the Warren fund. They bore the slogan, "Minimum price: 10 cents; maximum price: wide open."

The series of four entertainments, attended by 1,400 persons, brought the Warren kitty up to 2,100 guilders, and this was still not enough.

"We are considering what to do next," said Burgomaster Drost. "If necessary we will hold a house-to-house collection. But first we will confer with the furniture manufacturers and find out how much is needed. We want furniture that will be comfortable but typical of what is produced in the Achterhoek. We don't know how it will be transported. We have not yet even been in contact with Warren to find out the size of the room in which it will be placed. As a matter of fact, we haven't yet officially informed Warren that we are sending anything."

BURGOMASTER EXPLAINS

Among those to whom I spoke, the burgomaster was clearest as to why the move had been made for a gift to Warren.

"We have always received from America," he said. "Holland has received, and specifically the town of Borculo. We received American help after our tornado. We received packages from America after the war. And then there was the Marshall plan. Now we want to send something back. We know that we really can't do much for Warren, but we can make a gesture."

Less articulate, but no less enthusiastic were some of the townsmen.

Jan Arend Kolkman, a venerable farmer, whose family has lived in this area since the sixteenth century, was puzzled by my question when I visited the farmhouse, where his family shares quarters with the livestock under the same roof.

DOT ON A MAP, BUT—

He showed a toothless grin and scratched his head when asked about Warren, and in the explosive Gelderland dialect he said, simply, "They must be having a hard time over there in America after that big storm. Glad to help if I can. And the dances the other evening were pretty good."

Unexpected American cooperation for the committee came in the form of Mrs. Albertina de Schepper, a native of nearby Lochem, who immigrated to the United States 14 years ago and now lives at Ketchum, Idaho. Mrs. de Schepper had been visiting at Lochem when she heard about the Borculo Drive, and now she is spending most of her time here helping with the sale of cookies.

Mrs. de Schepper served another useful function. She was able to tell the townsmen something about the United States and what Arkansas is like. She even managed to dig up a map that showed Warren, a little spot south of Little Rock.

And now, as the town gets ready to fashion table and chairs for the far-off American town, the inhabitants have as their inspiration a dot on a map—and the remembrance of how Americans helped when they suffered their tornado 23 years ago.

The late Charles Ross wrote:

"I think this award represents a very fine gesture on the part of the people of the Netherlands. President Truman made no overstatement when he described it as 'a splendid contribution to a better understanding among the peoples of the world.'

"Very sincerely yours,

"CHARLES G. ROSS,
"Secretary to the President."

Hon. Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, wrote:

"Your organization is making a great contribution to the free-press traditions between two countries and is thus spreading freedom of press and the access to news throughout the world. I sincerely hope that this year's ceremony is successful in every possible way.

"Sincerely,

"CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
"Secretary."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not take the time now to discuss the other material, because I do not think it would be fair to those who are awaiting to deliver major speeches to take even the 3 or 4 minutes necessary for an explanatory statement of material that I seek only to have inserted in the RECORD. When I get the floor later this afternoon, I shall do that, as a preface to a major speech I wish to make on another subject matter. I wish to thank the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] for permitting me to take the necessary time to introduce into the RECORD the material on the William the Silent Award.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. There appear to be no further routine matters.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think the distinguished majority leader wanted to request the confirmation of certain nominations on the Executive Calendar at this time, and we desire to cooperate with him in so doing, if it may be done without interfering with other matters.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, there is one nomination on the Executive Calendar which it is very important that the Senate confirm because of the situation which exists in the Civil Aeronautics Board. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Senate, as in executive session, consider the Executive Calendar at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. If there are no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Joseph P. Adams, of Washington, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board for the term expiring December 31, 1956.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Coast Guard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the United States Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the President will be immediately notified.

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

NORTH AMERICAN REGIONAL BROADCASTING AGREEMENT—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The VICE PRESIDENT. As in executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate Executive A, Eighty-second Congress, first session, the North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement and the final protocol thereto, which were signed in the English, Spanish, and French languages at Washington on November 15, 1950. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the agreement and protocol, and the agreement and protocol, together with the Presidents message of transmittal will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the texts, as certified by the Government of Canada, of the North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement and the Final Protocol thereto, which were signed in the English, Spanish, and French languages at Washington on November 15, 1950, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Territories in the North American Region (Bahamas and Jamaica), Canada, Cuba, and the Dominican Republic.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report by the Secretary of State with respect to the instruments above-mentioned. For the reasons indicated in that report and in the memorandum enclosed therewith, I urge the Senate to give favorable consideration to the North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, with the Final Protocol thereto.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1951.

(Enclosures: (1) Report by the Secretary of State, with enclosure; (2) North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, signed at Washington, November 15, 1950.)

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 101) to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator from Massachusetts desirous of being recognized to make an address?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to make an address not to exceed 15 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels that inasmuch as the unfinished business is the amendment of the Reorganization Act of 1949, the Chair should recognize the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that Senate bill 101 is now the unfinished business before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was taken up last Thursday and is now the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, two or three Senators wish to make brief addresses. I have no objection to their proceeding. I should like to make a brief statement regarding the bill whenever the Senate is ready to consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair felt that the Senator from Arkansas was entitled to some preference, due to the fact that he is in charge of the bill. If he does not care to claim his privilege at this time, that is all right.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR BURIAL OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF MILITARY FORCES OF COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, would it be agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas that I call up Calendar 79, Senate bill 82, and to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business in order to consider that bill?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection, if it can be disposed of within a reasonable time.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Do I correctly understand that the Chair has recognized the Senator from Arkansas as having the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The Senator from Arkansas was not anxious to obtain the floor. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts if he would permit me to call up the bill to which I have referred, which I think will lead to no debate.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from Georgia with the understanding that I shall not lose my right to the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the title of the bill for the consideration of which the Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 82) to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 82), to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to furnish a flag to drape the casket and to pay a sum not exceeding 150 Philippine pesos for the burial and funeral expenses and transportation of the body (including preparation of the body) of any person who served in the organized military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941, including among such military forces organized guerrilla forces under commanders appointed, designated, or subsequently recognized by the Commander in Chief, Southwest Pacific Area, or other competent authority in the Army of the United States, and who dies, or has died, after separation from such service under conditions other than dishonorable. Payments under this act shall be subject to the applicable provisions of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, except that in case any such person has died heretofore, the time for filing claim for reimbursement of such expenses shall be extended until 2 years after the date of this enactment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the courtesy extended by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point the report of the Committee on Finance with reference to the bill. It is very brief. It invites special attention to the fact that an identical bill was introduced by the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] in the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

There being no objection, the report (No. 74) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 82) to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

Under the terms of this proposal, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to furnish a flag to drape the casket and to pay a sum not exceeding 150 Philippine pesos ($75) for the burial and funeral expenses of any person who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States dated July 26, 1941. Included in such forces would be those who served in organized guerrilla forces under commanders appointed, designated, or recognized by the commander in chief of the Southwest Pacific area or other competent authority in the United States Army during World War II. A separation from the service under conditions other than dishonorable would be a prerequisite for benefits under this proposal. Payments would be made subject to the applicable provisions of Veterans' Regulation 9 (a), but the time limit of 2 years from death for filing of claims is extended with respect to those persons who died heretofore to 2 years after the enactment of this legislation.

Although the committee's action was on the bill S. 82, it is noted that an identical measure, S. 377, was sponsored by Senator HERBERT H. LEHMAN, of New York. This type of legislation and the proposal generally follows the recommendation of the President on this subject made to the Congress in July 1947.

It is estimated that the maximum ultimate cost of this bill would be approximately $26,430,000. No firm estimate can be provided as to first-year cost.

The Veterans' Administration report on an identical bill (H. R. 8576, 81st Cong., 2d sess.) is as follows:

AUGUST 24, 1950.

Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE,
Chairman, Committee on Finance,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GEORGE: This is in reply to your letter of August 7, 1950, requesting a report by the Veterans' Administration on H. R. 8576, Eighty-first Congress, a bill to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941.

The general purpose of the bill is indicated in the above-quoted title. The bill provides as follows:

"That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to furnish a flag to drape the casket and to pay a sum not exceeding 150 Philippine pesos for the burial and funeral expenses and transportation of the body (including preparation of the body) of any person who served in the organized military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941, including among such military forces organized guerrilla forces under commanders appointed, designated, or subsequently recognized by the commander in chief, Southwest Pacific area, or other competent authority in the Army of the United States, and who dies, or has died, after separation from such service under conditions other than dishonorable. Payments under this act shall be subject to the applicable provisions of Veterans' Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, except that in case any such person has died heretofore, the time for filing claim for reimbursement of such expenses shall be extended until 2 years after the date of this enactment."

Veterans' Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, which would be applicable to payments under the bill, authorizes burial benefits for eligible veterans of the Armed Forces of the United States and provides that claims for reimbursement must be filed within 2 years subsequent to the date of burial of the veteran. In the event the claimant's application is not complete at the time of original submission the Veterans' Administration advises the claimant of the evidence necessary to complete the application, and if such evidence is not received within 1 year from the date of the request therefor no allowance may be paid. With respect to persons who have died prior to the enactment of the bill, it is provided therein that the time for filing claim for reimbursement shall be extended until 2 years after the date of enactment.

Under the provisions of the First Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946 (Public Law 301, 79th Cong., approved February 18, 1946), eligibility for benefits under our laws predicated on active military or naval service was taken from Philippine Army veterans who served pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, except as to those providing compensation for service-connected disability or death (which are paid on the basis of one Philippine peso for each dollar authorized), and benefits of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, under contracts entered into prior to February 18, 1946. The Rescission Act was amended by the act of July 25, 1947 (Public Law 241, 80th Cong.), so as to restore benefits under the Missing Persons Act, as amended, for such veterans. By a military order of the President, effective midnight June 30, 1946, the organized military forces of the Government of the Philippines were released from the service of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Upon approving the Rescission Act, the President voiced exception to the restrictive language therein with respect to Philippine Army veterans and requested that a study be undertaken. As a result of this study, remedial legislation (H. R. 6508 and S. 2235) was introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress. S. 2235 was passed by the Senate but was not enacted prior to the adjournment of the Seventy-ninth Congress. Thereafter, further study of the matter was made by an interdepartmental committee appointed by the President, consisting of the then Administrator of Veterans' Affairs as chairman, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the United States Ambassador to the Philippines. In accordance with the recommendation of the interdepartmental committee, the President on July 1, 1947, transmitted to the Congress proposed legislation which was introduced as H. R. 4073, Eightieth Congress.

In addition to a provision similar to that contained in H. R. 8576, H. R. 4073 contained provisions for other benefits, including aid in the form of grants to the Republic of the Philippines for subsistence allowances and tuition incident to courses of institutional training pursued by eligible veterans in the Philippines, and grants for the construction and equipping of hospitals in that country for the medical care and treatment of eligible Philippine veterans and expenses incident to such care and treatment. The bill, as reported by the Committee on Veterans'

Affairs of the House of Representatives, retained only those provisions relative to hospitalization and medical treatment. However, this report (H. Rept. No. 2304) stated:

"There are other matters affecting veterans of this campaign which need attention, but the committee feels that adequate hospitalization is so necessary and pressing that it should receive immediate attention. The other matters will have to be delayed until more adequate study can be given them."

S. 2361, a bill similar to H. R. 4073, as reported, was passed by the Congress and became Public Law 865, Eightieth Congress, on July 1, 1948. That act authorizes the President to furnish financial aid to the Republic of the Philippines with respect to the medical care and treatment of the mentioned Philippine veterans in the form of grants for the construction and equipping of hospitals and also for expenses incidental to hospitalization. For the purpose of construction and equipping, the act provides that grants may not exceed $22,500,000 and for expenses incident to hospitalization a limitation of $3,285,000 for any fiscal year is provided for a period not to exceed 5 years. By letter dated August 16, 1948, the President delegated to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs his authority under Public Law 865 and requested that an agreement with respect to the authorized program be negotiated with the Philippine Government. A formal agreement was thereupon entered into on June 7, 1949, between the United States Ambassador and the President of the Philippines. Subsequently, regulations to implement the law and agreement were promulgated by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, with the approval of the President, effective October 18, 1949. Progress is being made with plans and details of the construction program as well as reimbursement procedure for interim hospitalization in available existing hospital beds.

As heretofore indicated, the matter of granting veterans' benefits to former members of the organized Philippine Army and recognized guerrillas has been the subject of numerous proposals in three different Congresses since the mentioned Rescission Act of 1946, and the extent to which certain benefits have been granted has been noted. The question of whether additional benefits, such as the burial allowance proposed by H. R. 8576 should be authorized, is one involving broad public policy and is believed to be primarily for determination by the Congress in the light of the various factors which have from time to time been brought to its attention.

In view of certain indeterminate factors, it is not possible to estimate accurately the first year's cost of the bill, if enacted. Based on the latest information available to the Veterans' Administration, and bearing in mind that deaths occurring during service would not be covered by the bill, it is estimated that approximately 13,500 claimants would be potentially eligible for the benefits as a result of deaths occurring to date. It further appears that there are approximately 315,000 living veterans of the Philippine Army, including recognized guerrillas. Assuming that proper claim for the benefit is made in each case, and assuming that the maximum expense is incurred, the maximum ultimate cost of providing flags would be approximately $1,800,000 and the maximum ultimate cost of the burial allowance would be 49,275,000 Philippine pesos. Under the current official rate of exchange the ratio of the peso to the dollar is approximately 2 to 1. With respect to the deaths occurring heretofore, it is probable that claim for the flag and for reimbursement of the burial expenses in each case will be made within the 2-year period of limitation provided by the bill.

Advice has not as yet been received from the Bureau of the Budget as to the relationship of this legislation to the program of the President. A supplemental letter on this matter will be furnished your comimttee when such information is received.

Sincerely yours,

O. W. CLARK,
Deputy Administrator, for and in the Absence of the Administrator.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement made by me before the Finance Committee in support of Senate bill 82, which has just been passed, providing for reimbursement for the burial of certain members of the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR LEHMAN BEFORE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON PHILIPPINE BURIAL BILL

Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege to appear before your committee and to urge, with all the conviction at my command, the approval of the pending proposal to pay burial benefits to the beneficiaries of Filipinos who served in the Armed Forces of the United States as Regulars or as recognized guerrillas.

There are two bills pending before the committee which are, by no strange coincidence, exactly alike. I introduced a bill similar to this last year. The courteous and distinguished chairman of this committee saw fit this year, in his wisdom, to sponsor this proposal for which I am grateful. I also introduced mine. I am happy to support his bill.

I expect that the committee will receive in evidence testimony showing the moral, if not legal claim, which the Filipino veterans have for this benefit. I will not go into that in any detail. In my judgment, the Filipino veterans have moral backing for much more extensive benefits than those provided in the pending measure.

Some of the Filipinos who would be affected by this legislation were members of the United States Armed Forces of the Far East, by formal proclamation and Executive order of the President of the United States. They were as much a part of the Army of the United States as your sons and mine in the last war. They were mustered in under American command, and fought in American units on Luzon, on Bataan, and on Corregidor, and on many other battlefields which I cannot name or pronounce, up to the time of the surrender by General Wainwright in the spring of 1942. They were promised, but never got, the same pay scale and the same benefits to which continental American troops were entitled.

In addition to that group of Filipinos, there was another and larger group—the recognized guerrillas, of which heroism stories will be told as long as heroism is honored anywhere in the world. For three long years these men fought, in their units and even armies, harrying the Japanese, pinning them down in the Philippines and inflicting great casualties upon them, while also performing invaluable intelligence and espionage work for General MacArthur.

These men, in some instances under immediate American command, but in almost all cases, under the specific orders and directions of General MacArthur, then stationed in Australia, fought and functioned, under the American flag and in the American cause, during those dark years when the American flag had been officially hauled down in the Philippines, following the surrender.

These men paved the way for MacArthur's return to the Philippines, supplied the intelligence which made possible the liberation of the Philippines at the lowest cost in American lives of any major military operation in history, and joined the American liberation troops in a unified combat effort which overwhelmed the Japanese and redeemed the pride and glory of American arms in the Far East.

At that time, if my facts are correct, the official ruling was that these men were to be entitled to every benefit which American troops were getting. All during the time the fighting raged, the guerrillas and the other Filipinos who joined MacArthur's forces fought under the impression that they were to be entitled, among other things, to the benefits of the GI bill of rights.

There is on record an official ruling by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, as late as October 1945, that the Filipinos were so entitled.

Of course Congress had the legal right—and exercised that right—to cut the Filipinos off from these benefits. The Congress did exactly that in 1946. It was not, in my judgment, a proper thing to do. The Congress might have diminished those rights somewhat, in the light of Philippine independence and in view of the fact that the Filipinos would not be contributing in taxes to these benefits. But Congress, I believe, was wrong to eliminate those benefits.

But that is all history. Now we face not a theory but a fact. It is too late to try to measure out exact justice in this matter. But Congress can and should do whatever is practicable and feasible, just as President Truman promised that he would recommend that Congress do. That recommendation was made in 1946, and President Truman, as I understand it, has been trying ever since to get Congress to rectify the injustice that was done.

Today there are reasons more pressing than ever before, for action in this matter. Today the Far East is again menaced by new tyrannies, new aggressive forces. Those forces are centered not only in Soviet Russia but in Red China. Those forces hold out false promises to the hundreds of millions of people in the Asiatic area. Those promises are heard throughout the Far East. They have convinced some of those people—less in the Philippines than anywhere else—but still there are some Communists in the Philippines.

The Philippines is the chief representative of western democracy in the Orient. It is the only country whose form of government is an exact prototype of our own.

We have given and are continuing to give considerable economic aid to the Philippines. We will be asked at this very session of Congress for more. It is a sound investment in peace, security, and democracy.

But here is a group of Filipinos who have a special claim on American consideration and American generosity. Here is a group who proved, beyond doubt or question, their devotion to democracy and to the United States. Here is a group who should be given every recognition and preference that the American Government can properly give to a group of nationals of another country. Here is a group with a moral claim. I believe we should honor that claim generously and immediately.

I think that the passage of this measure is in the interests of the United States, as well as of the individuals involved. The passage of this measure will not only raise our prestige in the Philippines but throughout the Far East. The word will be passed that the United States Government has recognized its obligation—its moral obligation—to a considerable group of Filipinos who fought for democracy in the last war. That word will have its effect not only in the Philippines, but in Malaya, in Indochina, in Indonesia, and even in China.

I do not wish to exaggerate the importance of this. I do not wish to make any extreme statements. But from the letters I have received from the Philippines and from reliable reports I have received, I am deeply impressed as to the great importance of this legislation in the entire Philippine picture.

It does not matter, and should not matter, what else we are going to do for the Philippines as a whole, or for the Filipino people as a whole. What does matter is that we give adequate recognition to the claim of these individual Filipinos who were among the bravest of the brave, and whose devotion to the United States, a Nation which was sovereign in the Philippines at the time, and which is generally considered a Caucasian country, provides one of the brightest pages in the history of heroism.

I know that all these fine sentiments may seem a little high-pitched when applied to a bill for the payment of burial benefits. But I am told that the occasion of death is the most important in the life of the Filipino, and that the burial ceremony is the most significant ceremony in family and community life in the Philippines. That is why so much importance is attached to this bill.

I, myself, expect to propose another bill for other benefits—educational benefits—for the Filipino veterans. But whether my other measure meets with congressional approval or not, I certainly hope and urge that this pending proposal be given the favorable consideration of this distinguished committee, and that it be sent to the floor of the Senate for early passage.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee I have been endeavoring to understand the budget document which the President has submitted to the Congress. This document includes the supplementary figures for the fiscal year 1951 as well as the new figures for the fiscal year 1952. Even with all the publicity which has been given to the tremendous amounts with which the President proposed to conduct the Government for the next 18 months, I am very much in doubt that our people are even yet aware of the weight of the Government load which they must carry.

The President in the budget document justified—or to put it in another way, recommended—the details of $21,800,000,000. He left a total of $87,600,000,000 to be proposed for later transmission. This $87,600,000,000 is divided into a sum of $10,900,000,000 to be proposed in 1951 supplemental budget messages and $76,700,000,000 for the fiscal year 1952 to be later proposed. In other words, the budget message gives justification for only approximately one-fifth, or 20 percent, of the total appropriations for 1952. The balance the President proposes to transmit at a later time. It may be put in this way: The total appropriations either already granted or to be later asked for the fiscal year 1951 amount to $91,800,000,000, and the requests for 1952 fiscal year amount to $98,500,000,000, or an over-all total for the two fiscal years of 1951 and 1952 of $190,400,000,000.

Mr. President, I quote these figures to show their enormity. Of course these amounts will not all be spent in the 1951 or 1952 fiscal years. In fact, it is planned to spend only $47,200,000,000 in 1951 and $71,600,000,000 in 1952 and, of course, some of this is from prior years. But, for a comparison, if we add these two figures together and subtract them from the over-all total proposed for 2 years, we find that it is proposed to spend $71,600,000,000 in the years to follow the fiscal year 1952, and actually the expenditure will be greater, again because of prior years' appropriations. By coincidence this is the same figure which the President estimates will be spent in 1952. In other words, $71,600,000,000 would be spent in 1952, and $71,600,000,000 would be spent in the years following 1952.

We who are the Members of Congress cannot, until justifications for these requests are presented, be in a position to pass judgment on them. We do know that we cannot in the coming years afford to spend a penny on any project, no matter how meritorious, which is not either vital for the national defense, or does not concern the health and well-being of our people, or is not to be used to complete a necessary project already under way which will be wasted if it is not finished or put into operation. I use the word "vital" deliberately because we cannot afford to start or continue marginal projects. Furthermore, we must scrutinize with intense care every project to which the word "defense" is attached because our experience in World War II showed how many projects were started which could only vaguely apply to our "defense."

The importance of the calculations which I have just tried to state very briefly is this: The Congress of the United States is asked to appropriate for the next 18 months in this session upwards of $71,000,000,000 to be spent in future years. Naturally for the fiscal year 1952 there will be many more supplementary requests.

This means that we, ourselves, our sons, and daughters are asked to pay in future years in taxes for the enormous appropriations which we are making in 1951 to be spent in those future years without knowledge of the problems which will then have to be solved and without knowing of the further demands for other appropriations in those years. We are putting our present load on them to carry in addition to the loads they must carry for their own needs in the years to come. That is a fair and proper course so far as pure defense needs are concerned. If we cannot keep this country secure, they will not be able to live in it as free men and women. But it is wrong and unfair insofar as we appropriate funds now to be spent in those years for objects not absolutely necessary, and ask them to pay for these appropriations in the years to come, when they will know so much better what their own actual needs for Government spending will be.

Let me emphasize again that only $21,800,000,000 of the $98,500,000,000 for 1952 have been justified at the present moment. All the rest will be transmitted at a later date. Of these amounts to be transmitted at a later date, $62,500,000,000 are for defense; $300,000,000 are for aid to schools; $35,000,000 are for medical education and local health service; $20,000,000 are to start the St. Lawrence seaway, which incidentally will cost almost a billion dollars; $200,000,000 are needed for a reserve for contingencies without any statement as to what type of contingencies the amount covers.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I interrupt the able Senator from Massachusetts, who is, I believe, making a very fine address, to ask a question. As the Senator knows, I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I am chairman of the subcommittee which handles appropriations for Labor and Federal Security Administration. Does not the Senator think that unless the members of the Committee on Appropriations delve into the matters to which the Senator refers, conditions will be much worse than they are actually known to be by the public at the present time?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. In my opinion, there is no question that that is the fact.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I believe that every appropriation request can be cut 10 percent without hurting the efficiency of the Government. Such a cut should be made at this time. Let me give the Senator an illustration, which can be multiplied thousands of times. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that we have established several new emergency agencies. I have been asked by people in my own State for permanent positions in such emergency agencies. Persons now holding a civil service classification of grade 8 have expressed a desire to be transferred to a new agency, not with their present classification of grade 8, but with a change in their classification to grade 11 or grade 12. Does the Senator feel it would be fair to the American people to grant such requests, particularly under present conditions?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I may say to my colleague and friend that it would be one of the most helpful things he could do if he could have persons who are now working for the Government in one department transferred to an emergency department, where they are needed at the present time, and thus cut down expenses in the other departments.

Mr. CHAVEZ. But the persons to whom I refer do not wish to be transferred to an emergency agency unless their classification is raised by three grades. That is the point I desire to make. For instance, a person who is connected with a permanent agency of the Federal Government wishes to be transferred to an emergency agency, but he insists that before he is transferred to such emergency agency his classification be raised by three grades. It would be all right to change his employment from one agency to another agency if he retained the same classification. When we established the new agencies we did not have in mind increasing salaries. When we established the Office of Price Stabilization, for instance, we did not intend to increase the salaries of the Federal employees who would be employed by such agency.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Absolutely not. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I continue with the enumeration.

One billion dollars are proposed for the Export-Import Bank; $9,500,000,000 for international programs; $150,000,000 to start defense housing; $330,000,000 for the administration of controls.

This is along the line of the remarks made by the Senator from New Mexico.

Four hundred and fifty million dollars for civilian defense; $1,000,000,000 for stockpiling; $180,000,000 for Government relief of occupied areas and the governing of those areas.

This is only a partial list, and, Mr. President, I ask to have a complete table inserted at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fiscal year 1952—Proposed for later transmission

To build up free world's defensive strength, as well as amounts to carry forward other international programs	$9,500,000,000
Defense housing	150,000,000
Administration of controls	330,000,000
Expansion of defense production	1,200,000,000
Federal aid to schools	300,000,000
Medical education and local health services	35,000,000
Export-Import Bank	1,000,000,000
Selective Service	50,000,000
St. Lawrence seaway	20,000,000
Hell's Canyon power	8,000,000
Reserve for contingencies	200,000,000
Civilian defense	450,000,000
National science foundation	10,000,000
Stockpile	1,000,000,000
Maritime ship construction	125,000,000
Federal airport claims	4,400,000
Government relief occupied areas	150,000,000
To govern occupied areas	30,000,000
Military functions	62,510,000,000

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I would also like at this point in my remarks to insert another table, which attempts to show some of the larger items which have been justified in the President's budget included in the $21,800,000,000 appropriations which he has so far recommended for fiscal 1952. This does not pretend to be a complete list but endeavors to include most of the larger construction and program items. To me it gives a very quick, rough, overall look at the $21,800,000,000 and I think it is appropriate to include it at this point.

Actually the amount is $21,793,000,000.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 4.—Some of the larger items which are justified in the $21,800,000,000 appropriations so far recommended in the President's budget for fiscal 1952. This does not pretend to be a complete list. It takes in most of the construction and program items

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, every item vital to the national defense must surely be appropriated. Every other item must be appropriated only if it can be properly justified.

When we consider the requests for the Defense Department we should carefully scrutinize the detailed justifications for the enormous spending necessitated for the national security. We certainly should continue to appropriate all that is possibly needed for defense. At the same time requests for new construction of housing and buildings at the camps must be analyzed as carefully as possible if money is not to be wastefully spent because of haste and urgency.

Of course, we must have civilian controls. In fact, their application was delayed far too long. Such controls must be carefully, fairly, reasonably, and economically administered.

Of course, we must have civilian defense. We want our people to understand what they must do to take care of themselves if an attack comes. We know that it can happen here.

But these two great services must be built up to serve our needs without regard to politics. I hear a rumor that civilian defense alone will employ over 50 people in a regional office in Boston. I already have many applications for positions in these regional offices. We had no such civilian-defense office in World War II. The distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. HUNT], who is a former Governor of the State of Wyoming, knows that there were no such offices in his State. Is it necessary now to have them? Must we set up elaborate regional offices in order to determine the extent of the Federal contribution for bomb shelters?

I shall never forget my experience as a governor at a dinner given by the Boston Chamber of Commerce during World War II. Except for the presiding officer, I was the only local civilian at the head table. There were at least 12 regional heads of this and that Federal agency. Most of them I knew because they had come to see me at my office. But very few of them knew each other or knew what the others were doing in New England. So, I spent much of that evening introducing the regional heads of the various Federal agencies to one another and listening to them discuss and argue as to how their work crisscrossed among them. Who did what, they never did entirely clear up. In view of our experience in World War II, I hope we can eliminate now much of the waste and inefficiency of such administration.

It is the responsibility of the Congress within the time allowed us to do so to study the requests for money made by the President. It helps him as the head of our Government to have us do so. We cannot allow the agencies of the Government to become extravagant, wasteful, and bureaucratic under a disguise that they are doing defense work. Our people are willing to sacrifice to the highest degree for the security of the country and for the safety and proper equipment of our boys who are fighting for us. But they will not tolerate waste in preparing the national defense. I feel confident that if the administration and the Congress properly publicize the reasons why the services our people have been receiving from their Government must be reduced or eliminated, they will be only too willing to give up those services. But, they are not willing to do so, and become disgusted when asked to do so, if at the same time they see their Government wasteful and extravagant. We must never forget that we are asking them to reduce their way of life in their homes and asking them to give up little luxuries which they and their children have enjoyed over the years.

We only know now that the President intends to propose for later transmission for 1952 some $77,000,000,000. We only know that he has justified in his present budget document some $21,800,000,000 for 1952. Consequently, until we know for what these proposals are to be and for what services they are to be spent, we cannot say correctly that they can or cannot be eliminated or reduced. But we do know that the greater the national expenditures are and the more the Government's balance sheet becomes unbalanced, the higher the taxes surely will be. Certainly there is no social evil that is so great as uncontrolled inflation. The more we ask of the Government the greater the chances are that our way of life and our freedom will be lost through inflation. Surely we can and must find ways to cut the President's requests as substantially as is practical and wise.

Mr. President, I would like permission to place in the RECORD at this point a table based upon the total authorizations proposed for the fiscal year 1952 in the amount of $98,500,000,000. That is table 2.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. This table shows that my State of Massachusetts will have to pay approximately $3,400,000,000 as its share. That is just over half of the total assessed valuation of real estate in Massachusetts—and the assessed valuation in Massachusetts is made at the full value. The full valuation of real estate in Massachusetts is $6,544,571,174. In other words, Mr. President, the amount which the citizens of Massachusetts will be asked to pay in support of this Federal program for 1952 is in excess of 50 percent of the total assessed valuation of all real estate in our Commonwealth. And this is only what we are to be asked to appropriate for 1952 in this present session of Congress, and there will undoubtedly be more.

I cite this illustration because to me it emphasizes the size of the problem which we face. It serves to bring home to us the importance of our efforts to reduce Government spending just as far as we possibly can without injuring the defense of the country and the welfare of our people.

Truly, Mr. President, Congress has a tremendous responsibility this year to see first that the enormous expenditures demanded by the security effort are well justified and wisely spent; and second, that we do not load on our children burdens from which we benefit and for which they pay, unless they are absolutely needed for the protection and security of our future.

It may be necessary to change some laws in order to reduce the commitments of the Government. It will be wise for the Committee on Appropriations to have a study made or a report from the Bureau of the Budget to all outstanding authorizations for which appropriations may be asked, to see if some of the authorizations, not for defense purposes, may be reduced or eliminated. I feel that we should set our sights on a minimum cut of $5,000,000,000 from the President's proposals. I shall do all in my power to try to gain this objective.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place at the end of these remarks a table from the budget for fiscal 1952 entitled "Résumé of New Obligational Authorizations," which sets forth very clearly the figures to which I have just referred. That is table 3.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. CASE. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has made an admirable statement. He has placed his finger upon two things which are absolutely essential if we are really to do something toward cutting the budget.

First, we must examine even the military requests, and be sure that something is not wrapped up in the term "national defense" which will thereby obtain access to the Federal Treasury when it does not deserve that kind of essential rating.

Second is the emphasis upon the necessity of reexamining some of the Government's contractual commitments with the States. If we are really going to reduce the Federal budget, we must examine those things. I think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has made a real contribution to the debate on Federal economy.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I appreciate very much the remarks of my colleague and friend from South Dakota.

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 101) to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I shall support the pending bill to authorize the President to reorganize certain of the defense agencies. I was a member of the committee which framed the bill. I think it is a workable bill. It will give the President the authority which he requested, while reserving to the Congress the authority which, in my opinion, it should not relinquish.

I have supported all our defense efforts. Naturally I should be glad to see the President have the power to increase the efficiency of defense agencies if he can do so under this bill, because, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts pointed out, we are faced with a very costly undertaking, even on the most efficient and economical basis.

CONQUERING THE WORLD BY WINNING ITS ESTEEM

Mr. President, the problem which weighs heaviest today on my mind is not whether we shall bring to rapid fruition a military establishment capable of conquering the world by force, but rather whether or not we are giving sufficient thought to the utilization of our inherent powers to conquer the world by winning its esteem.

Yesterday I attended the morning services of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation. The scriptural lesson was taken from the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, in which St. Paul said:

> Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

It will be recalled that in the original Greek Paul used the word "philo," meaning the philosophical approach to love. We have no exact word to translate that Greek word, so the scholars who gave us the King James version of the Bible used the word "charity." But it means far more than we usually attribute now to that word.

Then the pastor of the church took as his topic "What the World Needs," and proceeded to outline four outstanding needs of the world—men that the world can trust; moral courage; freedom in its highest sense; and a conception of God.

Then, Mr. President, I attended today the opening of the Senate, and was inspired by the fact that a former resident of Hiroshima, Rev. Kiyoshi Tanimoto, a distinguished Methodist minister, whom we tried to kill with an atomic bomb, came to the Senate floor, and offering up thanks to the same God we worship, thanked Him for America's great spiritual heritage, and then he asked God to bless every Member of the Senate.

The atomic bomb did not kill him. It did not break his will. It did not convert him to our way of thinking, to our religion, and to our democratic principles based upon the teachings of the Bible. That was done by a devout Methodist missionary in Japan.

So, Mr. President, I could not help but feel that if a miracle of that kind could be worked in his heart, it might be possible that a power stronger than the atomic bomb will rend the iron curtain behind which millions of misinformed people look upon us as enemies bent upon their destruction.

I am willing to concede everything that our leaders have said about the evil intentions of those who control the Soviet Union. Certainly they are not men the world can trust. They are not men who know the meaning of moral and spiritual courage and force. They do not subscribe to our meaning of freedom in its highest sense, nor do they recognize our God. But, Mr. President, human nature is much the same in all races and throughout all recorded time. I am therefore constrained to believe that behind the iron curtain in Russia, as well as in the satellite countries, there must be many people who are good in the sense that we use the term here, who are kind hearted, who are peace loving, and who would gladly cooperate with us in a program of preserving the peace of the world if we only knew how in our dealings with other races to conquer them by earning their esteem.

A worthy example, Mr. President, was set during colonial times in my home county of Rockbridge, which was created by the General Assembly of Virginia during the Revolutionary War and its county seat of Lexington, in which I live, named for the Battle of Lexington. On August 7, 1801, the Lexington Gazette was founded and has been continuously published for nearly a century and a half, being one of the oldest weekly newspapers of continuous publication in the Nation.

In each current issue it republishes items of 100 years ago, 75 years ago, and 50 years ago. In its issue of January 31, under items of 75 years ago, I find one entitled "A Rockbridge Monument," which reads as follows:

> In front of the Baptist Church at the Natural Bridge stands a column about 6 feet high of white Italian marble, with this inscription under a wreath: "In memory of William J. Routon who lost his life in a most heroic effort to rescue a little servant boy from drowning in James River, April 27, 1856, aged 27." (On the opposite side is a short sermon.)
> Mr. Routon was a poor laboring man and the only son of a poor widow, who lived in Lynchburg. The little servant boy belonged to William Paxton, Esq.

That incident concerning a white man who lost his life in an effort to save that of a slave boy, while unique and outstanding, was but one evidence of many concerning race relationships since the settlement of the Valley of Virginia by conscientious and freedom-loving Scotch-Irish Presbyterians during colonial days.

The first thing to be done by the Scotch-Irish settlers of the valley was to build a log cabin. The second thing was to build a church, and it was usually a good one, built either of cut stone or brick, because they built a church to endure. In those days Thomas Jefferson had not won his fight for religious freedom but a colonial Virginia Governor who persecuted nonconformers agreed not to molest the Presbyterians in the valley in return for their willingness to defend the lowlanders east of the Blue Ridge from Indian raids.

The first church to be built in the new village of Lexington was a Presbyterian Church. Since the slaves and free Negroes of the town had no church the white Presbyterians provided a gallery for them in their church and a Sunday school room. In later years one of the Sunday school teachers of those slaves was the immortal Stonewall Jackson, then a professor of military science and tactics at the Virginia Military Institute.

When Stonewall Jackson left Lexington his body-servant went with him and was his constant companion from the first action of the Virginia Militia at Harper's Ferry to the fateful night at Chancellorsville. After Jackson's death that body-servant returned to his home in Lexington and 2 years later, although apparently still in sound health, died. It is generally believed that he died of a broken heart.

Through the unfortunate conflict of 1861–65 and the even more trying days of the reconstruction period, when a vindictive Congress officially declared Virginians to be incapable of self-government and designated Virginia as Military District No. 1, to be ruled by an army and plundered by carpetbaggers, the loyalty of Lexington and Rockbridge County former slaves to their former masters, who had made a fight not to perpetuate slavery but to preserve States' rights, never wavered.

Some years ago through popular subscription a granite monument was erected on the Courthouse Square in Lexington and on it inscribed in bronze a tribute to the loyalty of those former slaves. I never see that monument but that I recall the words of Daniel Webster, who said:

> If we work upon marble, it will perish. If we work upon brass, time will efface it. If we rear temples, they will crumble to dust. But if we work upon men's immortal minds, if we imbue them with high principles, with the just fear of God and love of their fellowmen, we engrave on those tablets something which no time can efface, and which will brighten and brighten to all eternity.

That was the thought, Mr. President, that I had in mind when I recently said to our breakfast group that there was no record in history of any military establishment that had been able to preserve a permanent peace, and that while in this emergency I recognized the necessity of our creating a defense establishment capable of defending our homes from arson and plunder, I felt that if we ever hope to see again the day, described by Patrick Henry after the Revolutionary War, "when Peace hath spread her white wings above our fair land and contentment lies down at every door," we should employ in our peace program spiritual as well as physical force.

The example of what we need in this country and in every Christian country now arming to defend itself against possible aggression was set by the early Presbyterian settlers of Lexington when they shared with their slaves their Christian faith, their Christian hope, and their knowledge of ethical conduct based upon the Sermon on the Mount. As a result, when war came, there was no Fifth Column. "To conquer with arms is to make only a temporary conquest," said Woodrow Wilson. "To conquer the world by earning its esteem is a permanent conquest."

SUGGESTIONS FOR SETTLEMENT OF THE KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on November 27, 1950, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] inserted in the RECORD an exceedingly able paper written by the former Senator from North Carolina, the distinguished Dr. Frank P. Graham. His paper is entitled "The Need of a United America Confronted With the Threat of Totalitarian Tyranny in Global War."

Mr. President, in my opinion the statesmanship of that great paper written by the former Senator from North Carolina, Dr. Graham, needs to be contemplated very carefully by those in charge of America's foreign policy in these days. It should be read not only by every Member of Congress, but by citizens generally. It is a clear, concise, eloquent statement of the meaning of the crisis which confronts us.

Recently I received from the editor of the Durham Morning Herald, of Durham, N. C., a letter containing an enclosure in the form of another great statesmanlike paper written by Dr. Graham. The paper is entitled "As a Step Toward Preventing World War III—Recommendations for Action." I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the letter which I received from the editor of that newspaper.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOWN OF CHAPEL HILL,
Chapel Hill, N. C., January 16, 1951.

To Senator MORSE.

MY DEAR SIR: I am aware of the tremendous pressures on your time and thought. Still—as a citizen and on my own initiative, and in the interest of decent, honorable peace in this world—I want to suggest and urge that you read the attached statement by Dr. Frank P. Graham, and that you use it in any way you may think best.

I am deeply impressed with the statement's sweep through history; its clear, logical analysis of the dangerously explosive war potentials which face people everywhere; its practical suggestions for dealing with the Korean problem; and its emphasis on revealing and using the moral power of the United Nations General Assembly for peace.

Several Senators have said this statement by Dr. Graham is a timely supplement to his stirring plea for national unity and the unity of the free world, made on the day he left the United States Senate and printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 96, part 18, pages A7286-A7290.

This complete reprint was made through the generous interest of the Durham (N. C.) Morning Herald. The substance of the statement appeared on Christmas Day in the Washington Post and the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, and later in the New York Herald Tribune and the Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer.

Respectfully yours,

EDWIN S. LANIER.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I ask unanimous consent also to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the statement made by Dr. Graham, I wish to make these comments about it: As we know, Dr. Graham was the American representative on the international commission which worked out what might be described as the mediation settlement of the Indonesian conflict of many months ago. That settlement was finally based upon what has become known as the Renville principles. In the statement, sent to me by the editor of the Durham (N. C.) Morning Herald, Dr. Graham again, in an inspiring style which is characteristic of his writings, and with a penetrating analysis which is typical of his exceedingly high intelligence, discusses the meaning of the Renville principles, and leaves with the reader the suggestion that probably we should consider the Renville principles in connection with the problem of trying to settle the Korean issue. In the course of his paper he says:

The Renville principles already approved by the United Nations in the Indonesian situation are a possible starting point for the consideration of principles and procedures for the Korean situation.

Mr. President, let me make clear that, as I read Dr. Graham's statement to which I have been referring, it is not his suggestion that the Renville principles constitute the solution of the Korean situation; but, rather, it is his suggestion, as the words I have just read make very clear, that they constitute a possible starting point, and only a starting point, for a consideration of principles and procedures for settling the Korean problem.

He says:

The Renville principles are substantially the following: (1) military provisions for cease fire, a truce, a demarcation line, demilitarized zones on both sides of the line, and the withdrawal by stages of all non-Korean armed forces under the supervision of the United Nations; and (2) political principles with provision for internal security, civil liberties, free trade, transportation, communication, economic rehabilitation, plebiscites or other forms of free elections, and convention of delegates elected on the basis of population, for framing a constitution for a free, independent, and united Korean nation under the supervision of the United Nations for the self-determination of all the Korean peoples and their admission as an independent member nation into the United Nations.

These Renville principles and procedures, modified and adapted to meet the Korean situation, could be the ways and means of substituting ballots for bullets and of substituting law and the self-determination of peoples for war and the self-extermination of peoples.

Mr. President, it is not for me to say that ex-Senator Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, has outlined an architect's blueprint for the settling of this great international problem; but it is for me to say that after reading his keen analysis, I believe he does lay down some principles which should receive the careful consideration of the officials of the State Department and of our representatives in the United Nations. We cannot escape the fact that what we seek is peace in Korea upon honorable terms, peace in Korea under the supervision and authorization of the United Nations, peace in Korea without appeasement.

One cannot read Dr. Graham's statement without recognizing that he is unalterably opposed to appeasement, just as, as a member of the International Commission in connection with the Indonesian affair, he refused to be a party to appeasement in that dispute.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the article entitled, "As a Step Toward Preventing World War III—Recommendations for Action," by Dr. Frank P. Graham, former Senator from North Carolina. As I have said, the article was printed in the Durham (N. C.) Morning Herald for January 7, 1951.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AS A STEP TOWARD PREVENTING WORLD WAR III—RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ACTION

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is a revised reprint of an article by Dr. Graham which appeared in the Durham Morning Herald on January 7, 1951. The Durham Morning Herald Co., Inc., Durham, N. C., is pleased to reproduce this article.)

(By Frank P. Graham)

CHRISTMAS AND THE NEW YEAR

Christmas 1950 and the New Year 1951 have come with their heritage from a great past and their hopes amid the darkness which broods over the peoples of the earth.

In the nearly 2,000 years since the first Christmas there have been transmitted to the keeping of our generation the Hebraic, Greek, Latin, Catholic, Protestant, Scientific, Industrial, Democratic, European, and American heritage of human freedom and humane hopes yet unfulfilled and now imperiled in this world.

In the reorientation of the American as part also of the Pacific-Asiatic world, it is of concern to us that in the East the spiritual heritage of the oldest civilizations is being uprooted by conquerors who would exalt the ideology of one generation and the quick ruthless methods of the police state above the wisdom of hundreds of generations. The need for reform is large and insistent in the East and the West. The East and the West need the values of creative cooperation in reform. This cooperation will be more creative when based on a mutual respect for the deep spiritual heritage of historic peoples, a decent regard for the truth above the falsehoods of hate as the basis for fair relations, the freedom of the human mind as the creative source of progress, and the dignity of the individual and the moral autonomy and enterprise of the human spirit as the basis of enduring freedom and reform in this critical age.

In the womb of the mid-twentieth century are a-borning the ideological, economic, social, political, scientific-atomic-cosmic, and spiritual forces which mayhap determine the destinies of peoples for generations.

The modern economic framework of production and communication, which encompasses the earth with its dynamic power, catches up ideas, depressions, and wars anywhere and involves, and sometimes engulfs, peoples everywhere.

Dictatorships have risen through and for the concentration under one central political control of the police state all the powers of production and communication (1) for its mastery over the bodies and minds, the work and life, the hopes and the spirits of the people; (2) for the subjugation of the free peoples; and (3) for the domination of all the peoples of the earth.

The spiritual heritage of a great past and the humane hopes for a freer and better world in the west and the east are both now in peril. In two hemispheres the peoples, with both despair and hope, look from the background of centuries gone into the years ahead pregnant with war or peace, freedom or slavery for hundreds of millions of people across the earth. The world-wide crusade for freedom and peace must climb from the valleys of weakness and fear into the hills of courage and power.

In the midst of the global gloom of the closing days of 1950 Christmas came with its ray of hope in a darkening world. Nearly 2,000 years ago a child was born in a lowly manger in a little country in Asia near the sea which yet joins with hope the east and west. Glad tidings came in the darkness before the dawn. With the child was born the hope of peace on earth and good will toward men. The child became man and lived and died for the brotherhood of all men and the fatherhood of one God. Jesus and the prophets and saints, east and west, taught the Golden Rule and human brotherhood: one God, one family, and one world of freedom, justice, peace, and good will among men, unfulfilled to this hour.

I. THE YEARNING OF THE PEOPLES FOR PEACE

1. In the United States

In the United States today the mothers and fathers in homes, the sons and daughters who dream their youthful dreams of homes of their own, the people on farms, in factories, stores, mines, and upon the seas, the people in cities, towns, villages, and the countryside, in schools and churches, want peace. They would have peace, they are sure, if only the cruel dictators of the Soviet Union would stop their aggressive tyranny and let the people have peace.

2. In the Soviet Union

In the Soviet Union, the mothers and fathers in homes, the sons and daughters, who dream their youthful dreams of homes of their own, the people on farms, in factories, stores, mines, and upon the seas, in cities, towns, villages, and the countryside, want peace. They would have peace, they have been led to believe, if only the Fascist warmongers in the United States would let the people have peace.

3. In other nations

In other nations of the earth the mothers and fathers in homes, the sons and daughters who dream their youthful dreams of homes of their own, the people everywhere as they work and love, dream and hope, want peace. They would have peace, hundreds of millions of them believe, if only the Soviet Union and the United States would let the people have peace.

4. The people of all colors and creeds, races and regions

The yellow, brown, red, black, and white peoples want peace. The Buddhists, Hindus, Confucianists, Shintoists, Moslems, Jews, Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholics, Protestants, believers and unbelievers, want peace. The people of North and South America, Europe, Africa, Asia, Australia and the islands of the oceans and seas, want peace. All the peoples of the earth, who in this generation, have suffered through a world war, a world depression and another world war, yearn and pray for freedom and security, justice, and peace.

II. THE UNIVERSAL YEARNING OF THE PEOPLES FOR PEACE CONFRONTED WITH THE HIGH POTENTIALS OF THE WORLD FOR WAR Against this time for universal good will, in the face of the universal desire of the peoples for peace, and despite the unresting efforts of the Government of the United States and other governments, the nations are confronted with dictatorship, imperialism, and aggression.

1. The ways of dictatorship

The Communist dictatorship has made war on religion, subjugated the freedom of the mind, the freedom of representation in parliaments, the freedom of association in churches, corporations, labor unions, cooperative societies, fraternal and civic organizations, has broken treaties; blocked the unification of Germany and Korea; subjugated by methods of the police state nine nations and parts of two nations; sought to sabotage the recovery of Southern and Western European nations; stripped Manchuria, poisoned the minds of hundreds of millions of people with falsehoods and hate; crushed the freedom to struggle for freedom; enslaved increasingly more millions of people in enforced bondage than were ever held in slavery at any time in history; segregated 200 million people behind the iron curtain; vetoed the international control and inspection of atomic power; blocked the international efforts and procedures of the United Nations for peace; and has gone far in a program of aggression and imperialism for the domination of the world.

2. The ways of freedom

With all its unfair but decreasing discriminations, injustices, failures, and frustrations of freedom and democracy, the United States has preserved the freedom of religion, the freedom of the mind and the freedom of association; has advanced the freedom to struggle for freedom by which more millions of Negroes in the last 85 years in the United States have made more progress than any like number of people in any like time in modern history, revealing, against many handicaps, the innate capacities of a great people for self-development in an advancing democracy; liberated the Philippines; has, against both the Dutch and Communist imperialists, thrown its weight on the side of the independence and freedom of the 70,000,000 Indonesian people; has, against both the French and Communist imperialists, favored the autonomy of the Indo-Chinese people; has favored the self-determination of peoples in Israel and the Near East, in southern Asia, Korea, and Japan; has helped toward the self-recovery of the peoples of Turkey, Greece, Italy, France, West Germany, Northern and Western Europe and Great Britain; has projected a program for the technical assistance and self-development of peoples in both hemispheres; offered to give up its then monopoly of atomic power for international control and inspection; helped to facilitate the procedures and cooperated with the purposes of the United Nations against aggression as the best hope of freedom and peace in the world.

3. No appeasement of aggression

Standing on the brink of the abyss of another possible world war between dictatorship which, with all its pretenses, would crush the freedom to struggle for freedom—and the democracies, which, with all their faults, would preserve the freedom to struggle for freedom, some free nations are still torn by the opposite pulls of appeasement and resistance to aggression. In the present complex world situation resistance to aggression in Korea or anywhere may lead to global war. Appeasement of aggression leads no less surely and even more disastrously into another world war.

4. Not backward from a Dunkirk to a Munich, but forward

In resisting aggression in Korea the United Nations risked the military disaster of a Dunkirk to avoid the moral disaster of a Munich. If the recently victorious United Nations forces should be driven off the peninsula, the way would not be backward to Munich but forward with the United Nations for the ultimate triumph of freedom, self-determination of all peoples, justice, and peace under the laws rather than by the wars of nations. In the present situation whether we appease or resist, drift or plunge, or stand aside in isolation, the world potentials are so heavily charged that a local spark may become a global conflagration.

In the global dilemma of the universal yearnings of the people for peace and the high potentials of the world for war, it is only through heroic efforts of the Government of the United States in cooperation with the other governments in the United Nations, persistent against great odds, that a way may be found to make effective the people's passion for peace against the aggressors' will for war.

The free peoples must stand resolutely together against appeasement of aggressions and any surrender to the universal domination of a world totalitarian state.

III. MEANTIME, MOBILIZATION OF THE FREE WORLD FOR COLLECTIVE SELF-DEFENSE OF HUMAN FREEDOM

Meantime the United States and all the nations of the free world, east and west, must mobilize their economic, military, scientific, democratic, human, and spiritual resources for the cooperative self-defense of their democratic existence and the self-determination of peoples. Denunciations, armaments, plans, and pacts—essential as they are—are not enough. The American people, in democratic and moral answer to fascism and communism, must relentlessly keep up the struggle against imperialism, privilege, monopoly, and discriminations, and take the next step toward fulfillment of our American dream and our spiritual hopes for the freedom and equal opportunity for all people in a free and federated world.

The free peoples must stand together in defense of their commitments to the freedom of the human mind, the dignity of the human being, and the moral autonomy of the human spirit against a monstrous tyranny which seeks to subjugate all peoples in the expanding dominions of a world police state.

IV. THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

In such a complex and desperate situation where may the people of the earth look for the implementation of their universal aspiration for peace? Not to the capital of any one or two nations. That way alone is the isolated way to war. Rather to the capital of all the nations. The way of international cooperation is the only way to enduring peace. The only international agency available for the balanced information and action of the peoples of all nations is the United Nations. With all its failures and frustrations, with all the need for amendment to its Charter for a federated world, the peoples of the earth still look in hope to the United Nations dedicated by the noble principles of its Charter to stopping aggression, preventing war, promoting freedom, and maintaining peace in the world.

1. The General Assembly is the only world forum of all the nations:

More democratically and organically the people now look to the General Assembly with new hope in the recently and overwhelmingly adopted procedures for uniting for peace. In the General Assembly are represented 60 nations which include the overwhelming majority of the peoples of the continents and islands of the earth by their own self-determination.

In the midst of the almost unsolvable dilemmas on the edge of a world catastrophe, whose burdens are now heroically borne by the statesmen of the free world, time does not wait for amendments to the Charter, for stronger ways, better days, more democratic governments, or nobler people. To amend the Charter the United Nations must now save the Charter and itself from destruction. To become more democratic the people must save the freedom to be a democracy. Freedom and democracy begin at home but without resistance to the aggression and tyranny of the totalitarian police state, freedom and democracy would have no home in which to grow. The people of the world, as imperfect as we all are in our human and inhuman ways, are the only people available in this fearful time. Now and soon is the only time left. The General Assembly is the only world forum of all the nations. The Assembly of the delegates from 60 nations is the most representative of the organs of the United Nations. It is not subject to the veto in its own jurisdiction. It is the only agency in existence in this confused and yet hopeful world which has a chance of enlisting the attention of most of the peoples of the earth for making effective their hopes for peace.

2. A majority vote of the Security Council on a procedural matter not subject to the veto can lift the dispute from the Council agenda and free the Assembly to make recommendations:

It is recognized that, in accordance with article 12 of the Charter, the General Assembly cannot make a recommendation concerning any matter on the agenda of the Security Council. Nevertheless, since putting a dispute on the agenda of the Council is a procedural matter not subject to the veto, a majority vote of the Council can remove a matter from the Council's agenda and thus make it a matter regarding which the Assembly can make recommendations.

Now is the time and the General Assembly is the agency to make findings and recommendations for the principles and procedures toward the settlement of a crucial dispute. This further attempt to settle this dispute is another effort to prevent a total global war, which would engulf the peoples of the world in the killing of scores of millions of people across the earth and the fateful destruction of the civilization accumulated from all ages and inherited from all peoples. As a starting point of the discussions for settlement of the dispute in Korea, the Renville principles themselves suggest their own applicability to the Korean dispute.

V. THE RENVILLE PRINCIPLES

The Renville principles already approved by the United Nations in the Indonesian situation is a possible starting point for the consideration of principles and procedures for the Korean situation.

The Renville principles are substantially the following: (1) Military provisions for cease fire, a truce, a demarcation line, demilitarized zones on both sides of the line, and the withdrawal by stages of all non-Korean armed forces under the supervision of the United Nations; and (2) political principles with provision for internal security, civil liberties, free trade, transportation, communication, economic rehabilitation, plebiscites or other forms of free elections, and convention of delegates elected on the basis of population, for framing a constitution for a free, independent, and united Korean nation under the supervision of the United Nations for the self-determination of all the Korean peoples and their admission as an independent member nation into the United Nations.

These Renville principles and procedures, modified and adapted to meet the Korean situation, could be the ways and means of substituting ballots for bullets and of substituting law and the self-determination of peoples for war and the self-extermination of the peoples.

VI. THE REJECTION OF FAIR PRINCIPLES AND OPEN PROCEDURES FOR THE SELF-DETERMINATION OF PEOPLE WOULD REVEAL TO THE PEOPLES OF THE EARTH THE DESIGNS OF DICTATORS FOR AGGRESSION AND WORLD DOMINATION

If, in the face of the publication of the findings and recommendations for the truce and the principles and procedures for the settlement of the international dispute, any nation, and specifically the dictatorship behind the puppet government which refuses substantially to accept them but determines heedlessly to go on its way of defiance, aggression, and war, would thereby make its position of recalcitrance and aggression dramatically known to the great majority of the peoples of the earth, above the false propaganda of dictators and beyond the reasonable question of free peoples, such a position would make clear which government is recklessly bent upon aggression and war for the domination of the world. Any such government, in flagrant disregard of the yearnings of the people for peace and in rejection of the recommendations of the only existing international agency based on full and open discussions in the only world forum, brands itself as an outlaw before the judgment bar of mankind.

Such an outlaw nation, exposed before the world, would have to take the consequences of the combined economic, political, military, and moral self-defense of a free world in carrying out the principles and purposes of the United Nations as the best hope of fulfilling the yearnings and prayers of the peoples for freedom, justice, and peace under law.

While some wait for universal disarmament, a limited world federal government, world law, and a world police force, for the prevention of aggression and war, there must be mustered now on the side of human freedom against aggression not only more people and more bombs but also a greater faith. In the moral potentials of the United Nations fully utilized is more ultimate power than in the explosive force of atomic bombs.

The muster of the effective power of the General Assembly for human freedom and the self-determination of peoples might prevent war and thereby avoid the use of atomic bombs against aggression. The world's potentials for war and self-destruction of peoples must be brought under the control of the United Nations' potentials for peace and the abundant production by peoples. To the large executive power and influence of the Security Council, presently subject to the paralysis of the veto, must be added more promptly and effectively the moral power of the General Assembly of all the nations, which can, without a veto, make recommendations to the Security Council and to member nations—with the peoples of the world looking on with their hopes and listening in with their great moral power.

The yearnings and prayers of the peoples for freedom and peace are universal. The potentials for war and self-destruction are world-wide.

The time to save freedom and peace is desperately late. The only agency which can now possibly express and muster the moral power of mankind for freedom and hope and peace is the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The peoples of the world, under God, to save themselves and their civilization, shall have a rebirth of freedom and faith in the effective power of the moral opinion of mankind, mobilized by the General Assembly of the nations of the earth against tyranny, aggression, and war.

VII. THE ULTIMATE TRIUMPH OF THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE MORAL LAW THROUGH INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION BY WHICH DICTATORS MUST FALL, EMPIRES CRUMBLE, AGGRESSION FAILS, AND FREEDOM PREVAILS IN GOD'S GOOD TIME

Undergirding the power of the free world and the principles of the United Nations would be the universal yearnings of the peoples of the earth for peace and the world-wide assertion, through the General Assembly, of the moral sovereignty in the minds and hearts of the peoples as a part of the structure of God's universe. False propaganda in the face of the truth will eventually become as chaff which the wind driveth away. All peoples will yet rise in self-determination through the knowledge of the truth which will make them free. The light of liberty will yet shine through the iron curtain of men's minds. The warmth of human brotherhood will yet melt away the iron curtain of men's hearts. The people's hopes for freedom and peace still fly their flags high in the Western World and across the eastern seas. Against the ultimate sovereignty of the moral law which runs through the universe, the history of nations, and the minds and hearts of the people who pray for freedom, justice, and peace, empires will crumble, dictators fall, and aggressors make war no more.

The birth of the Child

With the birth of the Child the idea of the fatherhood of one God, the ultimate sovereignty of the moral law, and the brotherhood of all men, became flesh in Jesus, Son of God, brother of men, scourge of wrong, and Prince of Peace. He was Son of man who had not where to lay his head, lived among men, ministered to the poor in body and sick of heart, was crucified and rose again in redemptive and spiritual power to resist aggression, tyranny, and injustice, and to bring peace and brotherhood on earth in the great adventure of the human spirit in our earthly pilgrimage toward the kingdom of God.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am particularly interested in these recommendations by former Senator Graham, because on July 28, 1945, I pleaded on this floor for a recognition of the provisional Government of Korea at that time, in carrying out the principles of self-determination of the San Francisco Charter. I said that if we did not follow such a course of action and place Korea under a mandate or trusteeship of the United Nations until such time as a free election could be held in Korea, there was danger that Korea would fall as a ripe plum into Russia's lap. It seemed clear to me then, as we recognized the Russian pattern as it spread itself over satellite countries, that unless we stood up and fought for the freedom of Korea, then Korea would become a threatened area, so far as the peace of Asia was concerned, and I so pleaded at that time upon the floor of the Senate.

There were only a few of us at that time who were willing to put into practice immediately the principles of self-determination of the San Francisco Charter as they applied to Korea. Instead of following that course of action, what did our Nation do? It does not serve us well to ignore the great mistakes we make in foreign policy. We joined with Russia in the partition of Korea; and the pages of history must record that when we did that we joined in the partition of the freedom of Korea.

Mr. President, in view of the tremendous sacrifices which American boys are making in Korea, I think we need pause to examine and study and carefully consider every possibility of ending hostilities, short of appeasement, every possibility short of surrender, every possibility which offers an honorable peace in Korea. Former Senator Graham, in an article which has been sent to me by the editor of a paper in his home State, has offered to the officials of our Government a statement of principles deserving of their most careful consideration, and also deserving from them an explanation as to any weaknesses in the Graham proposals. I believe the American people are entitled to know that authorities in charge of our foreign policy are taking advantage of every possible honorable proposal which seeks to bring to an end the ghastly and costly holocaust in Korea.

Mr. President, I am no quitter, but I happen to be one of those who believe that unless we can follow a military course of action in Korea backed up by adequate United Nations support, a course of action which we can defend without high casualties on the part of American boys in Korea, we should withdraw from Korea to such a line in the Pacific as we can defend against the Red Chinese. We should stretch that line of defense and maintain it by all of the means of military force at our disposal, until such time as Red China rejoins the free nations. That, Mr. President, includes our giving support to whatever guerrilla forces there may be in China, on Formosa, or elsewhere, as an aid to maintaining that line of defense in the Pacific.

We cannot continue to make the sacrifices of American lives which are being made in Korea unless our military authorities can show us in the near future that there is a chance of military success without unreasonable casualties. I think the proposals offered in this statesmanlike article by the former Senator from North Carolina are entitled to the very careful consideration of the State Department. The country is entitled to a clear statement from the State Department as to what steps are being taken within the United Nations to try to negotiate an honorable peace based upon the principles which former Senator Graham discusses in this article if those principles are feasible of application to the Korean War.

Mr. President, I desire now to turn my attention to another matter for a brief time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I understand it has been announced on the radio that I would discuss today the railroad strike. I suppose that the announcement was the result of an offhand remark I made on Saturday to several persons that on Monday, if I obtained the floor, I expected again to make a very sincere suggestion as to how I think the administration should move in connection with the railroad strike.

It is not a new suggestion for me. It is a suggestion which I made to the White House in connection with this same case last spring. It is a suggestion which I saw work successfully in a great many emergency cases during World War II. It is a suggestion which I think the President of the United States is in a stronger position today to carry out than he was last spring, because of the much greater seriousness of the emergency which confronts our country. It is a simple suggestion. It is a suggestion that in this great emergency the President of the United States use his war powers, as war powers were used during World War II, to call upon the parties to the railroad dispute to submit their case on its merits to an arbitrator appointed by the President of the United States for final and binding determination. It should be understood by all concerned that in the meantime, and immediately, there be a full and complete resumption of work on the part of the railroad workers now on strike.

I hope the Senate will permit and will forgive this personal reference, but, as the enforcement officer of the War Labor Board during World War II, and as one who had to deal with a great many emergency disputes, I wish to say that I do not know of a single instance of failure when the President of the United States exercised his inherent war powers in time of war—and we are at war—calling upon the parties to submit their case to an arbitrator who would be appointed by him, and whose decision would be final. Such an exercise of the President's inherent war powers is bound to succeed, because back of such an appointment is the recognition on the part of the American people that it is a fair and just and reasonable procedure for the settlement of a dispute in an hour of great crisis.

There is, I fear, a great deal of misunderstanding in America at this hour in regard to the present railroad dispute. Do not misunderstand me; I hold no brief for the strike. In my judgment, the workers cannot justify the strike, I care not how legitimate their claims may be in respect to the merits of some of the issues involved in the strike. The fact is that in this hour of crisis every American, I care not from what group he comes, must be willing to subordinate his selfish economic interest to the common welfare. That goes for railroad workers, as well as for all other groups in America. But when we start from that major premise, it is very easy then to adopt an emotional attitude which makes us intolerant of any proposal which may be based on the merits of the particular case.

Mr. President, no labor dispute is permanently settled by using the kind of duress and coercion which stirs up public opinion as the result of invective against a group of fellow citizens. It is impossible permanently to settle a labor dispute and bring harmonious labor relations into an industry until there is a decision on the merits of the issues involved.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding about what has happened in this case. In the first place, Mr. President, it is some 22 months old. In the second place, the case has been at the doorstep of the White House for many months. I happen to be one who believes that the case should be a rare one in which the White House steps into the picture and takes jurisdiction. Whenever the White House takes jurisdiction over a labor case, there is only one end result the White House should seek and that is a final decision on the merits of the issues. I stated many times to the President of the United States during the war, "You have taken jurisdiction over this case. Now we must take it through to a decision on the merits, because, until the issues are settled on their merits, the case is not solved in the interest of the war effort which is the justification for White House jurisdiction." Let us see if it is true, as it is being represented by some of the press throughout the country, that this case has gone to a decision.

Mr. President, as in every other litigious dispute, when we deal with the merits of a labor dispute, we must not lose sight of the procedures involved and of the rights of the parties under those procedures. In this case, what the public is not giving due weight to, in my judgment, is the fact that no final decision on the merits of the case has ever been reached or issued by the White House. The question is asked: "What about the Emergency Board?" That emphasizes one of the great misrepresentations which have been fed to the American public by some of the outstanding newspapers, who have had a duty, it seems to me, to educate their readers as to the true meaning of the procedures under the Railway Act of 1926.

An emergency board, Mr. President, is not an arbitration board. An emergency board does not render decisions on the issues of a case. An emergency board is a hybrid type of tribunal. It is an advisory board. It acts somewhat in the capacity of a mediation board. Mediation is always based upon the principle of compromise, taking into account the economic power of the disputants at the time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I should like to finish this analysis of procedure in the interest of continuity, and then I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). The Senator from Oregon declines to yield at the moment.

Mr. MORSE. An emergency board, Mr. President, is not an arbitration board. If it is desired to make an emergency board an arbitration board, the junior Senator from Oregon is ready and willing to give very careful consideration to the merits of such a proposal, along with certain procedural safeguards which I believe will always have to be established if we ever reach the point when we think any segment of the economy of the Nation should be brought under compulsory arbitration. But I quickly point out that it seems to me that if we ever come to the point where we want to subject the railroad industry, so far as labor relations are concerned, to compulsory arbitration, we must vest in the Board jurisdiction over the question of rates.

I know whereof I speak as to the importance of that position, because in 1941, as the Chairman of the National Railway Emergency Board, in a Nationwide dispute, I sat in the office of the President of the United States with that Board, and also in the presence of the then Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There was a frank discussion of the recommendations of the Emergency Board in regard to wages, hours, and conditions of employment, and in behalf of that Board, and under its authorization, I pointed out to the President of the United States that although we thought that on the merits a higher wage should have been recommended, and that a more favorable set of rules, from the standpoint of the railroad workers, should have been recommended, we could not make those recommendations, in all fairness, because we did not believe many of the railroads involved in the dispute had the ability to pay those wages and grant those conditions of employment because of the limitations of rates upon them.

The record is clear, Mr. President. There followed the rejection of the Emergency Board's report in 1941. There was a mediation settlement that granted some more favorable conditions. I shall not bore the Senate with the details, because the report of that case is a matter of public record. The point I desire to emphasize is that it is interesting to note that shortly thereafter the Interstate Commerce Commission granted substantial increases in rates in order to adjust them to the recommendations of the mediation settlement of that dispute which necessarily involved increased operating costs for the railroads. In other words, we had the experience in the 1941 case of seeing how difficult it is to render even recommendations on the merits of a railroad labor dispute when the tribunal which makes the recommendations has no jurisdiction at all over the determination of the ability of the railroads to pay because of the rate restriction requirements which are imposed upon them.

We cannot undertake a solution of a problem like the one now confronting us by halfway measures. If we are to say to the workers in public utilities "We are going to restrict your freedom in handling emergency disputes, by requiring you to accept a decision as final and binding, upon the merits of the evidence," then the tribunal making the decision must also have within its jurisdiction power to determine the rates the railroads can charge, in the interest of seeing to it that they pay fair wages and grant proper working conditions to the workers.

So I say, Mr. President, that I happen to hold the view that compulsory arbitration as a blanket procedure, even in the case of public utilities, is a very dangerous procedure, and I happen to believe that compulsory arbitration as a blanket procedure for handling disputes has within it the seed of a development which eventually will lead to the nationalization of public utilities. I am so opposed, Mr. President, to a state economy, I am so opposed to the nationalization of basic industries in this country, that I prefer to follow the procedure which I recommend today of having these cases—and they will be few in number when we consider all the disputes which may arise—settled on an individual basis, case by case, when the machinery for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes within a public utility industry, be it the railroads or any other public utility, breaks down. That is the procedure we followed in World War II.

I desire to refer again, Mr. President, to the nature of an emergency board. To argue now, as White House spokesmen do and as many newspaper editors in their editorials do, that a decision was rendered in this case many months ago by the action of the emergency board, is contrary to fact. It involves a type of misrepresentation of the case to the American people. The average citizen does not understand these highly technical but substantively important procedural matters. If he once sat on an emergency board he would know full well that it does not function as a judicial tribunal for the purpose of settling disputes on their merits in accordance with the preponderance of the evidence. They have many of the characteristics of an arbitration tribunal but they are not in fact or by jurisdiction an arbitration tribunal.

It is my opinion that emergency boards do a remarkably fine job in making recommendations to the President and the American people on the basis of the facts as they find them or believe them to be. However, Mr. President, you would function entirely differently on an emergency board if you sat on it in the purely judicial capacity of an arbitrator, because when you walk into an arbitration courtroom you walk into a judicial process. There is one rule of primary concern to an arbitrator, and that is the rule of the preponderance of evidence on the merits of each issue involved in the dispute.

Mr. President, I have been a stickler for the application of the rules of judicial process to arbitration, and I have been very proud of the fact, as one who has presided over a great many arbitration courtrooms, that lawyer after lawyer has said to me, "So far as the process of this arbitration courtroom is concerned, I find no difference between it and the rule of preponderance of evidence as it is applied in any Federal court." That is the way it should be. The parties should know that when they come before an arbitrator for a judicial determination of the issue involved in a dispute, the record, and the record alone, speaks for itself.

Mr. President, that is not the way an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act of 1926 works. Let us read the act. The function of the emergency board is advisory only. The Board makes recommendations. The act specifically provides that the parties to the dispute are not bound by the recommendations. In my opinion it is unfair for the White House, and for that portion of the press which has been engaging in this form of misrepresentation, to tell the American people that there has been a decision reached on the merits of the dispute by way of an emergency board report. It is true that an advisory opinion or set of recommendations have been suggested to the President. All parties to the dispute, including the President himself, must know that the emergency board report has no binding effect whatsoever, and is not a judicial decision.

I happen to be one who believes that the railroad brotherhoods have done themselves, as well as the public, great injury by the attitude which they have taken toward the Railway Labor Act of 1926 by following a course of rejecting such a large number of emergency board reports. They have a right to reject reports; the law gives them that right. Unless and until the Congress of the United States provides a different procedure, which will impose different obligations on emergency boards, the railway brotherhoods have the right to continue to reject them.

After the rejection in the present case, what happened? A mediation procedure was started in the White House. The President did not take personal jurisdiction over the dispute. He did what he certainly had the right to do. I do not quarrel with the policy he followed, because the policy he adopted was discretionary with him. He selected a very able and nationally known mediator, who is a close personal friend of mine and for whom I have an exceedingly high regard, both personally and professionally. I refer to Dr. John R. Steelman who attempted to mediate a settlement. The mediation went on for a great many days.

Mr. President, I am not concerned or interested in the little personal differences which almost invariably arise in a hotly contested labor dispute. They happen to be a part of the whole picture. We are hearing a great deal these days on both sides about petty personal differences and personal dislikes which developed in this case. I am not concerned with such differences. I am interested in keeping the record straight as to what happened. I think the record shows that the very able mediator, John R. Steelman, met with a negotiating committee representing the carriers and with four presidents of the railroad brotherhoods in an endeavor to mediate the dispute.

A great deal of complaint has been made by the railroad brotherhoods that at no time has the White House ever called the president of a railroad company to sit down and discuss the controversy. I have some understanding and some sympathy with that point of view taken by the railroad brotherhoods. However, I do not think that the complaint ought to be considered to be very controlling or to be a very vital criticism of the White House. I say that because, again, that kind of procedure was discretionary with the White House. Speaking only for myself, I have observed in a great many instances that a case can be settled much more quickly if the top men are brought in, instead of subordinates. We discovered that to be so during the War Labor Board days, when serious national emergency disputes occurred. We found that it was possible to settle a dispute much more quickly when we brought in the president of a corporation, and had him sit down and at least be a party to the negotiations.

The White House did not see fit to do that, and it was within its discretion not to do it. The record shows that after prolonged mediation conferences the presidents of the brotherhoods and the negotiating committee for the carriers signed a so-called mediation settlement, but with the distinct understanding, which is clearly established by the news releases at the time, that the settlement was only tentative, and had to be taken back to the membership of the workers committee of general chairmen for ratification. Anyone who has dealt with railroad-labor disputes knows that to be the common practice. Under the constitutions of the brotherhoods, the presidents of the brotherhoods have no dictatorial power to bind the brotherhoods to any mediation settlement into which they enter.

I have checked into the newspaper releases of the day on which the mediation settlement was made known to the American public. I have read the account of it written by Louis Stark, and published in the New York Times. Mr. Stark is recognized as one of the most able and accurate labor relations reporters in the country. His account, as do the accounts of other reporters, makes it very clear that when the mediation settlement was announced to the public, all of the parties to the mediation knew that the presidents of the brotherhoods had to take the settlement back to the membership for approval. Therefore, Mr. President, I say that it is unfair and not completely honest reporting of the facts for the White House to seek to give the American people the impression that the brotherhoods have reneged on an agreement which they entered into on or about December 21. The spokesman for the White House, the representatives of the carriers, and the representatives of the brotherhoods knew at that meeting that the paper which was signed could not represent any final agreement binding upon the brotherhoods until it was submitted to the brotherhoods for approval.

What did they do? When it was submitted to the committees of general chairmen they unanimously disapproved of the proposed settlement. It is not for me to say that they followed a proper course of action. I wish only to say that they had a right to reject the settlement; and I think the White House owes it to the American people to report the facts about the procedural obligations and rights of all parties to the dispute. The White House cannot justify giving to the American people the impression that the railroad brotherhoods have not kept their word under a mediation settlement, because no agreement binding upon the brotherhoods could be reached until the proposed settlement—and that is all it was—was ratified by the brotherhoods.

Following the rejection of the mediation settlement the case hung fire. I am at a loss to understand that delay, Mr. President. I should think that the moment it became public knowledge that the proposed mediation settlement had been rejected by the brotherhoods—which they had the procedural right to do—the White House would have gone into action, because it took jurisdiction in the first place, and it should have seen the case through to final solution without any delay or interruption in the transportation service if further negotiations could prevent it. But many days passed. Again let me make clear that no one can be more critical than I am of the course of action which the brotherhoods followed. Nevertheless, I am talking also about the obligations of the White House in this matter.

At the time of the rejection of the proposed mediation settlement the White House part in this dispute was characterized by inaction, not action. Then certain railroad workers resorted to what everyone knows, as was stated in the Star editorial yesterday, I believe, was a dishonest strike. It is a dishonest strike. The brotherhoods are not kidding anybody about who is sick. I will tell them who is sick. The American people are sick and tired of the way this case has been batted around on the part of all concerned; and they are particularly sick and tired of the resort to strike action on the part of the brotherhoods in an hour of great national crisis.

No matter how irritated we may become in our feelings, no matter how incensed we may be over the injury which is being done this country, and the great impairment to the defense effort, as well as the danger to our boys in Korea which is resulting from this strike, that does not change the fact that this case ought to be settled on its merits. I do not know how it is going to be settled on its merits unless we get a judicial decision on the merits; and we have not had one. I do not know how we are going to settle it on its merits unless the President now—and he has the power to do it—notifies the parties that he is appointing a judicial officer, an arbitrator who will proceed to sit at such and such an hour, and who will expect the parties to appear before him and submit their case on the merits for final determination.

Someone may say, "That will involve both a great deal of face saving and loss of face." Again, I am not interested in those personal factors. I am interested in some of the basic principles, however, which I think are involved in the kind of procedure which has been followed in this case; and I wish to say that it does not augur well for the future of labor disputes during this defense period.

Mr. President, I have received, as have other Members of this body, a great many telegrams saying, "Draft them into the Army. We draft doctors into the Army." But, of course, the senders of those telegrams again do not look into the matter of legal power. To do that we would have to change the law. To do that would, in my opinion, raise some very fundamental questions of public policy. To do that would, in my opinion, constitute a misuse of the American military uniform. To do that would abuse the basic principle of patriotic service in the Army of the United States.

I have never looked upon the use of the American military uniform as a means of penalizing wrongdoers in America. I have always thought that service in the American uniform was on a plane high above that level.

Likewise, I believe that the use of the American uniform for that purpose would raise some very fundamental questions of freedom. After all, the Selective Service, as it is presently devised, functions on a democratic basis in accordance with fixed legal standards. I would hesitate a long time before I would ever vote for a law which would empower the President of the United States to throw into the Army, by way of penalty, workers who in his opinion are acting against the public interest. No matter how strong our feelings over wrongdoing, we must keep our eyes on fundamental principles of government, even in time of emergency. As the Supreme Court has said so many times, in so many historic decisions, we can never permit any emergency to jeopardize or destroy fundamental American liberties. There are other ways of penalizing these men, by legislation, rather than desecrating the uniform of the American Army by using it as a cloak of penalty.

I point out, too, that that principle, once applied, can work as a two-edged sword, not only against individual workers, but against employers, too, as well as against all others who do not act in accordance with the desires of a President. It is too much power to give any President.

So I would advise today that we resort to judicial processes, and not to shortcut penalty procedures such as the drastic actions which are being proposed in some of the telegrams we receive. I would advise today that in this case we exemplify once again the superiority of government by law. I would urge again, as I did last spring in a suggestion to the White House, that the President exercise the power which I think inherently is his under the war powers he possesses in times of great emergency, to rise above the personal attitudes which have developed in connection with this case and say to both parties to the dispute, "We are now going to submit this dispute to a judicial tribunal of arbitration.

"We will let the chips fall as they may in accordance with the evidence presented. We will follow the sound judicial principles of letting the preponderance of the evidence rule."

I think it will be discovered, Mr. President, that the case will then be settled for the first time by way of a decision which will bear a direct relation to the facts involved and in accordance with the merits connected with each of the issues.

Mr. President, I think that while such an arbitration is going on the President should make clear to the railroad strikers that he expects them back at work at the next shift. If he gives them that kind of a judicial tribunal for a determination of the merits of this issue and they then tarry from going back to work with any dishonest pretense of being sick, when we know that they are only angry and enraged, then I, for one, say that all the processes of the law should be exercised against them, including contempt procedures and all that contempt procedures mean by way of enforcement.

Oh, yes, I know if one even suggests these days in connection with this case that some course should be followed other than the one which has been followed to date, he runs the danger of being labeled as one who aids and abets this strike. I do not aid and abet this strike. As a patriotic American, Mr. President, I resent this strike. But labor disputes are not solved by way of expressions of resentment. Labor disputes as serious as this one are solved finally by taking them to a judicial tribunal so fair in its procedure that no one on either side would get to first base, so to speak, with any criticism of the decision, even though he may not like the decision because it goes against him. I have seen it work so many times, Mr. President, that today I felt I would be derelict in my duty as a Member of this body if I did not once again make the suggestion that I am satisfied, would work in fairness to all concerned, and express the sincere hope that the administration will find it possible to follow the suggestion.

Although I do not in any way condone the railroad strike which is now crippling the transportation system of our country, I think we all need to be on guard against substituting emotional reactions for a fair consideration of the merits of the dispute. I think we should recognize that labor relations within the railroad industry would have to become very unsatisfactory and provocative before men such as our railroad workers would resort to a strike. We should not forget that railroad workers are among the most substantial and conservative workers in our country. We often hear the descriptive term used about someone's being "a typical American citizen." I think that in fairness to railroad workers it should be said in discussing this situation that railroad workers generally come about as near to meeting the description of the phrase "typical American citizens" as any group of people in our country.

Who are these railroad workers who are on strike today and against whom so much feeling is being expressed? They are our neighbors. In the typical American town they live on the same street with the rest of us. Their children go to the same schools and play in our own backyards with our own children. They attend the same churches. They belong to the same lodges and clubs. They participate in the same community activities. They are recognized and accepted as substantial patriotic American citizens, who play a very important part in the economic, social, and political life of every community of any size throughout our country.

Although at the present time they have been angered in this dispute to the point of exercising what I think is some very bad judgment, as far as the method they are using in an endeavor to obtain a fair settlement of their grievances, nevertheless fairness should cause us to recognize that they represent a very substantial and desirable element within our citizenry. Railroad workers have always been recognized as being good citizens who perform very important skilled and essential labor for the American economy. It is my opinion that the railroad carriers will regret it very much in the future if they stand by and permit railroad labor to become the whipping boys of public indignation as a result of the situation which has developed in this dispute.

I would respectfully advise the railroad carriers this afternoon that the good will of their workers in the years to come will be worth much more to them from the basis of any standard of values they may wish to set up, including dollars and cents, than any satisfaction they may get out of licking railroad labor in this dispute, as a result of the fact that public opinion is against railroad labor in this dispute. I have seen employers in other cases take advantage of their workers when a situation somewhat similar to this have developed, only to wish sometime later that they had not bought their victory at the price of the bitter resentment of their workers. The carriers may think now that only these workers who are out on strike are dissatisfied with the policies followed by the carriers in this case to date, but I am sure that they are wrong in any such thinking. Although there are great rivalries between and among the railroad brotherhoods, there is also a strong professional camaraderie among them, and a very long memory on the part of all of them as to any unfair advantage taken by the carriers of any group within railroad labor.

I am satisfied that the carriers have made their fair share of mistakes in judgment in connection with this case, too, but their mistakes have not had the effects upon the public that those of the strikers have had. Therefore as a result the carriers are not in disfavor with the public in this dispute, but they are fooling themselves if they think they are not in disfavor within the ranks of railroad labor, including those groups which are not out on strike.

As I see this case, it offers to the carriers a great opportunity to substitute a policy of industrial statesmanship for the temptation of taking advantage of this situation in order to discipline their workers, and "get even" on some industrial dispute scores. If their case on the merits is as good as they claim it is, then they should be perfectly willing to submit their case to judicial arbitration with the understanding that the arbitrator's decision will be final and binding. They should be willing to submit their case to an arbitrator appointed by the President, who in turn should of course appoint someone to arbitrate the case who has had nothing to do with the case up to the present time. What this case needs is the judgment of some fair-minded arbitrator, who will hear it in a strictly judicial capacity and render his decision on the basis of the preponderance of the evidence, based upon a formal record made before him by the disputants, in an arbitration courtroom.

The workers should accept such a procedural solution to the case if offered to both the carriers and the brotherhoods by the President, and they should return to work immediately. Of course they should return to work immediately anyway, but anyone who knows anything about labor relations problems knows that when a case reaches the bungling mess this case has reached, it is necessary to offer the parties a procedure for settlement so fair that no party to the dispute can resist the verdict of public opinion in support of an arbitration procedure. I am sure that public opinion will call upon the parties to accept the arbitration procedure I suggest, if the President offers it to them.

I have a great deal of sympathy with the President in this case too. I do not think he has been dealt with very fairly by the parties concerned. I do not think it should be expected that the President would be fully aware of all of the overtones and undertones of conflict and industrial strategies which have been involved in this case. I think it is clear from press reports that he has assumed all along that settlements have been reached in the case and that the workers have walked out on these settlements. It does not appear that he has fully understood the procedure and rights of the parties to the dispute under either the Railway Labor Act of 1926 with its emergency board procedure or the mediation negotiations which were consummated in a tentative proposal for settlement on December 21. However, as I said earlier in this speech, it seems perfectly clear from the press reports at the time that all parties to that tentative settlement were well aware of the fact that it would not be binding upon the brotherhoods unless and until ratified by the full membership of the negotiating committees of the brotherhoods, commonly known as the general chairmen. Those general chairmen, as I have said before, unanimously turned down the tentative agreement, and I think when the White House learned of that fact, that action should have been taken immediately, either for further mediation or for arbitration. In any event it appears clear now that the White House should recognize that it cannot create the type of labor relations which should prevail in the railroad industry by adopting the course of action it has been following. It probably can get the men back to work by pressures and penalties but it will not establish sound labor policies in the industry that way. Government by law is always preferable to government by force. Decisions by judicial processes are always preferable to decisions either by economic force or executive edict.

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the unfinished business of the Senate is Senate bill 101, to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949. The bill was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. On December 18 the President of the United States sent a message to the President of this body requesting that titles I and II of the War Powers Act of 1941 be amended so as to make the provisions and the powers granted under titles I and II of the act applicable to the national emergency which the President by proclamation declared on December 16.

Title II of the War Powers Act of 1941, to which the President's message referred, authorized amendments and modifications of contracts which had been entered into, where modifications and amendments were necessary, to provide the supplies and materials and equipment necessary for the war effort. Immediately after the President's message was received the then majority leader, Senator Lucas, of Illinois, introduced a bill to grant to the President the powers he had requested, and to amend titles I and II of the War Powers Act in conformity with the President's recommendation.

It became immediately apparent that there was opposition to extending the powers in title I of the War Powers Act so as to make them applicable and serviceable in the present emergency. There seemed to be no pronounced opposition to the President's request with respect to revision or extension of title II of the War Powers Act. That bill was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. As chairman of the committee I immediately introduced a separate bill which would grant to the President the powers he requested with reference to title II. The latter bill, together with the one introduced by Senator Lucas, became the subject of hearings before our committee. The committee unanimously reported the bill which I introduced conferring the powers under title II, and later the Congress enacted that bill into law. The President signed it on the 12th of January of this year. So the powers the President requested with respect to title II have been granted. Appropriate legislation has been enacted conferring those powers.

At the time we reported the bill we pointed out that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would make a further study of the President's request with regard to title 1 of the War Powers Act. We did undertake to make a further study and, as a result, on January 8, on behalf of myself and other members of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, constituting a majority of the committee, I introduced Senate bill 101 which is now the unfinished business before the Senate.

On the 23d of January the committee held hearings on the bill. We offered an opportunity to a number of persons to appear before the committee. Included in the number were Mr. Wilson, who is the head of the mobilization program, and also representatives of the Bureau of the Budget and various Cabinet members. After hearings the committee unanimously reported Senate bill 101 as introduced, with one amendment which would change the time from 15 days, as it was contained in the original bill, to 12 days, in which the Congress would have an opportunity to review reorganization plans the President might submit under the bill and either reject them or approve them.

Mr. President, so far as I can determine there are only two approaches to the question of giving to the President of the United States extraordinary powers in the period of the emergency. One is to give him the powers he requested by reactivating, so to speak, title 1 of the War Powers Act. That is one approach, granting to the President the powers necessary to reorganize the executive branch of the Government, to establish agencies and powers to carry out the emergency functions which are incident to the rearmament program, and to the general emergency condition with which the Government is confronted today. That is to grant him reorganization powers as were granted in title 1 of the Reorganization Act of 1941. The other approach is as the committee has made it in Senate bill 101.

The committee was unanimous in favoring the approach provided in Senate bill 101, which is simply this: To date we have a Reorganization Act which is in force. It is the Reorganization Act of 1949, and it gives to the President of the United States the power to submit to Congress reorganization plans, involving the realinement of agencies or the transfer of functions of agencies. In other words, Mr. President, we might say that the Reorganization Act of 1949 relates to plans for streamlining the executive branch of the Government Under that Reorganization Act, which is the general act, and to which I shall refer as the general Reorganization Act, the President may submit a plan for the abolition of functions of any agency of the Government, for the transfer of those functions to another agency, and for various forms of reorganization. When the plan is submitted, it is referred to the appropriation committee, which in most instances is the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department.

After the plan has been before the committee for 10 days or has been referred to the committee for that length of time, any Member of the Senate may submit a resolution of disapproval, under the act. That resolution is referred to the same committee to which the plan has been referred. After 10 days, if the committee does not act on the resolution and report it, any Member of the Senate who favors the resolution may move to have the committee discharged from the further consideration of the resolution; and the matter then becomes a privileged one, and can be brought up at any time.

When a resolution of disapproval is brought up in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, as the case may be, if a constitutional majority of the Members vote in favor of the resolution, that defeats the plan. Unless that occurs within 60 days from the time when the plan was submitted, the plan will go into effect and will become law.

Mr. President, our committee felt that the same general procedure should be followed with reference to reorganizations in the period of this emergency. If we were to reenact title I of the War Powers Act, that would simply mean that the President could do all the things and could exercise all the powers under that Act, without any supervision or review by the Congress of the reorganizations which the President would undertake to effect for this period of emergency. We felt there was no justification for the Congress of the United States to abdicate completely its responsibility to review reorganization plans. We believe that Congress should have the opportunity and the right, regardless of whatever law we enact on this subject, to reject the plans if they do not meet with congressional approval. So, Mr. President, we have made the approach in that manner.

Senate bill 101 simply adds another title to the regular Reorganization Act, and permits the President of the United States to submit any plans which will do anything that the original Reorganization Act would permit to be done under plans thus submitted to the Congress, so long as they come within those provisions. This measure reads, in that connection:

> But only in matters related to the national security or defense, namely, any of the purposes set forth in section 2 (a) hereof.

That reference is to the original Reorganization Act.

Under this measure, if it becomes law, the President may submit to the Congress any plans providing for doing any of the things which he is authorized to do under that language, so long as they apply to or are related to the national security or defense.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I note that on page 9 of the committee report, in the discussion of the Reorganization Act of 1949, reference is made to the fact that that act provides certain limitations on the power of the President in respect to such organizations.

When I refer to page 3 of Senate bill 101, I note there certain limitations. Is it the understanding of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas, that the limitations set forth in the pending bill in any way affect the limitations or restrict the limitations in the Reorganization Act; or are they supplemental to those limitations?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the provisions to which the able Senator from Ohio refers are further restrictions and limitations on the President's power to make temporary reorganizations. They do not repeal the powers granted in the original Reorganization Act to make permanent reorganizations.

Mr. BRICKER. That is what I wished to understand clearly.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct. However, we felt that there should be certain restrictions in respect to temporary reorganizations which were not covered by the original act.

Mr. BRICKER. They apply only in that case; is that correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; only in that case.

Mr. BRICKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, perhaps I may point out a little further what this measure undertakes to do.

I have already indicated the purpose of the bill and how it is related to the original Reorganization Act.

As we find by reading section 302, the bill reported by the committee would require that—

> Each reorganization plan transmitted to the Congress under this title shall—
> (a) be certified by the President in his message of transmittal to the Congress as submitted under this title.

The purpose of that provision is to distinguish between plans which may be submitted to the Congress, so as to make clear whether the procedures provided in this bill would apply to such plans, whether they are intended to be for permanent reorganizations or for temporary reorganizations, and whether they come within the provisions of the title which we are undertaking to enact.

I read further:

> (b) be identified as being temporary.

They must be identified as being temporary, Mr. President. Then, when a plan is submitted to us, there can be no question as to whether it is a permanent reorganization plan or whether it is simply a plan intended to be related to the war effort and the present emergency.

I read further:

> (c) become effective in accordance with the provisions of section 6 hereof, except that a period of 12 days prior to taking effect shall obtain in lieu of the 60 days specified in the said section 6; and
> (d) remain in force only until the termination of this title or until otherwise made inapplicable by or pursuant to law.

Mr. President, when the original bill was introduced, we set 15 days as the time limit, primarily because of the provision in the Reorganization Act which this bill would modify in making it applicable to temporary reorganizations. We did so because the original act provides that the committee shall have a right to consider a resolution of disapproval for 10 days before a motion to discharge the committee will be in order. As we held hearings on this measure, the administration, I may say, as represented by representatives of the Bureau of the Budget, was very anxious that we take the other approach and simply reenact title I of the War Powers Act. However, the committee was unwilling to do so. On the other hand, we did not wish to impose such a period of time for committee consideration that would make this approach to the matter unworkable.

The present act gives Congress 60 days within which to act on a permanent plan. We have felt that we should confine consideration to the minimum period of time within which the Congress could properly consider any plan proposed, and determine whether it should disapprove it or permit it to go into effect.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Speaking as one of the minority members of the committee, I wish not only to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the committee for his able speech upon the bill today, and his discussion of the differences between it and the original suggestions which came to us from the White House, but I also desire to call attention to the fact that the committee believes that there should be a difference between the War Powers Act of the last war and the War Powers Act in the present situation. The War Powers Act of the last war was in effect during an era when the country was in a state of war, declared by Congress, and known to be such by everyone. Today we are not in that precise position. There has been no declaration of war by the Congress. We are in a state of war, and are engaged in actual war, as the result of a Presidential proclamation and a Presidential decision. We felt that there should be a distinction between a situation growing out of an action of Congress declaring war and a situation which is variously described as being a police action or a Presidential action, or a growing involvement in war, without the constitutional process of declaration of war.

I desire to congratulate the chairman of the committee on the leadership he demonstrated in making it clear that the Congress proposes, in a period of history when there is no declaration of war, certainly, to retain its maximum control over the functions and prerogatives which it normally has. I believe a study of the bill will demonstrate that it has been so framed as to reduce to a minimum interference with the functions of Congress and the delegation of power to the Executive if it be proposed to grant any additional authority to the Executive for purposes of expediting any action deemed necessary.

I simply wanted to convey my appreciation publicly to the chairman of the committee for looking to the development of a unanimous action on the part of the committee, which grants the necessary authority to the executive, and yet retains in the hands of Congress the right of complete determination of the major issues, which provides that all the decisions under the bill shall be temporary in nature, and also provides an automatic repealer and date of termination within the body of the measure.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the able Senator, and I wish to express my appreciation of the contribution he as a member of the committee has made to the development of this bill in committee. I may say to my colleague that we felt that some middle ground between what the President requested and what are the inherent rights of the Congress in normal times of functioning should be taken. We undertook to set the minimum to which we would be justified in reducing the 60-day period for permanent organizations, reducing it to a minimum which would still give us time to review the plans, to the end that if there is anything wrong with them, we can reject them. It is possible to make the period 60 days, if there is any emergency at all; and I think there is a serious emergency.

As the Senator from South Dakota says, we are not operating under a declaration of war, but we have a rearmament program under way, and we are in war for all practical purposes, because American boys are dying in battle. We feel that the President should be given some power to reorganize and streamline, and to bring about the greatest efficiency and effectiveness in the present situation.

At the same time, we do not feel that the emergency is such as to warrant or necessitate complete abdication by the Congress of its responsibility. In the bill we have provided that the Congress shall have time and opportunity to pass on any proposal, but we shall have to expedite our work. Both in the executive branch of the Government and in the Congress we are working under stress today. In fixing the time at 12 days, we felt that we had lowered it to the very minimum possible without undertaking to amend the whole basic act. I believe the period of time is fair and reasonable, and I believe we can all function under it, and that the interests of both the executive branch and of the Congress in the discharge of their respective responsibilities will be amply protected.

I may say that the matter finally resolves itself into what I suggested in a question I propounded. After the matter was discussed, and after the Director of the Budget had testified, I asked him this question:

> It sort of resolves itself, insofar as the Congress is concerned, into two approaches to the problem. One grants more flexibility—

And that is what the witnesses stressed all the way through, that the executive branch needed the flexibility to make it possible to do things quickly and to get them out of the way.

> One grants more flexibility, and the other provides the greatest safeguard.

Mr. President, the plan suggested provides, I believe, an adequate safeguard, and certainly provides a much greater safeguard than would be provided if we merely reenacted title I of the War Powers Act.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I note in section 301 the following language:

> During the time that this title is in force, and for any of the following purposes, but only in matters related to the national security or defense.

Is it not true that practically everything that is being done by the Senate relates to national security and defense?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would not say that everything we do relates to national security and defense. Life goes on, government goes on, the same as if there were no threat to our national defense. Many of the things we do of course are related to our existence. They relate to necessary functions of the Government, but they do not necessarily relate to national defense, except that keeping the Government organized and going is incidental to national defense, as well as incidental to normal operations.

Mr. LANGER. By the passage of this bill, would not the Senate and the House practically abdicate all their powers?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Absolutely not.

Mr. LANGER. Would they not turn those powers over to the President of the United States?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Absolutely not.

Mr. LANGER. On page 2 of the report, I find this:

> The main provisions of S. 101 are:
> (4) Authorizes the President to make appointments of officials under this title without Senate confirmation—

Certainly, although the Constitution provides that appointments shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, that power, under the pending bill, would be surrendered. Again, on page 3 of the committee report, I read:

> It was the view of the committee that the bill as drafted is specifically limited to matters related to the national security or defense and that this essential purpose should be maintained. If any reorganizations which will result in the reduction of nondefense expenditures are to be submitted they should be submitted in the form of permanent reorganizations.

Time and again the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has submitted to the President of the United States letters and suggestions by which he could cut nondefense expenditures; yet under the pending bill the Senate would be given a period of 12 days within which to act. In the prior bill we were given 60 days.

I will concede that the average Senator who is a member of one of the committees and who can sufficiently familiarize himself may be able to act in 12 days. But I submit that a Senator possessing even the ability of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, if a new proposition were before him relating, for example, to the Judiciary Committee, in view of all the other work he had, would be unable, within a period of 12 days, to familiarize himself sufficiently with this kind of a proposition and be willing to turn the power over to any President.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As the Senator from North Dakota very well knows, no Senator upon this floor could completely familiarize himself with everything that goes on and everything on which he votes. It is a physical and mental impossibility. Therefore we have to rely, as I often do, and as I am sure the able Senator from North Dakota does, upon the committee practice and procedure, under which one committee handles one character of legislation and another committee handles another character of legislation. Bearing this in mind, the War Powers Act, which we were asked to reenact and reactivate to apply to the emergency, had none of these provisions in it. It governed all through the last war. Powers were completely abdicated under that act.

The committee has tried, in reporting this proposed legislation, to make it possible for the President, if he finds reorganizations are needed, expedient, or justified, to submit reorganization plans. If we were to allow a longer period of time, if we were not going to shorten the 60-day period fixed under the permanent Reorganization Act, there would be no reason for the act at all. But I can well appreciate that in the present period, when we are trying to establish agencies to handle functions in connection with the emergency and rearmament programs, some power is needed, because Congress simply cannot pass legislation covering all these questions.

We do not have time to make a thorough study. The history has been that from time to time we passed a reorganization bill giving the President power to reorganize the executive branches of the Government.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Since the 3d of January, ever since we have been in session, the Senate has adjourned for 2 days at a time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator from North Dakota will have to take as much responsibility for that as I take.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct. If the Senate is to do its duty by the people of the United States, there is no reason why we should not be in session every day; and if there is the terrible emergency about which the Senator speaks, there is no reason why we should not hold night sessions.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the able Senator contend that we are not in an emergency?

Mr. LANGER. I take the same position as that which has been taken by the President. He says we are not at war. He sent over a few troops to Korea to serve as a police squad——

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us deal with realities.

Mr. LANGER. I am taking the President's own words.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Men have been sent over there and they are getting killed. We are in a war, as I see it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. One reason for my objection is that we saw the Office of Price Stabilization established recently, which is operating about 2,000 miles away from a portion of the eastern boundary of the State of Montana, and instead of placing the regional office in the center of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Minnesota, it placed it in Minneapolis, away off to one side. If we are going to abdicate and turn all this power over to the President, we shall be in very poor shape to criticize the waste of money, as the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is doing at the present time.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to invite the attention of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota to the fact that the reason why the Senate is not having more than 2 or 3 days of sessions a week is that we are giving committees an opportunity to work and prepare legislation which will come before us. If we should meet every day, or at night, as the distinguished Senator suggests, instead of speeding up legislation, we would slow it down, so long as we have our committee system. I should not want a false impression to go out that the Senate of the United States is not working, merely because it is not meeting more than 2 or 3 times a week. The Senators are working; they are working in their offices and in the committees. The reason why we have not had sessions more often is that we want to give the committees an opportunity to have meetings.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I appreciate that. It is also known that it takes time to draft legislation. As this emergency continues we cannot draft legislation to meet it in a few minutes' time. Some of it is highly technical. I dare say there is no Senator on the floor of the Senate who could draft legislation to meet all the contingencies arising in this emergency within any reasonable time whatsoever.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I think the Democrats ought to be in excellent shape to prepare this kind of legislation overnight. Every time they have been in office there has been a war. We got through with one only a short time ago. They should be able to draw up this type of legislation by heart.

Referring to the words of the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND], he said Senators are busy drawing up legislation. I ask if that is any reason why we should authorize the President to make appointments without Senate confirmation. I recently pointed out that I was the only Senator on the floor who voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Anna Rosenberg——

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, no; the Senator is not the only one.

Mr. LANGER. In any event, I voted against her confirmation. I reserve the right to vote against the confirmation of anyone appointed by the President of the United States to a position which, under the Constitution, requires confirmation by the United States Senate. I think that is a duty and a right which the Senate should jealously guard. I certainly do not want to vote at any time to turn the future of the soldiers of America, or the economy of America, over to someone nominated by the President of the United States, with the Senate's waiving its right of confirmation.

I might add, Mr. President, that I want to offer an amendment to the bill, striking out the provision waiving the right of confirmation on the part of the Senate as to any new positions. I ask at this time that at the appropriate place in the bill——

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I am not yielding at this time for the purpose of having amendments offered. I yield to the Senator for questions if he wishes to ask any questions.

Mr. LANGER. I am not going to ask any questions. In my own time I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Of course, the Senator is entitled to offer an amendment in his own time.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. On pages 2 and 3 of the bill, beginning in line 24 of page 2, I find this language:

Any reorganization plan under this title may provide for either or both of the following, which shall for the purpose of this title be deemed to be reorganizations:

(1) the extension of any function of any agency to any other agency—

And so forth. Will the Senator explain what that means?

Mr. McCLELLAN. My understanding of it is simply this: Under some acts, possibly the Navy is authorized to do certain things which the Army has not been authorized to do, in connection with the purchasing of certain equipment, for instance. The purpose is not to take away an important function from the original agency, if it is found to be working efficiently and satisfactorily, but if it is desirable to have the function performed in another place, the purpose is to enable another agency to handle it.

Mr. TAFT. In other words, the idea is that when Congress has granted a certain power to one agency, it would enable two agencies to exercise the same power. Is that correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes, if it is found expedient and advisable to do so, in order to get more efficient operation.

Mr. TAFT. I somewhat question the Senator's interpretation of the language. If the Navy has power to buy a battleship, I doubt very much that under the language of this particular section the President could extend the power to the Army to buy a battleship. It seems to me that the bill does not create any new power; it simply authorizes the extension of a function to do a particular thing so that two agencies may have it instead of one.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct. That is the purpose. I understand that the Navy has some power with reference to procurement which the Army does not have. It was found to be a satisfactory way of handling such matters. That is one specific instance. Such an example will be found in the report at page 6:

An example of a transaction of this nature may be found in connection with the duty-free entry of materials under the authority of 34 United States Code 568. That provision of law authorizes the Navy Department to bring in materials free of duty and without customs inspection. Such authority was extended as follows under the authority of title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941: To various agencies by Executive Order No. 9177; to the United States Maritime Commission by Executive Order No. 9495; to the Department of Commerce by Executive Order No. 9768; to the Atomic Energy Commission by Executive Order No. 9829 (still in effect).

Of course, if the pending bill passes, instead of a transfer being effected by Executive order, it will be done under a reorganization plan which must come before Congress.

Mr. TAFT. That is the only reason why I do not feel too strongly about it. Otherwise, I would oppose it. Congress might well think that the Navy could properly exercise certain powers in situations dealing with naval matters, whereas it might well think that the Army should not exercise such powers.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If they went beyond the powers of reason, or beyond what Congress wanted them to do, Congress could stop what they were doing.

Mr. TAFT. The statute to which the Senator has referred authorizes the Navy to buy ships' stores for naval ships stationed abroad, and to bring the stores into this country without reference to the tariff when the ships return to our shores.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. I never could see under what authority in the previous Title I of the War Powers Act the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could import copper without the payment of duty. That has seemed to me to be stretching the provisions too far. I am not sure that we ought to do it. However, if we retain the power to criticize or veto, I do not greatly object to granting the additional power referred to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say to the able Senator from Ohio and to other Senators that in the approach made in the bill we have undertaken to make certain that Congress does retain the last look and does have the final say, or veto, if we wish to use such a term. Under the War Powers Act all the President had to do was to issue an Executive order. Congress had no look at it. The power was completely delegated. The responisbility of Congress was abrogated. Many reorganizations were effectuated without any congressional supervision.

I do not say this bill is perfect. We worked on it when it came before the committee in the closing days of the last session. Two bills were introduced. One of them was introduced by the former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Lucas, which would have granted all the powers which the President requested. At the time I made an announcement on the floor in which I invited all Members of the Senate to make suggestions to the committee.

We introduced the bill now pending, and I again invited all Members of this body to make recommendations to the committee. We did not approach the subject in any partisan sense. That is not the sense in which we have worked on it. We have been confronted with the request of the President. Speaking for myself, since I was unwilling to grant such blanket powers to the President, and since Congress did not grant them to the President in the closing days of the last session—although we granted the powers requested under title 2—I felt that the next move was up to Congress. Under the circumstances I felt it was up to Congress to offer its version of the powers that should be granted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator on the approach now made. I think it is reasonable and right. Some of the language seemed to me to be rather ambiguous, and I wanted to get an explanation of it. I raised some question about the wisdom of including in a reorganization plan the kind of power granted.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It was placed in the bill at the request of the Bureau of the Budget, which felt that there would be occasions when such power would be needed. I have no objection to it so long as we retain the power of control.

Some other limitation are placed on authority. For instance, the permanent Reorganization Act gives the President the power to establish a new department of Government. That was attempted twice, as I recall. It was first attempted by Reorganization Plan 1 of 1949, and then by Reorganization Plan No. 27 of 1950. Congress rejected the proposal. I feel—and I know the majority of the committee feels the same way about it, because we were unanimous—that there is no necessity in the world for creating an emergency department of Government with Cabinet rank. The President does have the power under the regular Reorganization Act to submit a reorganization plan for the establishment of a permanent department, if he chooses to do so. He still has the power, and he can still submit such a plan for the establishment of a new department. However, we felt that the temporary powers should not go that far, and therefore we excluded such authority from the pending bill.

Mr. President, I now refer to the last section of the bill. The regular Reorganization Act of 1949 continues in force until April 1, 1953. We felt that the period of reorganization under the temporary powers which we would grant under the proposed legislation should not continue that long. So, we made the cut-off date June 30, 1952. Therefore all powers and every action under the powers granted in the bill, as well as every reorganization plan under those powers which goes into effect, will automatically terminate on that date. Thereafter the reorganizations will revert back to their present status, unless Congress takes further legislative action. That means that Congress will have the opportunity to review the whole program and to determine how those powers have been exercised under the act. It can then extend the powers, if such extension is needed or necessary. If we decide to extend the powers we can extend them with such modification, restriction, amendment, or limitation as we may find advisable.

Mr. President, I wish to comment upon subsection (b), on page 3, of the bill. Some question has been raised with reference to it.

Subsection (b) reads:

The President may include in any reorganization plan transmitted under this title provisions for the appointment of officers and other personnel in such manner as the President shall specify.

Mr. President, personally I have no objection. In fact, I have always supported the policy of having the President's appointees confirmed. I recall that some 4 or 5 years ago the distinguished present occupant of the chair [Mr. McKELLAR] introduced a bill requiring all Presidential appointees who received a salary of $4,500 a year or more to be confirmed by the Senate. I supported that bill. I still believe in that general principle. I am not so averse to such an amendment being adopted.

However, all legislation is somewhat a matter of compromise. It was felt that in making some of these appointments a controversy might arise involving a period of time for hearings, with considerable delay. Perhaps some important functions might be involved, such as the enforcement of controls and such things with which we have to contend. My general inclination is to require all Federal officials, if they have enough authority to be called officials, and not merely hired hands doing routine work of some kind, to be confirmed. But the committee has reported the bill as it is before the Senate; and aside from that proposed amendment, I shall certainly support the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I propose to offer an amendment to make these appointments subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say to the able Senator from Colorado that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] has indicated that he will support such an amendment. I have not talked with the able junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], but I understand that he proposes to offer such an amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I have four amendments which I wish to submit, but I desire to discuss the bill at a little later time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that an amendment such as I have suggested has been offered by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; I did not say that. I said that I understood that other Senators, including the junior Senator from Ohio, were contemplating offering such amendments. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] has already made such an announcement on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I think my distinguished friend from Colorado agrees with me. As I understand, he proposes to offer such an amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I am not concerned with who offers it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, it does not make any difference to me who offers it. I am not anxious to be the author of the amendment, but I am anxious that such an amendment be offered and voted upon.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I simply mentioned that other Senators had indicated their intention to offer such amendments, so that the Senator from Colorado might know that other Senators are thinking along the same lines.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Is this the appropriate time to offer the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, there is only one committee amendment. After that the bill will be open to further amendment.

Let me say in conclusion that, in the time we have had, and under the exigencies of the situation, we have given this measure very careful consideration. As I stated, it is not perfect. It is not all that the administration wanted. The administration wanted more flexibility and more expedition, but we felt that the Congress should not give up its responsibility. We feel that this measure, by prescribing the time and the procedure, affords the executive branch of the Government adequate opportunity to present such reorganization plans as may be needed. The bill will afford adequate protection to the legislative branch of the Government to review such reorganization plans and to reject those which are found to be unjustified, unwarranted, or faulty in their structure.

Mr. President, in my opinion this bill gives every conceivable power to the President which he needs, subject to the safeguards of congressional review and the right of Congress to reject and disapprove.

Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 17, after the words "a period of", it is proposed to strike out "15" and insert in lieu thereof "12."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MALONE obtained the floor.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. For what purpose?

Mr. BRICKER. I have some amendments to offer to the pending bill. I also wish to move to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the committee amendment was agreed to. Following that, I wish to speak for about 10 or 15 minutes on the provisions of the bill. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Nevada, I should like to ask unanimous consent that, without his losing the floor, I may be permitted to speak at this time.

Mr. MALONE. With that understanding, I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, first of all, for the record, I move that the vote just taken, by which the committee amendment was agreed to, be reconsidered. Then I have four amendments to the bill which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the junior Senator from Ohio to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, as the parliamentary situation now stands, I think the Senator from Ohio would be precluded from offering his amendment to extend the period of time. If the Senator wishes to ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. BRICKER. That is the reason why I made my motion.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection, if the Senator wishes to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote just taken, by which the committee amendment was agreed to, be reconsidered, in order that I may offer an amendment on page 2, line 17, providing for a period of 30 days rather than 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered and the Senator from Ohio may offer his amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I realize that it may be impossible to obtain an amendment to the bill as it has been recommended by the committee, which is held in such high regard. I know that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has given serious consideration to the provisions of the bill, and it is with a great deal of temerity that I offer the amendments which I wish to discuss. I realize also that the bill was reported from the committee unanimously, so there is no partisan approach either to the bill or to the amendments which are being considered.

I also wish to congratulate the chairman of the committee upon the fine presentation which he has made of the provisions of the bill, and his arguments in its support. It is much better than the bill which was introduced at the last session of the 81st Congress, providing for a complete abdication of the power of Congress and the extension or reenactment of the War Powers Act, giving the President, in this so-called emergency, the same powers which he had in the midst of the World War.

Mr. President, I believe that the time has come for Congress to reassert some of its authority. The power to make both foreign and domestic policy has become dangerously centralized within the executive branch of the Government. Recent events offer ample proof that policies must be formulated by the elected representatives of the people, and not by the hasty and sometimes secretive action of the Chief Executive. The pending bill, S. 101, affords the Eighty-second Congress its first opportunity to regain a part of the legislative authority which, by the Constitution, is inherent in the Congress.

The Reorganization Act of 1949 was approved on June 20, 1949. Thirty-four reorganization plans have been submitted by the President under the authority of that act, not including Reorganization Plan No. 8 of 1949, which became moot with the passage of the National Security Act amendments of 1949. Congress has approved 26 of these reorganization plans. None of the 34 reorganization plans submitted by the President promised any significant economies.

In its present form the Reorganization Act of 1949 represents an unwise abandonment of vital legislative powers. Although many of us believed that the President would use his reorganization authority to carry out the money-saving recommendations of the Hoover Commission, we had no right to abdicate our constitutional responsibilities. The Reorganization Act of 1949 was intended to enable the President to shift lines of administrative responsibility and to create or abolish offices in the interest of economy and efficiency. Contrary to this intent, the President has used his reorganization power to alter substantive policies established by Congress. The President's reorganization plans of 1949 and 1950 have not achieved any significant reduction in expenditures. They have centralized many new powers in the executive branch of the Government.

As Members of Congress we must blame ourselves as well as the President for the undesirable legislation which has been initiated under the Reorganization Act of 1949. It may be, Mr. President, that the Chief Executive can act more quickly, and perhaps more efficiently, than the legislative branch. However, the plea of efficiency is no excuse for relinquishing important legislative functions. Efficiency has always been the siren call of totalitarian philosophies. It is my hope, Mr. President, that Congress will never again forget what a great judge once said:

> The doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the Convention of 1787 not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was not to avoid friction but by means of the inevitable friction incident to the distribution of the governmental powers among three departments to save the people from autocracy. (Opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Meyers v. United States (272 U. S. 52).)

Our experience under the Reorganization Act of 1949 convinces me, Mr. President, that the act and the bill now before us should be amended.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

Organization of the executive branch is a legislative function entrusted to Congress by the Constitution. That fact is undisputed. The Constitution, article I, section 8, gives Congress the power:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

In the absence of authorization by Congress, the President cannot create offices or change the structure of the executive branch prescribed by Congress. Therefore, any grant of legislative power to the President, even though intended to be limited to organizational matters, breaches to some degree the constitutional separation of powers. The doctrine of threefold separation of powers is not a technical legal doctrine nor is it an outmoded concept of government. The merger of legislative and executive powers presents the same threat today as it did over 160 years ago when Madison said:

> The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny. (The Federalist (1788), No. 47.)

Mr. President, I do not venture to predict whether the Reorganization Act of 1949 would be approved by the present Supreme Court. The chances are that it would, although the Court has never passed on the validity of an act similar to the Reorganization Act of 1949. In recent years, the Court has been a strong influence in the trend toward centralizing more and more power in the executive branch. However, Members of Congress, no less than Justices of the Supreme Court, have taken an oath to uphold the Constitution. In my opinion, the Reorganization Act of 1949 cannot be squared with the separation of powers demanded by the Constitution.

It is true, of course, that Congress may delegate some of its legislative power to independent agencies, to the President, or to some arm of the executive branch. However, no such delegation is constitutional unless some reasonably definite standard is set forth in the statute. Where some standard controls the legislative power which has been delegated, the delegee of that power has been regarded as exercising sublegislative or administrative power within the framework of a policy defined by Congress. The Reorganization Act of 1949 contains no such standard. Within a limited field, the President, unrestricted by any standard or policy of Congress, is given the power to initiate legislation. Because no definite standard or policy controls this delegation of power, Congress found it necessary to retain a veto power over the President's action. The power which Congress reserved in the Reorganization Act of 1949 is not a legislative power. Congress may veto reorganization plans but it may not amend them to effectuate or to clarify its intent.

IS CONGRESS COMPETENT TO PARTICIPATE IN REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH?

The lack of any opposition to the bill which became the Reorganization Act of 1949 may be attributed to two factors. First, other Presidents had been given reorganization authority and the power had not been abused. Secondly, and more important, the Hoover Commission reported that its plan could not be made effective unless Congress transferred virtually complete reorganization authority to the President. In its concluding report, the Commission said:

> The President should be granted continuing authority to submit reorganization plans covering all agencies of the executive branch without exception, such plans to be presented to Congress and to become effective unless disapproved within 60 days by concurrent resolution of both Houses. This authority is necessary if the machinery of government is to be made adaptable to the ever-changing requirements of administration and if efficiency is to become a continuing rather than a sporadic concern of the Federal Government (pp. 8–9). (The recommendation of the Hoover Commission was followed except that plans may be disapproved by a resolution of either House.)

Mr. President, the Hoover Commission gave us a magnificent blueprint for eliminating the inefficiency, extravagance, and duplication which prevail throughout the executive branch. In my opinion, however, the Commission was mistaken in its belief that its plan required Congress to give the President such sweeping legislative power. The progress of reorganization in the past 2 years proves that Congress, and not the President, has been responsible for initiating action on those recommendations of the Hoover Commission which promise substantial savings.

Congress enacted the National Security Act amendments of 1949 in the form of substantive legislation. These amendments provided for greater unification of the armed services and have been estimated to involve a potential saving of $1,000,000,000 annually. Congress also passed the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. Under this act, all Federal housekeeping functions were consolidated in a new agency, the General Services Administration. This consolidation is expected to save $250,000,000 a year. The Citizens' Committee for the Hoover Report estimated potential savings from 1949 reforms at $1,250,000,000 a year. In other words, the only savings achieved in 1949 arose from substantive legislation initiated by the Congress and not by the President under his reorganization authority.

During 1950 only one of the major money-saving recommendations of the Hoover Commission was adopted. Congress enacted the Budgeting and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950 which modernized the Federal budget and accounting system along the lines recommended by the Hoover Commission. None of the 27 reorganization plans which the President submitted to Congress in 1950 specified any probable reduction in expenditures.

IS THE PRESIDENT BETTER ABLE THAN CONGRESS TO REORGANIZE THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH?

The chief opposition to past reorganization efforts has come from the heads of executive departments and agencies. The Hoover Commission warned Congress to be prepared for strong bureaucratic opposition. The Commission said in its concluding report:

> It is natural to expect vigorous opposition to reforms from agencies and groups, each of which approves heartily of reorganizations that do not affect its own immediate interests. The Congress must be prepared to accept this fact and give careful attention to the validity of arguments of those who would seek to escape reorganization, as many have so successfully done in the past (p. 47).

The Reorganization Act of 1949 did not insulate Mr. Truman from the bureaucratic pressures about which the Commission warned. It is hardly surprising that President Truman's reorganization plans have not included any of the major money-saving recommendations of the Commission which could be achieved by the reorganization plan method. All of those recommendations have been bitterly opposed by the department or agency which would lose some of its existing power, functions, or personnel.

Theoretically, the President can reorganize the executive branch more quickly and more effectively than can the Congress. As a practical matter, only a very strong President can dismember bureaucracy in the face of the inevitable opposition within his own official family. President Truman has yielded before this opposition.

The President's plan to reorganize the Department of Agriculture is typical of a number of other plans submitted in 1949 and 1950. The Hoover Commission report on the Department of Agriculture contained recommendations estimated to save $44,000,000 a year. All of the Commission's economy proposals were opposed by Secretary Brannan. None were included by the President in Reorganization Plan No. 4 of 1950. The Hoover Commission also recommended that the Secretary of Agriculture be given two additional assistant secretaries, an administrative assistant secretary, and increased authority over constituent units of the Department. None of these recommendations involved any economy. They were endorsed by Secretary Brannan, and were included in Reorganization Plan No. 4 of 1950. The Senate rejected plan No. 4 without a record vote, when it discovered that Secretary Brannan was unable to say how he would use the increased authority which he would have under the plan.

Economy was the main goal sought to be achieved by the Reorganization Act of 1949. Section 3 of the act requires the President to "specify the reduction of expenditures—itemized so far as practicable" in each reorganization plan submitted to Congress. Not one of the 34 reorganization plans submitted during 1949 and 1950 itemized any probable reduction of expenditures. The best that the President was able to promise was modest savings to be achieved, if at all, at some unsuspected future time. The Hoover Commission labored mightily, but the President's reorganization plans have not brought forth any results in savings, or any provable results in efficiency.

A number of the President's reorganization plans made no significant change in the organizational structure of the executive branch, and were unopposed in Congress. For example, one type of plan merely gave the head of an executive department full authority over his own department. Where virtually complete authority already resided in the department head, there was obviously no reason for opposition and no reason to anticipate any economies. Plans of the type mentioned include: Plan No. 3 of 1949—Post Office Department; plan No. 2 of 1950—Department of Justice; plan No. 3 of 1950—Department of the Interior; and plan No. 26 of 1950—Treasury Department.

Other reorganization plans transferred such minor functions that no savings were predicted or expected. For example, plan No. 20 of 1950 simply transferred the duty of preserving certain public records from the State Department to the Administrator of General Services. Twelve other reorganization plans submitted in 1949 and 1950 did not involve changes substantial enough to arouse the opposition of a single Member of Congress—Reorganization Plans Nos. 4, 5, and 6 of 1949 and 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 23, 25, and 26 of 1950. In addition, several plans were opposed for technical reasons not related to the merits of the plan. See plan No. 7 of 1949—transfer of Public Roads Administration to Department of Commerce—and plan No. 18 of 1950—transfer of public building management functions—both of which were approved. While these miscellaneous plans made an attractive box score on reorganization, they did not touch the substance of the Hoover Report.

Fifteen of the President's reorganization plans encountered strong opposition either in the House or Senate. None of these plans involved any economy. All of them substantially increased the power of the President contrary to some well-established congressional policy. Eight of these plans were rejected, and seven were approved. It is this group of plans which proves that laws should be made on Capitol Hill, and not at the White House.

DANGERS INHERENT IN LEGISLATION VIA REORGANIZATION PLAN

I am not yet convinced, Mr. President, that the Reorganization Act of 1949 should be repealed, but I am thinking very much along that line. The President knows, or should know, more about the organizational deficiencies of the executive branch than Congress can know. It is proper, in my opinion, for the President to have the power to initiate proposals to reorganize the executive branch. In view of our financial condition, Government spending should be reduced as quickly as possible. Economy could be achieved under the reorganization plan procedure more quickly than by normal legislative processes. The present national emergency seems to require continuation of the reorganization procedure with respect to defense agencies. However, our experience under the present law has pointed out the dangers inherent in legislation via reorganization plan. The four amendments which I intend to offer to Senate bill 101 are designed to minimize these dangers insofar as possible.

1. REVERSAL OF SUBSTANTIVE LEGISLATION

When the Reorganization Act of 1949 was passed, every Member of Congress believed that Presidential action would be confined to organizational matters. No one believed that the President would employ the act to nullify the intent of Congress expressed many times in substantive legislation.

Reorganization Plan No. 12 of 1950 is one of the best examples of the misuse of reorganization authority. That plan would have abolished the statutory office of general counsel of the Labor Board, and would have transferred his powers to the Chairman of the Board. The plan represented an attempt to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act by indirection. Plan No. 12 was not recommended by the Hoover Commission, nor was it proposed for reasons of economy. Although plan No. 12 of 1950 would have largely nullified the Taft-Hartley Act, it was perfectly legal. It is true that the Reorganization Act of 1949 was not intended to permit the President to change substantive legislative policy. Unfortunately, the distinction between substantive policy, on the one hand, and organizational matters, on the other, cannot be clearly drawn in statutory language. Moreover, administrative and organizational arrangements often determine the content of substantive policy. There is hardly any law which cannot be at least partially nullified by the reorganization plan procedure. For example, the President could completely wipe out all independent regulatory commissions by transferring them to the executive branch and giving all their functions to officers of the executive branch. It is futile to argue that the Federal Communications Act, for example, means the same thing regardless of whether it is administered by an independent, bipartisan commission, or by the President's own press secretary, or that the Taft-Hartley law would have the same meaning if administered and interpreted by Secretary of Labor Tobin.

Because legislation by the reorganization-plan method can be used to reverse substantive policies established by Congress, any reversal of policy should be approved by a majority of both Houses of Congress. The Reorganization Act of 1949 provides that a reorganization plan may be disapproved only by the affirmative vote of a majority of the authorized membership of either House. At any given time a considerable number of the Members of Congress may be unavoidably absent. It is possible, therefore, for a reorganization plan which changes a well-established policy of Congress to become law even though the vote in both Houses is 2 to 1 against it—Senate: 72 Senators present, 48 opposed, 24 for. House: 325 Members present, 217 opposed, 108 for. This danger is increased by section 302 (c) of Senate bill 101, which allows certain plans to become effective in 12 days unless disapproved by a constitutional majority of either House.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not recall the Senator's position on the General Reorganization Act of 1949; but, as the Senator will probably remember, there was a controvery here during the processing of that legislation.

Mr. BRICKER. I recall that.

Mr. McCLELLAN. At that time we were asked to give the President powers to reorganize every agency of the executive branch of the Government; in other words, to give him a clean bill, with no exemption of any agency or of any power whatever. The original bill provided that those plans were to go into effect within 60 days, unless both Houses of Congress, by majority vote, disapproved them. In the course of that controversy, the committee, of which I was a member at the time, reported the bill. I was chairman of the committee to which the bill was referred. We reported the bill, providing that either House might veto a plan by majority vote. The Senate passed the bill in that form.

At that time there was great clamor for reorganization. Everyone thought the Hoover Commission had solved all the problems, and that we would save billions upon billions of dollars if we would but empower the President adequately. Strong advocates of economy in the Senate were willing to delegate the power to the President, in the hope of effectuating great economies in Government.

The Senator from Ohio will recall that the bill passed by the Senate provided for disapproval by a simple majority vote of either House, which was in fact the result of a compromise in committee, so that a simple majority of either House might veto any plan; but, after being deadlocked in conference for over 2 months, during which time repeated meetings were held, as other members of the committee will verify, and certain Members of the Senate were becoming impatient because the conferees did not report, we were finally able to bring back this safeguard of a constitutional majority of either House having the power to exercise the veto.

Mr. BRICKER. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas, has clearly outlined what took place. I remember very well the pressure the Hoover Commission people activated back in the States during the period of 2 months, when the bill was in conference, and the pressure they were bringing upon the Senate in order, finally, in the name of economy, to have the bill passed. That was the prompting call, that we might have economy, that we might have efficiency.

The wording of the Hoover Commission report was as strong as possible in urging the necessity of the reorganization plan, and it was under the impetus of that report, and the desire of everyone for economy, and the public pressure from back home, that the bill was finally passed. I think the Senator from Arkansas did a remarkably fine piece of work in conference, in order to get as good a bill as he did.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say that as a member of the Hoover Commission, I had to go against the wishes and influence of a majority of the Commission, by fighting a battle in order to get the right even of a constitutional majority of one House to veto a plan. I stood almost alone. I think there was only one other member of the Hoover Commission who supported the position I took. I was successful in getting the bill reported as I have indicated; and in conference, I had to take the compromise referred to, otherwise there would have been no bill at all.

Mr. BRICKER. I appreciate that, and I think the Senator is to be commended for his patriotic stand along that line.

Mr. President, Senate bill 101, in my judgment, should be amended to provide that reorganization plans submitted under both titles I and III may be disapproved by a simple majority of either House of Congress. That is one of the amendments I have submitted.

2. IMPOSSIBILITY OF AMENDING REORGANIZATION PLANS

The greatest defect in the present law is that Congress is unable to amend reorganization plans. This inability to amend makes rather a mockery of the legislative process. Without the right to amend proposed legislation, neither House of Congress can act as a deliberative body.

Reorganization plans are prepared by the President. The contents of those plans are kept in strictest confidence until they are submitted to Congress. These plans may vitally affect thousands of people both in and out of the Government. Individuals and groups affected by a reorganization plan can make their views known only to the Congress, but Congress is not permitted to amend the plan to satisfy legitimate objections. All other proposed legislation is embodied in bills and joint resolutions. Very few of those which are of any importance emerge from committee in the form in which they were introduced. Inability to amend plans submitted under the present law has already resulted in some remarkable absurdities.

Many Senators objected to plan No. 5 of 1950 because they feared that the independence of the Patent Office might be jeopardized. At the same time the desirability of giving the Secretary of Commerce full power over all other subordinate units in his Department was widely recognized. Many Senators found themselves in an absurd position because of their inability to amend the plan. By voting for the plan, they relied on Secretary Sawyer's promise to preserve the independence of the Patent Office in its quasi-judicial work. By voting against the plan to insure the independence of the Patent Office, Senators were voting against an otherwise desirable plan. There is no reason in the world why Congress should deny itself the right to improve the President's reorganization plans by amendments.

In Reorganization Plan No. 21 of 1950, the President took full advantage of Congress' inability to amend his legislation. The Hoover Commission had recommended that the executive functions of the Maritime Commission be transferred to the Department of Commerce but that its quasi judicial and quasi legislative functions remain independent of the executive branch. The President abolished the Commission and placed all its functions within the Department of Commerce. As a result, the vote on plan No. 21 was in part a vote for the Hoover Commission plan and in part a vote against the Hoover Commission plan.

Reorganization Plans 7, 8, 9, and 11 of 1950 transferred certain functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Federal Power Commission, and Federal Communications Commission to the Chairmen of those agencies. Opponents of those plans contended that they would transform these independent regulatory commissions into one-man agencies subject to domination by the President and subject to influences of partisanship and favoritism. Senators who supported those four plans denied that they would have any such effect and claimed that they were in accord with the Hoover Commission's recommendations. Whether by accident or design, the language used in plans 7, 8, 9, and 11 was very ambiguous. If Congress had had the right to amend these plans, almost all objections could have been satisfied. Having no power to amend, the Senate defeated plans 7 (ICC) and 11 (FCC), but approved plans 8 (FTC) and 9 (FPC) which involved exactly the same principle of reorganization.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in my remarks the amendment which I intend to offer giving both Houses of Congress the right to amend any reorganization plan which the President may submit either under title I of the existing act or under the new title III proposed by Senate bill 101.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BRICKER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 4, after line 15, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 6 (a) of the Reorganization Act of 1949 is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That if during such 60-day period either House of Congress shall pass a resolution referring the reorganization plan back to the President with amendments thereto, such reorganization plan shall not become effective but the President may retransmit the plan embodying such amendments; and if he shall retransmit the plan with such amendments, it shall be deemed to be a new reorganization plan.

"'SEC. 202. As used in this title, the term "resolution" means only a resolution of either of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which (1) is as follows: "That the ——— does not favor the reorganization plan numbered —— transmitted to Congress by the President on ——— 19—," or (2) is as follows: "That the ——— refers the reorganization plan numbered —— transmitted to Congress by the President on ——— 19—, back to the President with a request for the following specific changes in said reorganization plan, to wit: ———," the first blank space therein being filled with the name of the resolving House and the other blank spaces therein being appropriately filled; and does not include a resolution which specifies more than one reorganization.'

"(c) Section 205 (b) of the Reorganization Act of 1949 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: 'but it shall be in order to include in any resolution referring a reorganization plan back to the President pursuant to the proviso in section 6 (a) of this act, any amendment to the plan proposed by any other resolution (then on the Calendar or which was introduced at least one Calendar day prior to the date it is so included) relating to the same plan, or germane modifications of any amendment proposed to the plan.'"

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, briefly, this amendment would give either House of Congress power to adopt a resolution referring a reorganization plan back to the President with amendments thereto. Passage of such a resolution would give the President three options: (1) He could resubmit an amended plan with the assurance that it would be approved; (2) he could resubmit his original plan, stating his objections to the amendments proposed, although in most cases Congress would probably reaffirm its position; or (3) finding the amendments not acceptable, the President could consider his plan as rejected. This amendment preserves the concurrence among the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives which all other laws, except those passed over the President's veto, require. In addition, if the President knows that his plans can be amended, there is less chance that he will submit reorganization plans which contravene some well-settled policy of the Congress.

3. INSUFFICIENT TIME FOR DEBATE

Mr. President, I propose to offer an amendment to title III of the Senate bill 101 to provide that defense reorganization plans become effective after the expiration of 30 rather than 12 days. On March 13, 1950, President Truman submitted to Congress 21 reorganization plans. It is obviously impossible for the Senate Expenditures Committee to give adequate consideration to as many as 10 or more plans within a 12-day period. Section 205 (b) of the act guarantees 10 hours of debate on any resolution of disapproval. If the President should submit 21 defense reorganization plans on the same day it would be difficult to guarantee even 1 hour of debate on each plan. If any plan should require more immediate action, Congress could, as pointed out by the committee's report, "adopt a joint resolution fixing an earlier effective date, as has frequently been done in the past."

IMPORTANCE OF REORGANIZATION LEGISLATION IN A NATIONAL EMERGENCY PERIOD

Mr. President, the amendments which I intend to propose to Senate bill 101 are even more important in the light of the present national emergency. Last December, Congress was asked to give the President emergency reorganization powers similar to those given to President Roosevelt by title I of the First War Powers Act. The Eighty-first Congress denied that request because the President's reorganization powers would not have been subject to review or approval by Congress.

Only one of the reorganization plans submitted in 1949 and 1950 created new agencies of Government, plan No. 21 of 1950. In any period of war or defense mobilization many new defense agencies will probably be created. The Reorganization Act of 1949 is the only law on the statute books which gives the President a general power to create new agencies. The President may, of course, without authorization by Congress, establish fact-finding commissions to advise him. The most recent advisory commission is the new Loyalty Board, of which Admiral Nimitz is Chairman. However, the right of the President to create new agencies having more than purely advisory powers must be found in the Reorganization Act of 1949.

Before and during World War II, President Roosevelt created many so-called defense agencies as part of his Executive Office. The most important of these were the War Manpower Commission, the National War Labor Board, the National Housing Agency, and the Office of War Information. President Roosevelt attempted to justify the legality of many of these offices and commissions under the language of title I of the First War Powers Act. However, neither the First War Powers Act nor the Reorganization Act of 1949 authorized any agency created by the President to exercise any function not provided by law. Section 5 (a) of the present law provides that no reorganization plan shall have the effect of—

(4) Authorizing any agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law at the time the plan is transmitted to the Congress.

The orders of many World War II agencies created by the President were treated as purely advisory. For example, directives of the War Labor Board were held by the courts to be judicially unenforceable and unreviewable because they simply stated the equities of each industrial dispute. Actually, the War Labor Board was not a purely advisory body. On occasions when the Board's so-called advice was not taken, the President seized plants, withdrew service by the Post Office, and threatened workers with loss of "maintenance of membership" guaranties.

The War Manpower Commission was also created by an Executive order which cited the reorganization law as its authority. Without any specific authorization by Congress the Commission issued work-or-fight orders to labor. Employers who failed to comply with the directives of the Commission were threatened with the cancellation of labor referrals and Government contracts.

The Roosevelt-created war agencies were supposedly advisory bodies. Nevertheless, they exercised tremendous powers. For example, President Roosevelt ordered each executive department and agency to use its powers as the War Manpower Commission might direct. Executive Order 9370 of August 16, 1943, provided that priorities might be withdrawn from any employer who failed to comply with National War Labor Board directives. This same practice is apparently authorized by Senate bill 101 which provides that "the extension of any function of any agency to any other agency" shall be deemed to be a reorganization—section 303 (a). That is the section to which the senior Senator from Ohio referred a short time ago. While I do not agree with the political and judicial precedents established during the last war with regard to the President's right to create powerful new war agencies, those precedents do exist.

Accordingly, if President Truman decides to create by Executive order a war manpower commission, a war labor board, or some other new defense agency, he may be able to give those agencies tremendous powers to enforce their so-called advisory directives. Among the more important powers which could be transferred to any new defense agency are power to deny priorities and allocations, power to requisition facilities and property, and power to deny work on Government contracts.

Any new defense agencies which the President may create under the Reorganization Act of 1949 may be vested with vast powers already authorized by law, particularly those provided in the Defense Production Act. I do not seek to deny the President the right to create any new defense agency, nor would I deny him the right to give some of those new agencies powers now exercised by other departments and agencies. We must recognize, however, that some of these new agencies may be much more powerful than several of the Cabinet departments. To guard against any abuse of power the reorganization law must provide:

First. That the reorganization plans creating powerful new defense agencies can be amended by either House of Congress;

Second. That either House of Congress can act by simple majority as in the case of bills and joint resolutions;

Third. That Congress has sufficient time for debate; and Fourth. That the principle officers of any new defense agencies must be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. President, the four amendments which I intend to propose to Senate bill 101 are designed to accomplish those four objectives.

Mr. President, I am fearful that in the consideration of this bill there is another effort on the part of the administration to use the crisis in which we now find ourselves as an excuse for grabbing more legislative power, and that there might be a further depressing of the authority and responsibility of the Congress of the United States. It is one of the characteristic tenets of all those who believe in totalitarian or socialistic forms of government that the representative legislative branch of the government must be depressed and suppressed to the advantage of the executive branch. This looks like such an effort on the part of the administration.

Already almost unlimited power is exercised by the President of the United States. It was exceeded only in war days when powers were given to the late President Roosevelt. Is it exercised in the public interest, or is it being utilized and used for the enhancement of the political power of the Chief Executive and the administrative branches of the Government.

At this very hour we see a minority group of persons who are breaking down the transportation system, threatening seriously to destroy the industrial production of the Nation which is needed to carry on the war in which we are engaged. When the administration stands palsied and powerless against a minority group which is inconsiderate and which is discarding entirely any consideration of the public interest, it is no time to give the President more power, but it is a time, rather, for him to exercise the power which he already possesses.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I yield provided I do not lose the floor thereby.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] have worked out an agreement respecting amendments to Senate bill 101, and I ask if the Senator from Nevada will yield for 5 minutes so the bill may be acted upon and passed.

Mr. MALONE. I shall be very happy to yield for 5 minutes if I can obtain unanimous consent that I do not lose the floor thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and the majority leader I have agreed to call up but two of my amendments. The first one deals with the authority of the President to nominate officers and other personnel without Senate confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3 it is proposed to strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive; on the same page, in line 11, it is proposed to strike out "(c)" and insert "(b)"; and on page 3, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio includes the change of the letter "(c)" to the letter "(b)", on page 3, line 11, and the change of the letter "(d)" to the letter "(c)" on page 3, line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so advised.

The second amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 2, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the word "twelve" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "eighteen."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, may we have a vote on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President——

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MALONE. The junior Senator from Nevada yielded for the purpose of agreement being had on two amendments and a vote being had on the bill, but did not yield for debate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Nevada does not agree to a vote being taken on the passage of the bill?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, that was not the statement made by the junior Senator from Nevada. He was told that there was to be action taken on two amendments and on the bill, but that there was to be no debate, and that the entire action would be finished in 5 minutes. Two minutes still remain.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I am not undertaking to debate the bill. I am trying to keep the parliamentary situation straight and get the bill passed.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. As I understand, one amendment relates to confirmation by the Senate of heads of divisions and agencies appointed by the President.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes, they must be confirmed by the Senate. There are no further amendments to be offered, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 101) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to thank the able Senator from Nevada for yielding.

VISIT TO THE SENATE OF THE HAGERSTOWN (MD.) HIGH-SCHOOL BAND

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there is in the gallery this afternoon the high-school band from Hagerstown, Md. It is an outstanding organization. The members of the band, who are seated in the gallery, have been listening to the very able address of the Senator from Ohio. It has been suggested by Representative BEALL, of Frostburg, Md., and by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER] that I call the presence of these visitors to the attention of the Senate. I wish to extend to them a cordial welcome. They have honored us by their presence this afternoon.

I may say to the members of the band that I wish them well in the concert they are to give tonight, a concert which has to do with a certain box supper, which I think is going to be very popular.

PROPOSED REMOVAL FROM OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE FOR THE THIRD DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me so that I may send a resolution to the desk and make a brief statement with reference to it?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I shall be happy to yield for that purpose, provided I do not lose the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada may yield to me so that I may send a resolution to the desk, and make a brief statement on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what does the Senator from Delaware mean by a brief statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the request had been granted. However, I do not expect to take more than 8 or 10 minutes.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, today, possibly more than ever before in the history of this country, the question of taxes has become of foremost and vital concern to almost all of our citizens. The sacrifices which each of us makes in the cause of freedom throughout the world in a large measure is represented by the taxes we pay—or our obligations to pay in the future.

Never in our history has the integrity, efficiency and competency of the persons who collect our taxes been of greater importance. And yet it is doubtful if it has ever been much worse.

For some time I have been studying this problem and I am convinced that it is one which merits the attention of the United States Senate. It is my opinion that a careful, complete, and constructive investigation by the United States Senate of the whole system by which taxes are collected would be in the public interest. It would serve two important purposes in determining, first, whether the Government is getting paid all it is entitled to be paid, and, second, whether the tax laws are fairly and honestly administered.

I believe that the public has, in many cases, lost respect for those who collect Federal taxes, and consequently they have lost a large measure of respect for the Federal tax laws and our Government.

It is my belief that in many cases throughout the country the morale, efficiency, and even the honesty of some of those who collect our Federal taxes are distressingly bad. There is a clear, unmistakable reason for this. The reason for such a state of affairs is that our system of tax collection is shot full of cheap, inexcusable, political manipulation.

I say this not as a blanket indictment against all employees in the tax service, many of whom are honest and efficient men. However, the fact that certain incompetents, through political protection, are allowed to continue in office unquestionably is breaking down the morale of the entire force.

I plan to devote a large part of my time in the days ahead in bringing to the attention of the public what I consider a deplorable situation in the hope that it will result in some improvement. For if ever the taxpayer needed a fair deal from the politician it is today.

Today let me discuss briefly the present situation in one of the largest single districts in the United States, namely, the third New York district.

We would expect, would we not, an efficient, honest, and hard working force in this office, which is one of the largest in the United States? Certainly those in responsibility, the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, should insist upon nothing less.

Now let us look at the facts. The administration and operation of the collector's office in the third district is disgraceful and is almost a duplication of the exposure which I made of the state of affairs in the collector's office in Wilmington, Del., some years ago.

I want to begin by reading the record of the deputy collectors in the third district who have been convicted of criminal offenses in that district alone since 1946:

Abraham Heller, October 28, 1946, suspended pending investigation; January 25, 1947, removed from rolls. (Failed to refute charges of solicitation and acceptance of bribe.) Sentenced to 2 years and fined $10,000.

Jesse Miller, October 28, 1946, suspended pending investigation; January 25, 1947, removed from rolls. (Failed to refute charges of solicitation and acceptance of bribe.) Sentenced to 6 months.

Julius J. Friedman, July 12, 1946, suspended pending investigation; October 5, 1946, removed from rolls. (Jury returned a two-count indictment, charging him with demanding and accepting a bribe.) Received suspended sentence and 3 years probation.

James A. Bessell, June 20, 1949, suspended pending investigation; August 26, 1949, removed from rolls. (Solicitation and acceptance of a bribe.) Put on probation 10 years.

William A. Ganey, September 28, 1949, suspended pending investigation; May 9, 1950, removed from rolls. Sentenced to 5 years and fined $14,350.

Anthony V. Fiscella, September 28, 1949, suspended pending investigation; May 9, 1950, removed from rolls. Sentenced to 2½ years and fined $2,500.

John A. Galgano, September 28, 1949, suspended pending investigation; May 9, 1950, removed from rolls. (On charges of bribery, sentenced to 2 years; fined $2,850. Imposition of sentence suspended and 5 years probation to commence upon completion of sentence currently being served.)

Thomas J. Cannon, September 28, 1949, suspended pending investigation; May 9, 1950, removed from rolls. (On charges of demanding and accepting a sum a money.) Sentenced to 18 months; fined $2,500.

That record alone is a pretty sad commentary on those in responsibility. Such widespread corruption is usually the result of widespread mismanagement, and this case is no exception.

The whole administration of the business of collecting taxes in the third district has been unbelievably bad. Yet those responsible have not been disciplined or removed.

On February 27, 1950, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that conditions in 1947, 1948, and 1949 had become steadily worse. The Commissioner stated that the collector in charge of the district lacked the administrative ability to get the job done. Yet today, almost a year later, that collector is still on the job.

In reviewing the records of that district, I quote the following facts which are taken from the annual reports of the investigators:

1. The difficulty in the Third New York District may be attributed to two major weaknesses: (1) Substandard supervision and direction, and, (2) poor discipline and low employee morale.

2. Many phases of the every-day workload became sadly in arrears.

3. Washington correspondence backlogged and complaints regarding delays on the part of the office in processing these claims, returns, and correspondence were numerous.

4. The Wage and Excise Tax Division neglected much of its highly important work. For example, it failed to prepare and issue delinquency notices covering social-security and employment-tax returns due and not filed for various periods; it failed to keep current the addressograph plate file (covering employers subject to the filing of withholding and social-security-tax returns) by removing plates representing employers who had gone out of business and in preparing and inserting plates representing new employers. It did not follow through to obtain excise-tax returns from employers who were delinquent in reporting and paying this class of tax.

5. In the Comptroller's Division postings to taxpayers accounts on the assessment lists were allowed to become increasingly in arrears making it extremely difficult to keep the taxpayer ledgers in balance with the general ledger accounts. This delay in posting also resulted in the issuance of many erroneous bills and warrants and delayed the actual service of warrants covering accounts which had not been paid, causing much additional and unnecessary field work.

6. The problem of poor employee morale and the apparent inability to secure the best possible efforts of the collector's employees throughout the office was well demonstrated by a list furnished to show the large number of employees who had taken leave without pay; that is, leave in excess of the liberal annual- and sick-leave allowances granted to Federal employees. For the period from June 1, 1948, to May 31, 1949, exclusive of maternity leave, the list showed leave without pay taken by 58 employees. Of this number, 34 had taken in excess of a hundred hours, 10 had taken over 500 hours, and 2 were shown as having taken over a thousand hours of such leave during this period. During the 12-month period ended May 31, 1949, leave without pay (including maternity leave) taken by the employees of this collector's office aggregated 18,807 hours, or 2,351 man-days. During the 5 months from June 1 to October 31, 1949, such leave was taken in the total of 8,796 hours. This was indicative of an attitude that would not be tolerated in an ordinary business office. Indifference to tardiness, the taking of excessive lunch periods and early departure from the office were inexcusable and, in view of the condition of the work, was especially reprehensible. It was indicated that efforts of the collector's office to correct the indifferent attitude of the employees to their duties and responsibilities had been weak and ineffective.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator know what important cities are located in the third district?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The third district is comprised largely of the City of New York, although a portion of New York City comes under the jurisdiction of the second district. The third district is comprised largely of metropolitan New York.

Mr. President, early in 1950 supervisors from Washington were sent to that office and they reported that conditions were worse than previous reports indicated. They reported that only one division in the entire office was functioning even in a fairly satisfactory manner. But the collector who is responsible for such an amazing state of affairs is still in charge of the office.

I think that the collector unwittingly gave the answer to this serious problem when he complained that the whole responsibility should not rest entirely with him, by pointing out that there were factors in the collector's office which were peculiar in that such an office is composed of a lot of political personnel and there was probably no office in the country containing more of them than his own. The inference that politics is given prior consideration in the selecting of our income tax collectors is a most damaging indictment and cannot be condoned.

The record shows that the collector on November 30, 1950, was asked to submit his resignation. To date this has not been received and no further action has been taken.

How bad do conditions have to get before some action is taken? If the Government expects the taxpayer to cooperate wholeheartedly in its huge tax problem it must put its own house in order. I think that a thorough investigation of the whole system of tax collection should be considered at the earliest possible moment. There is a great opportunity here for constructive action which will redound to the public interest—and we should take action at once.

As a first step in this direction, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a resolution which reads as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should remove James W. Johnson from the office of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District of New York, on the grounds that the said James W. Johnson does not possess the necessary administrative ability to direct satisfactorily the operations of the collection district.

I hope this resolution will be acted upon, and that appropriate steps will be taken to clean up and put this office in order.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wonder why the distinguished Senator does not submit a resolution calling for the investigation of all the collectors' offices. Why pick out this one?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because this is the only one with respect to which I had any information at the time. I made the suggestion in my speech that I thought it would be well for us to look into the entire tax collection facilities of the country. I think we should check at the same time in all offices to see whether or not too much political influence is being used in the Federal tax-collecting system. I did not not think it would be fair to single out any other office when I did not have any information with respect to it. I thought there might be an unfair reflection on an office which was being properly conducted.

The resolution (S. Res. 63) submitted by Mr. WILLIAMS was received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE INTERNATIONAL POLICY—THE FAR EAST AND EUROPE

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I intend to discuss briefly No. 4 of the 10 suggested approaches to our international problems discussed on December 14 in my address to this body.

NATION FOUNDED UPON COURAGE

This Nation was founded on courage. Its great industries and institutions were built on courage. We have become great because we have never feared anything but the God we worship.

Our forefathers landed on Plymouth Rock more than 300 years ago with axes and muskets and their bare hands and, because they were without fear, laid the foundation for the greatest nation the world has ever seen.

THE WILL TO WIN

We have never lost a war, for the very simple reason that we have never gone into one unless we were led to believe that our ultimate safety depended upon it, and we never once doubted our ability to win. When our people lose that spirit, our servicemen will lose the will to win. That is what we are witnessing in Europe today.

What is the source and the reason for the fear and doubt continually being peddled by the administration and their spokesmen? Is it to soften up the people so that their excessive and often unnecessary taxes will be accepted with less opposition?

FOLLOWING THE 100-YEAR-OLD EUROPEAN LINE

What is the reason for our State Department's following the European line. Why do we follow England's 100-year-old policy and continue to support the small, straggling, independent, disorganized nations of Europe, and the colonial slavery system in the Far East and Africa? What has been England's objective in preventing any European nation from becoming really strong?

Is it that England and other European countries are living in the past, and do not realize that Russia has become strong already, that her influence reaches from Asia to Eastern Europe, that a disorganized Europe cannot hope to cope with Russia, and that, under present conditions, Russia could move through Europe almost overnight?

Does she not realize that an integrated Europe, a United States of Europe, or some effective economic union of all of the nations of Europe, is necessary for them to reach their maximum of economic and military strength? A European union of states with which this Nation may deal effectively is an absolute necessity to win.

ASIA AND THEN EUROPE

Do not England and all of Europe realize that if Russia is successful in dominating China and Asia, her potential power from that source would complete the destruction of opposition in Europe and that the individually supported and disorganized nations of that area would inevitably fall under Communist Russia's domination?

We should recognize, before it is too late, that we cannot support the dead hand of colonial slavery in the Far East and Africa—that those long in slavery are on the move, and, with all of our resources, we cannot stop it any more than England with all of her resources and hired soldiers could stop our small colonies in 1776.

Our Nation is in great danger. The greatest danger, however, is in Washington and at Lake Success, not in Korea.

Our people have been shaken by a demonstration of misinformation, miscalculation, and misjudgment at the highest levels of decision and command.

WE MUST DIRECT OUR OWN DESTINY

Let us be done with this devastating fear of what Russia, or any other nation, is going to do.

Let us regain the initiative that we lost, first through the destruction and disintegration of the greatest defensive and offensive force the world ever saw, following World War II.

Let us realize that we must break up Russia's march through Asia and her resulting control of that great area with its more than 1,000,000,000 manpower.

Let us realize that Europe, with its divided, bickering nations, can never successfully oppose a Russia on the move, even if we bankrupted ourselves in her behalf.

Let us then take stock. Let us regain control of our own destiny.

TWO WORLD WARS—AND A POLICE ACTION

We came through both wars without mortal injury because of great industrial strength.

It has taken a so-called police action in Korea to teach us what may happen unless our actions are based on accurate information, clear thinking, and a sense of restraint.

And we had best take the lesson to heart.

RESULTS OF DIPLOMAT BLUNDERS

It is time that the people of this Nation, through their Congress, brought to task the persons responsible for the long series of diplomatic mistakes causing the present unfortunate situation they call a police action—and place it in the hands of the United Nations. What is this thing in which we find ourselves?

First. We have an army in the field fighting an enemy. We have lost nearly 50,000 men killed, wounded, and missing.

Second. We are on a war basis by Executive order of the President.

Third. We are drafting men and freezing prices.

Fourth. General Eisenhower says it may last 20 to 30 years.

Fifth. The Congress has lost its authority to declare war.

Sixth. We are in the hands of an organization, the United Nations, which has neither authority nor ability to defend itself.

Seventh. The President is now demanding authority to draft 3,500,000 boys for a professional Army, with a minimum of 8 years' Reserve service, which he can send to any foreign nation anywhere at any time to fight or train.

Eighth. We are defending the colonial slavery system of European empire-minded nations, from the Far East to the Mediterranean, and in Africa, forgetting that we ourselves broke away from the system in 1776.

Ninth. At the end of the 7 months of war in Korea, we find ourselves in a politically and militarily weak and untenable situation.

Tenth. Because Congress put in the hands of the executive branch its constitutional responsibility to regulate foreign trade, State Department representatives are right now in Torquay, England, in a supersecret conference, completing the job of wrecking our national economic structure under cover of war.

NO. 4 OF 10 SUGGESTIONS

Suggestion No. 4, in my list of 10 suggestions for the survival of the United States of America, as given in my December 14 address in the Senate, has to do with what could be done about Korea and Asia. We could do one of three things in the immediate crisis:

(a) We could take the reasonably expected action, namely, arm Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist Army and guerrillas, so that, together with the South Koreans, they could furnish the foot soldiers for the war against the North Korean and Chinese Communists, and we could then make the most efficient use of our air power and our Navy, including submarines, to blockade, and to destroy the war-making power of the Korean and Chinese Communists; or

(b) We could withdraw from Korea and arm and equip Chiang Kai-shek's troops and guerrillas to do the job; or

(c) our last choice, we could completely abandon Korea and China, establishing our line of defense for the Western Hemisphere through Japan, Formosa, Okinawa, Guam, the Philippines, Indonesia, New Guinea, and Australia, using ground troops recruited in those countries.

MILITARY, FOREIGN, AND DOMESTIC POLICY

Our debate, here on the Senate floor, on foreign policy is on the question of the military policy that can most efficiently and economically assure our national security. Neither an adequate foreign nor an adequate domestic policy can be effectively established until we have a military policy based upon our defensive powers, actual and potential and upon the knowledge of what areas we must currently defend for our own ultimate security.

Who is making our military policy?

One would assume that the Department of Defense would control the military strategy, once the decision is made as to the areas to be defended. That assumption is a hold-over from the days when we followed a constitutional government procedure, when Government agencies possessed clear-cut functions, resting on statutory powers and duties, and respected the appropriate limitations.

A VERY GRAVE AND DANGEROUS SITUATION

As we are reminded in an article by Edna Lonigan in Human Events, we do not live under that form of government any more. We live under a pyramid type of executive government, in which all money is at the disposal of the President, under loose grants of powers—and policy making is determined by the current favorites in the White House, the State Department boys.

They decide for the President not only our foreign policy, but also our military policy. This is a dangerous situation in which the survival of our Nation is at stake.

Military strategy should be left to military men, after the general policy has been established, but the State Department has arrogated to itself the sole responsibility for military strategy.

SUPPORT FOR A PRECONCEIVED PLAN

General Eisenhower was not sent on his quickie trip to Europe by our military men, but by our State Department. The purpose was obviously to secure support for a decision which was fully decided upon beforehand. I do not believe that anyone is naive enough to think that a week or two jumping from one European capital to another, could accomplish any purpose other than that of propaganda for the preconceived decision of the State Department to send our boys to make up a Maginot line in Europe.

This matter of having our military strategy decided by a State Department which has made such a colossal failure of diplomacy could mean disaster for this Nation.

This same State Department, through the discovery of those agrarian reformers in China in 1946, has succeeded in turning a 100-year-old Chinese civil war into a war between this Nation and China.

Quoting from Human Events:

A nation can spend billions, keep millions of men under arms, build atom-bomb plants and Maginot lines, but if it follows bad strategical concepts it will be defeated. In fact, an unwarranted rush for more men and spending, spells military sickness, not health.

Congressman WALTER JUDD tried, without success, to get to the root of the matter. When representatives of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force appeared before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, to testify for foreign aid, JUDD put this question: Are you giving us what in your judgment is the best military plan for our defense? Or are you giving us merely the best military means to implement the plan the State Department has already decided upon? The defense officials only hedged.

ADMINISTRATION BYPASSING CONSTITUTION—ALL ESTABLISHED PRACTICES

One may ask how it is possible that our defense officials have fallen into such a trap. The reason is the total change in our Government; the administration is bypassing the Constitution and the established practices under which this country grew in a comparatively short time to be the greatest Nation on earth. But early in the New Deal, Hopkins, Wallace, Morgenthau, and their like, moved in.

GENERAL EISENHOWER'S ADDRESS

Let us see just what General Eisenhower has said about the defense of this country.

The general told his national radio audience, following his address to the joint meeting of Congress, that he had an "Allied assignment and he lived up to it." He pointedly did not say that he had an American assignment.

He told the joint meeting of Congress on February 1 that he found evidence that the European countries would do what was necessary to cooperate with this Nation in the defense of Europe.

In 1945, following his trip to Russia, General Eisenhower, being the good soldier he is, said that he had "seen nothing to indicate cooperation with Russia is impossible."

Mr. President, there is considerable similarity between those two trips by General Eisenhower. They were of about the same duration, and they have had about the same results.

As long as he is a general in the United States Army, I suppose he could hardly do otherwise without resigning and then telling the American people what he had actually found out.

General Eisenhower supported the program that was decided upon by the State Department even before the Vandenberg resolutions were introduced in the Senate on July 11, 1948. That program is followed by the Marshall-Rosenberg universal military service bill, which has been substituted in committee for the Russell-Malone universal military training bill, under Senate bill 1.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that Senate bill No. 1 was retained as the number of the bill, but a complete substitute was made, although the country still believes that the hearings held by the committee are being held on the Russell-Malone universal military-training bill.

The universal military-training bill is sponsored by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other veterans' organizations. The universal military-service bill is sponsored by the State Department.

The Marshall-Rosenberg-State Department bill, upon which hearings have just been completed by the Armed Services Committee, agrees in almost exact detail with General Eisenhower's address before the joint meeting of the Congress, to wit, and these are the provisions of the bill:

First. That the President must have unlimited authority to send any number of troops to any foreign country at any time to train or fight.

Second. That no further authority from the Congress must be necessary.

Third. The Marshall-Rosenberg universal military service substitute for the Russell-Malone universal military training bill turns the provision for a trained civilian army into a provision for a standing professional army, and a proposed 4 to 6 months' training course into a 27 months' continuous service, with an additional 69 months' Reserve obligation, starting with 18-year-olds.

General Eisenhower approves the Marshall-Rosenberg substitute.

Mr. President, the general's address was advertised, in the advance billing, as a factual report to the Congress, upon which the Members could rely to crystallize their position with reference to the question of sending troops to Europe in the absence of a declaration of war.

However, several times the general, in his extemporaneous remarks, referred to the permanent headquarters which he has already set up in Europe; and, in closing his address, he invited the Members of Congress to visit the permanent headquarters at any future time, just as they used to visit him during World War II. That statement is an indication beyond any question that he considers the entire matter already decided and under way, subject only to the passage of the Marshall-Rosenberg universal-military-service bill, now masquerading under the label Senate bill No. 1, as a substitute for the Russell-Malone bill, which was introduced on the first day of the present session.

The 18,500,000 veterans and their friends in this country mistakenly believe that the Armed Services Committee of the Senate held hearings on the Russell-Malone bill, Senate bill No. 1, providing for a trained civilian army, when, as a matter of fact, through a ruse old in legislative circles, a fast switch was made in substituting the Marshall-Rosenberg professional army bill as Senate bill No. 1, and the hearings were actually held on the professional army bill.

BILLIONS IN FOREIGN AID TO COVER PAST DIPLOMATIC MISTAKES

Our military men must be permitted to plan their own strategy. They must be permitted to protect us from the mess which the State Department got us into, without being hampered by that same State Department. Defense is the last line that protects us against all miscalculations and mistaken foreign policies.

The State Department's strategy, which has been such a miserable failure, was based on the assumption that spending was defense. Lavish spending was actually to cover up past diplomatic errors. The administration took the position that our own military rearmament should not be allowed to interfere with Marshall plan spending and giving, and the President's current budget reflects that conviction.

We still have no military strategy to outwit Soviet military planners. In a global war, as in Korea, in line with our present strategy or lack of it, our Armed Forces will have to fight on Stalin's terms—in the wrong place, at the wrong time, and with only the shaky timbers of the United Nations for military and diplomatic support.

ECONOMIC UNION OF EUROPE NECESSARY FOR DEFENSE

If we withdrew our support today, Mr. President, England's Government would fall in the morning.

Let us stop this folly of supporting 16 separate governments whose areas total little more than one-half the area of this Nation, and make further aid to them of any nature contingent upon an economic union of the nations of Europe.

EUROPE AND ASIA FURNISH FOOT SOLDIERS

Europe could furnish one to ten million foot soldiers if they have the will to defend themselves. The same is true of Asia.

We can furnish air power and a submarine fleet to (a) control the air over any area important to our ultimate safety, and (b) blockade any nation that seeks to move into such areas.

We could serve notice on every nation in the world that, in the event of Asia and Europe furnishing the foot soldiers for their own defense, and the United States furnishing the air power and the submarine fleets, if any nation begins to move into such areas, important to them, areas whose integrity is also important to our ultimate safety, we shall destroy its war-making potential, including all fuel and industrial operations. This amounts, in fact, to an extended Monroe Doctrine.

Our boys are natural technicians and mechanics, with generations of background in getting things done in new and better ways. Let them fight in the way that they are the most effective.

WHO ARE OUR NATURAL ALLIES?

It is time that we took stock and determined just who our natural allies are, and then did something about it.

In the Pacific, Asia, and the South Seas areas, our natural friends are: Formosa, the continental Chinese Nationalist guerrillas, Pakistan, Japan, the Philippines, Indonesia, Australia, and New Zealand.

In the Atlantic and European areas, they are Spain, Turkey, and the unwilling captive states of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. We have friends in Poland, too.

The Turks, who are our first line of defense if Russia should start to move on Middle East oil areas, will fight our potential enemy to the death. And yet we practically ignore them.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator did not mention Western Germany. In what category does the Senator place Western Germany?

Mr. MALONE. I am very glad the distinguished Senator from North Dakota brought up that question. I am glad to give him my personal opinion, which is all that is possible under the evidence available.

It is the personal opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada that we in the United States cannot buy the products of Western Germany, such as coal, steel, chemicals, and many other manufactured and processed articles, because to do so would mean that we would merely displace the jobs of our own people to the extent of such importation; and the European nations will not buy her products, because of their fear that Germany may be built up they fear her economically and militarily; and the Germans, I may say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, will fight and will work. That has been proven over the years. Who, then, are the friends of the Germans? What markets are open to them? It is a well-known fact that the markets which are being held out now to the people of Western Germany, upon condition that they will not rearm and fight against Russia and China, are the Chinese Communists markets and the Russian markets, which cannot be supplied within less than 25 or 50 years. They can use all that Germany can manufacture. They can purchase all the products of every kind that Germany can manufacture. I may say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that it has been the practice of the junior Senator from Nevada for many years not to accept lip service, but to look beneath the surface, to see where the interests lie; and he has stated where, in his belief, the interests lie.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. MALONE. I am very happy to yield to the Senator, if he has another question.

Mr. LANGER. I ask the distinguished Senator whether Western Germany will become an ally of the United States?

Mr. MALONE. I thought I had answered the question. In fact, their interests lie with Communist China and Russia. It is my earnest opinion that at this moment the Germans will not fight with us. Of course, we believe—at least, we lead the citizens of this country to believe—since we have supported Germany ever since World War II, that the Germans are sitting on the edges of their chairs waiting for our decision before they determine what they will do.

Mr. President, more brains never existed in any nation than in Germany. The people of Germany are a little bit ahead of us. I would say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, in particular, they are way ahead of our State Department.

COMMUNIST GROWTH COINCIDES WITH EXECUTIVE POWER EXPANSION

It is interesting to observe that the change from our historic methods of foreign policy-making coincided closely with the growth of pro-Soviet influence in our foreign and military policy.

The State Department now is a combative, aggressive agency which builds its own political following through propaganda produced by use of large funds. It would amaze the Senators if they could see stacked up in one pile just one copy of each publication put out as propaganda by the State Department. These beautifully bound books and brochures sell State Department ideas, many of which have not been adopted officially by our Government, and many of which never should be adopted. At the taxpayer's expense, they are bombarding the taxpayers with propaganda for their unsound ideas. They have been able to push to the top places in our Defense Department men and women who go along with their policies.

Today, there is no question that the State Department, including satellite agencies such as ECA, is the strongest influence in the palace guard. And this is the same State Department which has been exposed as being too friendly to traitors and too weak morally.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MALONE. I am very happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I was very much interested in the Senator's statement that there are many of these publications which are not even official. Will the Senator give us a list of them?

Mr. MALONE. The list would be so lengthy that I would again be accused of taking up an undue amount of space if I were to place them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; but I think a list can be furnished the distinguished Senator. The junior Senator from Nevada did not say they were not official; he said they had never been adopted as official by the Congress of the United States, or by anyone else in authority. They are officially paid for by the State Department with public funds, and they are published as beautifully engraved documents containing speeches, addresses, and directions to all organizations in the United States of America.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MALONE. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator, when we meet on Thursday, bring one of those volumes with him?

Mr. MALONE. I think they can be brought there in a wheelbarrow, I may say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator bring them in, in a wheelbarrow, next Thursday, or have them brought in at that time?

Mr. MALONE. It has been some time since the Senator from Nevada pushed a wheelbarrow, but I shall be glad to get some of them, in order to accommodate the Senator. Perhaps it would be better if we merely brought them to the Senator's office, because we would not later have to remove them. The Senator could read them there.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to see some of them.

Mr. MALONE. All the distinguished Senator from North Dakota has to do is to open his own mail some morning. He will then see plenty of them. Perhaps the efficient secretary of the Senator from North Dakota is a good deal like my own. Secretaries find out how to separate the wheat from the chaff, and very little of such literature gets through to Senators.

Mr. President, as I have said, the State Department has been able to push to the top places in our Defense Department men and women who go along with their policies.

Today there is no question but that the State Department, including satellite agencies like ECA, is the strongest influence in the "palace guard." And this is the same State Department which has been exposed as being too friendly to traitors and too weak morally.

If our military men were permitted to say what they really think, and not what the State Department wants them to say, we might have some better advice.

SAFETY OF THIS NATION PARAMOUNT—UNITED STATES CAN WIN

One thing is crystal clear: We must stop running around without any sense of direction, like a chicken with its head chopped off. We must decide what is vital to the ultimate security and well-being of the United States of America, and then govern ourselves accordingly.

The United States can win any war with any nation or group of nations under a definite foreign policy based upon our own ultimate safety as the objective.

We cannot compromise with plans or deeds dangerous to this Nation.

Let us face it—we are in our present unhappy situation because we departed from concepts so ably set down in our Constitution; we abandoned the very principles the free exercise of which caused this Nation to stand out above all others.

The American people have proved their resourcefulness, Mr. President. We can reach any reasonable objective that we set for ourselves. Not only do we have the resources, but we have the manpower to protect our reasonable objectives, and we have the industrial production capacity. In other words, we have the ability to win.

First, we must know what areas we are going to protect, how we are going to protect them, and why.

We must establish a definite foreign and domestic policy and know exactly what our objectives are.

If we take stock of our position and fix an intelligent foreign policy with the security and welfare of our people in mind—if, in other words, we fulfill our responsibility to the people we represent—we will come out of this crisis with flying colors.

CONGRESS MUST MAINTAIN ITS CONSTITUTIONAL CONTROL

We have heard it said here on the Senate floor, and by those radio commentators who strictly follow the State Department line, that the President has the authority to send an Army to Europe even though war has not been declared, that the President has this authority by reason of the fact that he is Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces.

I wonder if it would not be well to remind these propagandists for State Department ideas that the Constitution of the United States of America gives the Congress the responsibility to do a number of things, namely: To provide for the common defense; to declare war; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a Navy; to make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth of the militia; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers.

No one has questioned the President's authority to send a small armed force to protect American citizens or American property or to maintain the Monroe Doctrine, but nothing in the spirit of the Constitution permits the President to declare war and to send our troops abroad in great force.

Assuming, for a moment, that the President, as Commander in Chief, possesses the constitutional power to send troops where he may see fit, it would still be highly imprudent for him to make an important policy decision, such as the commitment of considerable American forces to Europe, without assuring himself of the backing of the majority of the American people.

Under our representative form of Government the only effective means of testing public sentiment is by full, frank debate in Congress and the expression of the wishes of Congress.

The risks of sending more troops to Europe, or not sending more troops to Europe, should be weighed and balanced in the light of the most authoritative available testimony on all the factors involved, military, political, and economic.

CONGRESS IS THE PEOPLE'S VOICE

Clearly, Congress, which at the moment has a better mandate from the country than has the President, should find a better means of cooperation than to "consult" with the President in the casual sense in which he interprets the word. He must be brought to realize that there is a widespread public distrust in his judgment.

We must not forget that there are those in our Government who have caused the United States to take practically every wrong step possible since the close of World War II, and that these are the people who are now recommending that we spread our forces thin over the entire world. If they are serving the Kremlin consciously, they are doing a thorough job, in pushing a program so reckless and hopeless for the United States.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MALONE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Have we not a Senate Foreign Relations Committee? Has that committee ever protested? Is it not a fact that during the Eightieth Congress the vote was unanimous, 13 to 0, the Republicans voting with the Democrats?

Mr. MALONE. On what questions?

Mr. LANGER. On all questions dealing with foreign relations, and involving what the Senator has referred to as a crisis.

Mr. MALONE. Congress has not passed on the question of sending unlimited numbers of troops to any nation on earth to be trained or to fight. I think it is up to the Committee on Foreign Relations to have hearings upon that question.

Mr. LANGER. I invite the Senator's attention to my question. We became involved during the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses, and, so far as I know, not one Senator who was a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, either Democrat or Republican, rose on the Senate floor and protested. Is not that correct?

Mr. MALONE. I think what the Senator says is correct. The junior Senator from Nevada has deplored that fact from the time he arrived in the Senate from the State of Nevada. I do not agree that Congress has passed on the question of the President's right and power to send in his discretion, unlimited numbers of troops to any nation in the world at any time. I do not think Congress has passed upon that question, unless, inherent in the adoption of the United Nations Charter, it was included in that document. I am not able to determine that question at the moment. I know that the junior Senator from Nevada has voted against all this type of legislation, and shall continue to do so.

HOOVER VERSUS ACHESON

It is unsound, and confusing to the public, to try to classify every man in public life as in either the Hoover camp or the Acheson-Dewey camp of national security.

Mr. Hoover's great service was in crystallizing the debate. Secretary Acheson is merely continuing his one-economic-world theory.

I cannot agree with those who recommend that we withdraw all defense to the Western Hemisphere. Neither could I agree with those who recommend that we prepare to go to war against aggression anywhere and everywhere in the world. The latter is utter folly. Is it not about time we got our feet on the ground and quit talking about the impossible?

SHOULD LEARN BY EXPERIENCE—PREPARE NOW

In the first place, no military aid which the United States could possibly supply to Western Europe in less than 3 years, plus the utmost the other North Atlantic nations could contribute, could prevent the Russians meanwhile from conquering the remainder of the Continent. Any aid program to the separate European countries, now envisaged or feasible during those 3 years, would be inadequate and could merely provide a supply depot for the Russians if they wanted to acquire it.

I say again, Mr. President, that no maximum military or economic strength can ever be acquired by Europe in view of the separate maintenance of their small nations. There must be some kind of an economic union, so that they will not be fighting each other continually as they have been doing over many generations.

I cannot agree with those who say that Russia is not likely to attack. I do not believe that the military leaders of Russia will sit back and politely wait for us to prepare to fight them.

If we stop them in Asia, as they must be stopped, they may turn to Europe within a comparatively short time.

The situation, in broad terms, is as follows: The Soviet Union has 175 active divisions which, in a few months, could be raised to over 300 divisions. On the assumption that only half of the active divisions could be used in Europe, the Russians can still launch over 80 divisions without any further mobilization.

Of the active divisions, one-third are said to be mechanized or armored, which would mean that at least 25 are available in the west. On the western front, the Russians have 4,000 or 5,000 tanks in organized formations. Against this, the British, the French, the Belgians and the Americans have a total of 12 divisions, of which less than two are armored. The odds against us in ground troops on the western front are at least 4 to 1, and it may be as much as 9 to 1. These odds will be but little affected by added American troops of the number being suggested.

The number of lives squandered in Korea without a real objective is negligible compared with the number that would be sacrificed in a vain attempt to hold Europe with ground troops against a Russian attack.

The State Department "generals," wrong about everything in the past, now want our boys to form another Maginot line in Europe, to be side-stepped just as the other Maginot line was side-stepped.

The Chicago Tribune commented, in an editorial of December 26, 1950:

> According to members of the committee who heard him, Mr. Acheson said that a Russian advance into Europe within the next 2 years could not be stopped. But he insisted that a couple of hundred thousand more American boys should be sent to Europe at the earliest possible moment. To do otherwise, he said, would be to adopt a policy of "unutterable national shame."
> The futile adventure in Korea has already cost us more than 40,000 casualties and Mr. Acheson cries "Encore!" He invites a repetition of the catastrophe on a grander scale.

The junior Senator from Nevada joined with other Senators in the preceding Congress in voting the President sufficient appropriations for a 70-group air force, while the President said that 58 would be enough. Although the appropriation for the high number was voted, the President did not build even a 58-group air force.

Of course, Mr. President, it makes no difference whether we discuss a 58-group air force or a 70-group air force unless we take into consideration the type of planes, their range, and what they can carry. That is what counts in a discussion of air groups.

So we find ourselves destroying practically all our planes—B–24's and B–29's—which we had available following World War II. They are still the best planes for carrying freight which any nation has available at this time. At the same time we are not building a sufficient number of other aircraft.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Is that not a repetition of what took place during World War II, when Mr. Churchill said on the radio, "All we want is guns and supplies, because we have the men"? Then, after Secretary Hull returned, we had the Connally resolution, under which we were to assist a little bit. However, of the 116,000 casualties which were sustained in crossing over to Normandy, 86,000 were American boys; is that not correct?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I do not have the figures before me at the moment, but I assume that the distinguished Senator's estimate is correct. I am very glad that he brought up the subject. There is simply a repetition of what happened before. The furnishing of three and a half million boys we are to put into the Army, as well as the four divisions which General Eisenhower asks for, is merely a foot in the door. Once we adopt a policy of furnishing foot soldiers for service in Europe and Asia, we will end up as we did in World War II. I am told that at the end 73 percent of the allied soldiers in Europe were Americans. It is a question of taking one step at a time, and doing as Mr. Churchill suggested.

I take my hat off to Mr. Churchill. He is one of the finest and ablest men it has ever been my pleasure to listen to. I hope that while I am still a Member of the Senate we will be able to develop a few persons in the United States of America who will be for the United States of America as much as Mr. Churchill is for England. It would be wonderful. Then we could sit down and make a deal with England, or any other nation. I must say that we are making very slow progress in that direction.

Mr. President, we stand on the Senate floor and apologize because our appropriations are not larger. We apologize because we do not give large appropriations of money to other nations without any conditions attached. We merely aggravate and build up the hundred-year-old prejudices and feuds between the nations of Europe. It is within our power to attach conditions, and they should have been attached long ago.

THE POLICY OF CONTAINMENT THROUGH SPENDING—A MYTH

Instead of adequate defense preparation, the President went all out for the so-called containment of Russia through the financial aiding of European countries, without any conditions attached; our money has been thrown away on the socialistic program of division of our wealth with the world.

The policy of containment was always unrealistic.

ULTIMATE SECURITY OF THIS NATION

Mr. Hoover was certainly speaking for every responsible American when he opposes "rash involvement of our military forces in hopeless campaigns." We cannot afford to risk losing Alaska for lack of forces which may be fighting futile holding actions in remote places around the Soviet perimeter. It would be folly to neglect the radar screen and other devices which help to protect our centers of industry and population, while dispersing effort in driblets far away.

All these questions, and many others, deserve the fullest and most careful factual examination. All that now matters is the most effective deployment of American resources for the safeguarding of America's independence and survival as a free nation.

Mr. President, all our actions in preparing our defensive and offensive power should be predicated upon our ultimate security as a Nation.

We are now scattering our efforts in the preservation of a disunited Europe, and in the preservation of the colonial system. General Eisenhower in his talk to the Congress mentioned the importance of maintaining the dependence of large areas of the world on Europe in order to make available to the United States the necessary strategic and critical minerals. Here I beg to differ most emphatically with the general. In the first place, helping European colonial empire nations hold large areas of the world in slavery will be no lasting guarantee of an adequate mineral supply. Secondly, the Western Hemisphere can easily become almost completely independent from outside sources for most of the needed strategic items. There is more manganese in Brazil than we could use in the next 50 years. It would be possible to keep our lines of supply open if we were getting manganese from Brazil, whereas it is not possible to keep them open to the place where we have been getting manganese.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not correct to say that there is enough manganese in New Mexico, Arizona, and South Dakota, but that our Government has taken no steps to develop it?

Mr. MALONE. I will not go so far as to say that there is all we need, but there is a great deal of manganese in Nevada, New Mexico, and in the Dakotas. However, Mr. President, for us to get the manganese in our own country it would be necessary for us to pay the difference between the $1.50 or $2 a day paid to labor over there and the $10 or $11 a day paid in our country. Our administration has never been quite ready to do it. Of course, private money would go into the development of our own minerals, and we would not need to appropriate the taxpayers' money for that purpose.

Mr. LANGER. It is not worth sacrificing the life of a single soldier for, is it?

Mr. MALONE. I would certainly say that it would not be worth sacrificing the life of a single soldier. I would also say that if the administration is as much for the workingman of America as it says it is, it would be willing to pay the differential of cost between the sweatshop labor of Europe and the decent wages which we pay in the United States of America. However, the administration is not willing to do it, and that is the reason why 75 percent of our mines are closed down, I will say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

All our actions in preparing our defensive and offensive power should be predicated upon our ultimate security as a Nation.

Upon that question alone we could name the areas of the world important to the ultimate safety of the United States.

Walter Lippmann says:

The new doctrine will have to found the defenses of the United States and of the Atlantic community upon air power and sea power—and, along with them, upon a diplomacy which is conceived and is planned by men who know the limitations and also the advantages of sea and air power.

Mr. President, we are preparing now to fight with the weapons we used in World War II, and a good many weapons which we used in World War I. Apparently we have not yet realized the full significance of long-range air power and submarines. I suppose we shall have to learn that after the war starts, just as we had to learn it in World War II after our fleet was sunk at Pearl Harbor.

THE ULTIMATE SECURITY OF THIS NATION MUST BE PRESERVED

If the administration program of huge military and relief expenditure is continued, it means the economic collapse of this Nation, and, with it, the western world.

The American people have had far too much of our squandering internationalists, who have diminished the resources of the country by scattering our wealth and our goods to unappreciative and ungrateful nations of the world, without any conditions of behavior attached to the gifts.

We have poured billions upon billions of dollars into foreign countries. Our national economy will simply not permit our continuing to do this. Anyone who recommends the continuation of this giveaway spree is recommending the collapse of our economic system and our great industrial potential, which has twice saved us in world wars.

General Eisenhower said a very significant thing. He said that the emergency might last 20 or 30 years.

The junior Senator from Nevada said in July 1950, when the President asked for the first $10,000,000,000 for Korea, that the domestic budget could be trimmed that much, and showed then how it could be done.

I agree thoroughly with the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that $9,000,000,000 can be trimmed from the President's $71,000,000,000 budget.

Few realize that the President has recommended seven and one-half billion for European aid and assistance—arms and direct aid—without any conditions attached, such as a European economic union, free exchange of currencies, halting colonial exploitation, or, in fact, any of the obvious sound principles without which Europe cannot long survive even with our all-out support. That is a very revealing item. Some of us would do well to read it several times.

TAXPAYERS SAVED ADDITIONAL BILLIONS

Few realize that the destruction of our national economic structure goes forward under cover of war.

Approximately 100 State Department and other Government officials are conferring with representatives of 35 or 40 nations on approximately 100 trade treaties, affecting thousands of products, in a supersecret economic conference, at Torquay, England, with the avowed purpose of further lowering the floor under wages and investments in this country.

They agree to the lowering of tariffs and import fees without regard to the differential in the cost of production, due principally to the difference between the wage-standard of living here and in the competitive nations.

It is the one-economic-world theory of the extreme one-world enthusiasts.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that therein lies the secret of the answer to this question. With the lowering of the tariffs and import fees on the minerals, textiles, and other products, out the window goes the private capital which is invested in those industries. So long as that policy continues, new private capital is prohibited from entering those industries. So when we suddenly discover that we must produce minerals and other products, we find no private capital being invested. All the distinguished Senator from North Dakota has to do is to check with every hotel in Washington. The hotels are again bulging at the seams with people standing in line to get rooms. Why? They are coming to the Nation's capital to get Government money to invest in businesses in which they invest their know-how. So Uncle Sam is their partner, and they lose his money and not their own when the emergency is over, and they will lose it because there is no floor under the investment, represented by a tariff or import fee.

Because Congress, through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, transferred to the executive branch of Government its constitutional responsibility to regulate foreign trade the State Department has effectively stopped the investment of private capital in any business affected by this continual dabbling by the State Department in the foreign trade field.

As a direct result of stopping or slowing down this investment of private capital in a large sector of the business structure of the Nation, including textiles, crockery, watches, precision instruments, minerals, fisheries, gloves, and hundreds of other products, the Congress appropriates taxpayers' money for investment in such enterprises through the RFC, the Import-Export Bank, the World Bank, and the General Services branch of the Government.

The investments are approved haphazardly, and, I am sorry to say, to a great extent on a political basis, by bureaus and departments, many of which have mushroomed during the emergency, and which are handling the money of the taxpayers. Billions of dollars will be squandered by such agencies, when no investment of Government money in such enterprises would have been necessary if there had been an adequate floor under wages and investments, so that private investors would know that after the emergency was over there would be a tariff or import fee maintaining a level below which the price of the product was not likely to go.

FREE TRADE—THE 1934 TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Additional billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money may now be saved by the simple procedure of allowing the 1934 Trade Agreements Act to expire in June of this year. I am speaking of billions of dollars in addition to the amount which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] stated could be saved, namely, $9,000,000,000. These additional billions could be saved by making unnecessary the loans of government funds to domestic industries and businesses.

What is being done about the 1934 Trade Agreements Act? Hearings have been completed in the House on a bill, H. R. 1612, which is being reported to the House, and which is expected to be passed in a very few days. That bill will then be before the Senate Committee on Finance.

After the 1934 Trade Agreements Act was allowed to expire and the flexible import fee principle substituted therefor, based on "fair and reasonable competition," Congress could take back its constitutional responsibility to regulate foreign trade. Private capital would then flow into the business streams of the Nation, and investments would not be destroyed when the emergency is over.

CLEAR OUTLINE OF SUCCESSIVE BLUNDERS

Today we are involved in precisely the type of war which we can never win, a land struggle on the Asiatic Continent in a theater where no decision is possible against the hordes of Asia. The mistakes that brought us to this present crisis were numerous and major; some of them date back to World War II.

According to the Boston Daily Record, Eisenhower's "major problem is going to be the people of the United States, who have been awakened to the fact that they have been tricked, fooled, deceived, and lied to since November 1943."

I read from the December 21, 1950, issue of the same newspaper as follows:

It took 7 years, but now everybody is suspicious, particularly of those great statesmen and generals who, at Tehran, Yalta, Potsdam, and other conferences, laid the basis for the present fighting in Korea and for our going, for a third time, to Europe to rescue the nations of the west.

I read further from the December 30, 1950, issue as follows:

To recognize the gangsters of the Politburo as a responsible government was bad enough. To throw away the victory of American arms by toadying to the extortionate demands of Stalin was incredible folly. To substitute American goods and dollars for hardheaded bargaining did not give us strong allies, but weak and greedy dependents. To surrender Asia to communism by ill-informed, frivolously naive diplomacy was an unforgivable folly. No wonder, then, that suddenly confronted with the accumulated consequences of this reckless gamble of 17 years, the American people have lost confidence in their national leadership. No wonder that public opinion now acknowledges and deplores the ugly fact that while the national emergency bears its bitter fruit in Korea, its roots are in Washington. By great good fortune and the grace of providence, this Nation still has the valor, brains, and skill to emerge victorious from any ordeal imposed by alien military aggression. Now it must summon up its traditional and unfailing intelligence of patriotism to secure its own safety at home.

INEFFECTIVENESS OF UNITED NATIONS

We have a combination of a lack of willingness of most of the member nations of UN to send troops and of the UN willfully refusing to receive aid from Chinese Nationalists.

MAC ARTHUR IN A WAR WITH HIS HANDS TIED

Had MacArthur been permitted by the UN to make reconnaissance flights into China, the extent of the Chinese forces could have been discovered by him. But the UN refused this permission.

Mr. President, this was a most unheard of thing happening to a great general in a war. The United Nations said that he could not go beyond the northern boundary of Korea. They said he could not fly his planes beyond the northern boundary of Korea. They said he could not destroy the supply lines or the depots beyond that boundary. So, Mr. President, the United Nations, in its wisdom, sitting in its great building in New York City, said that General MacArthur must stand there on the line, on the northern boundary, and watch the Chinese Communist troops form, watch the supplies and material coming up the supply lines, and, when those troops hit his line, stop them at the line of scrimmage, as would be done in a football game.

Mr. President, the United Nations finally figured out something by which even the great MacArthur could not win. It is quite a job to figure out anything by which MacArthur cannot win. Having been with him for a time in New Guinea during World War II, and having visited him in Japan and having watched him operate over a period of years, I know that it takes a considerable amount of figuring to keep General MacArthur from winning, if he is given anything at all with which to fight.

He has been fighting with one hand tied behind him. It seems universally admitted also that MacArthur could bring consternation to the Chinese forces by sending bombers to destroy military targets in China and Manchuria. But UN has refused permission.

Mr. Truman, at a press conference January 4, said that he had no intention of again asking this permission of UN. He has obviously bowed to the European line of compromising with the Chinese Communists.

UN METHODS, MURDER NOT WAR

General MacArthur should be freed from UN control, and allowed to destroy the Chinese Communists' capacity to wage war throughout Manchuria and China, or the troops should be removed from the area. The United Nations method is murder—it is not war.

Many believe that since the Chinese Communists have actually attacked our troops we should destroy their war-making capacity in Manchuria and China so that their usefulness to Russia would be delayed by perhaps several years. It could be, Mr. President, that the opportunity has presented itself, as a result of their aggression, to do what should be done in that regard.

Our boys have been fighting in Korea under orders from the United Nations. Other nations have been deciding whether Americans boys should live or die. The business of running a military action from the debating tables of the United Nations organization already has reaped its whirlwind of death, tragedy, and despair.

A majority of the cease-fire committee influencing our troop action against Communist China have recognized Communist China.

Korea is not the most important thing in the world to us. Korea is a peninsula off the coast of Asia which the Joint Chiefs of Staff long ago said was militarily untenable.

So in an area of that kind we witness our troops fighting a Communist nation and being controlled, and the cease-fire committee made up of men the majority of whose countries have recognized Communist China. I should say it was a wonderful decision for us to make to put our own troops in the hands of people who not only want us to recognize Communist China but who have themselves recognized Communist China.

General MacArthur favored support of Chiang Kai-shek's efforts on the mainland of China, which would have occupied a large part of Mao Tze-tung's Communist army so that it would not be free for expeditions into Korea, Burma, French Indochina, and Tibet. This was rejected by the State Department.

MacArthur and most of our military men opposed the employment of ground forces in Korea, expecting that the Air Force and the Navy could do a better job. The final instructions of June 25 ordered an unready and ill-supplied token ground force to go into Korea, calling it a police action.

The whole picture is humiliating to America.

American casualties are nearly 50,000. These men and their country are paying the bitter price of a military pushing around that could have been avoided.

We must face the situation as it is today and try to devise a strategy that will extricate us from an untenable position.

THE OBVIOUS APPROACH IN KOREA AND CHINA

The first alternative in my suggestion No. 4 provided for air and sea warfare in the Korean struggle, while letting the Chinese Nationalists and the South Koreans provide the foot soldiers.

The people of North America can never meet the armed masses of the Eurasian continent on their own terms and win. It is nonsense to suppose that the smaller number of ground troops can encircle and contain the larger, and that this can be done across two oceans.

THE FOOT SOLDIERS OF CHINA

Many thoughtful Americans feel that we should take advantage of the offer of the troops of Nationalist China.

There are in Formosa 700,000 anti-Communist Chinese troops, a greater number than the combined total of the UN forces in Korea, the French forces in Indochina, and the British forces in Hong Kong and Malaya. There are more than 1,600,000 anti-Communist guerrillas on the mainland of China.

It is believed that if the remainder of the funds which Congress appropriated for military equipment in the general area of China at the discretion of the President is permitted to be used for this purpose in Formosa, and if the Nationalists are permitted to aid the guerrillas and attack the Communists they can cut communications and can involve the Reds to the extent of preventing them from sending large reinforcements to Korea or Indochina, and may ultimately drive the Reds out of China.

We should push aside prejudices of State Department personnel—prejudices based upon their procommunistic ideas. We should make friends where we can find them. We should accept friendships offered to us.

We should get America's foot soldiers out of the fruitless and futile war in Korea, in which we became involved by blundering and muddling politicians, and in which we have suffered an agonizing and humiliating reverse because of incompetence at the highest levels of national responsibility.

WE MUST WIN OR GET OUT

Mr. President, why have not our troops been recalled or allowed to destroy the war-making potential of China and Manchuria?

The answer to this can be given in three words: Lack of guts.

We must either win this war with China or get out. It is the only way we can proceed without a disastrous loss of American prestige and resulting panic among our allies.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT "GENERALS"

Mr. President, how long can Congress entrust our survival as a Nation to the military planning of the State Department "generals"? The cure is simple, if Congress has the will to take hold. It must divorce the State Department from all economic and spending programs, which are the sources of its power to compel other agencies in the administration to do its will. Only thus can our defense planning be divorced from the State Department's ideological windmills.

When they have cleaned house in the Defense Establishment, Congress can turn the ECA over to the Defense Department. All of ECA which is not defense can be liquidated.

AMERICAN PEOPLE MUST CONTROL

Mr. President, it is time for the American people to wake up and bring their Government to its senses. They can do it. The Congress, at last realizing the futility of supporting Europe, or, in fact, any nation on its own terms, is ready for all the cooperation it can get from private citizens.

Let the Congress be aware of its duty and worthy of its trust. The test of the awareness and worthiness of the Congress will be found in the sincerity and integrity and patriotism of its efforts to make American interests its major concern.

How long, Mr. President, can the American public and Congress itself continue to be lulled to sleep through a double-talking administration?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have included at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article entitled "Britain in Asia Plays Divide-and-Rule Game," which appeared in the New York World-Telegram and Sun on January 27, 1951.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITAIN IN ASIA PLAYS DIVIDE AND RULE GAME—OLD TACTICS THAT WORKED IN EUROPE DUG UP FOR A TRY-OUT IN FAR EAST

(By Parker La Moore)

Britain is using the same divide and rule tactics in the Korean situation which British diplomacy employed for two centuries to manipulate the politics of Europe.

British policy used to play the Germans against the Russians, the French against the Germans. The Turks were used against the Greeks, the Greeks against the Turks.

Then in World War I Britain supported the Arabs to break the power of the Ottoman empire in the Middle East. Through such manipulations Britain achieved a balance-of-power position in continental Europe.

In the present situation British diplomacy appears to be seeking a so-called "third force" position between the United States and Russia. This has been the announced objective of the left-wing element of the British Labor party, and that element has moved into a commanding position in British affairs in recent months.

This tends to explain why Britain has one policy toward communism in Europe and an altogether different policy toward communism in Asia.

The American alliance through the North Atlantic pact serves to hold Russia in line in Europe, or at least it was so designed. But in the Far East Britain is supporting a partnership between India and Red China which eventually might be used to checkmate either the United States or Russia.

Of course the United States would feel the first impact of such an association—indeed, we are feeling it now in the United Nations. And since Red China doesn't seem to be anything more than a Soviet puppet, an Indian-Chinese Communist working arrangement might boomerang against both India and Britain.

The possibility also exists that if the radical Laborites get more firmly in the saddle in Britain the extreme left-wing Socialists may get completely out of hand and go all the way over to the Russian camp.

The leaders in this bloc do not have the same attitude toward communism that we do. To them it is a form of socialism more acceptable from their viewpoint than American capitalism. American assistance has been useful to them, and aid in similar proportions could not have been obtained from Russia. But our bounty has been accepted with ill grace.

The speeches in the last 2 years by Aneurin Bevan and Emanuel Shinwell have reflected the hostile feeling of the left-wingers toward the United States. Mr. Bevan recently became Minister of Labor and the director of manpower mobilization, while Mr. Shinwell is Minister of Defense.

It would be taking a lot for granted to assume that they would go all out for us in a showdown between the United States and Russia.

When the British position on the Korean problem was questioned in Parliament recently, Winston Churchill warned against the dangers to Britain if a serious divergence should arise between British and American policy. Premier Attlee replied he sought unity with the "Commonwealth, the United States, and all peace-loving nations."

In this instance he was defending the British refusal to support economic sanctions against Red China. In placing unity with the "Commonwealth" ahead of unity with the United States he was speaking of India. And by indirection he was accusing the United States of a reckless, thoughtless course in seeking punitive action against the Chinese Communists. All of this was well understood in the House of Commons, where he was speaking. And his statement was greeted with cheers.

In the report to the New York Times it was remarked that the part of Mr. Attlee's statement that received the warmest reception was "that in which he informed the House that Britain's chargé d'affaires had been received by the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs on January 21 and was informed of the conditions under which Communist China would agree to a truce."

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of Saturday, February 3, 1951, which to some extent explains the action of our genial General Eisenhower.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW TO WIN 200,000,000 FRIENDS AT NO COST

General Eisenhower took to the air waves last night to give the taxpayers an imitation in shorter form of the persuasion he attempted upon Congress the day before.

So far as we have been able to learn up to this writing, nobody was thunderstruck.

There may have been citizens who thought it possible he would say of his European jaunt: "I went. I saw. You wouldn't want any."

But of course not. Even a child knows that Mr. Truman made very sure of the general before leading him up to be commander in chief of the international defense forces.

The general has now performed accordingly. He comes back with the novel suggestion that there is no doubt about the all-seeing, all-knowing wisdom of the Truman program in foreign affairs. And then he proceeds to talk against people daring to have doubts.

If the taxpayers and Congress are locked up, then why all the jawing? When the customer is sold, you just hand him the pen. Certainly you don't tell him that he has no doubts and that if he does they are beneath him.

It is indeed worth reflection that the general himself, in spite of his frontal positiveness, has dragged in plenty of hems and haws on the side.

Last night's speech was notable for the use of the big if. In one single sentence of 80 words, the general found it necessary to protect himself six times with if.

A clue to this necessity shows itself when one reads his detailed text. In rummaging around for evidence to support his claim of France's will to resist, he mentions the war in Indochina. When the British are his example, he cites Malaya.

In view of the fact that Britain's Government is a Socialist bartender for communism and the Communists are the largest single section of seat holders in the French Chamber of Deputies, it may be argued that the general had no choice. He had to look half way around the world away from them for a likely story.

But to the world itself he could hardly have offered a more unhappy evidence of that ignorance, to call it by the best possible name, which inflames against America so many people who would gladly be our friends and allies if we would let them.

It would profit the general, at least we hope he is capable of it, to read an address to the House of Representatives on Monday last by Representative LAWRENCE H. SMITH of the First Wisconsin District.

Mr. SMITH made it plain and clear how the United States can gain the support of 200,000,000 people living around the edges of the Mediterranean Sea in important regions as much threatened by Communist aggression as any in the world.

A REAL PROGRAM

Furthermore, he showed how this can be done without spending a dollar of taxpayers' money, and for that matter it can even be done in honor.

He proposes that the United States throw its sympathies with these exploited people against, not for, British and French colonialism. And, why not?

General Eisenhower, in his speech to Congress, made much of the danger that would follow Communist seizure of various places where raw materials lie that we might want to buy.

Well, in the Near East and north Africa there are enormous deposits of material wealth, of which 60 percent of the world's proved oil supply is just one.

The people who live there are not fooled. They know why the British and French denounce communism in the colonies and swallow it at home. And so it is no wonder these suppressed and exploited victims of colonialism grow more and more interested in what Russia has to say to them.

Communism is an enemy they have yet to know, but colonialism they can hate with certain knowledge born of bitter experience.

The American people, whether General Eisenhower will or no, have something to think about in the observation by Maj. Gen. Graves B. Erskine, commander of the Marine Corps department of the Pacific, that colonialism is through in Asia and in other parts of the world as well.

We can think about the fact that a committee for the freedom of north Africa complained to President Truman of French police action in Morocco even as French Premier Pleven and Mr. Truman were discussing anti-Communist measures.

We can think about the fact that in Asia, it is independent, self-governing Thailand that stands up to the Soviets. General Erskine says Thailand is the only place in southeast Asia where a white man can walk the street without fear of being knocked on the head.

No wonder General Eisenhower's sales talk suffered from hems and haws. He should have listened to Representative SMITH, instead of expecting a Nation to listen to him.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled "Why Do They Sneer?" from the Boston Evening American for January 19, 1951.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY DO THEY SNEER?

Why do the British treat us Americans as an inferior people? That's the question which we all must be frank enough to face and answer.

We have given the British billions of our money to squander on socialism.

We have obligingly bailed them out in two World Wars.

We have put up with a State Department which has been notoriously subservient to British opinion.

Gratitude would seem to be in order.

But, as every newspaper reader knows, we are more apt to get sneers.

Why?

There are those that maintain that this is all due to the traditional British snobbishness.

More likely, however, it is merely contempt for those who govern America.

Never was this disdainful attitude more forcefully demonstrated than in the pending peace treaty with the Japanese.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The power of Japan in the Pacific was broken by the American Army, Navy, and Air Force, assisted mainly by Nationalist China under Chiang Kai-shek.

The Japanese broke the British power in Asia and whereas Gen. Douglas MacArthur did come back, the British did not.

General MacArthur conquered Japan and then established it as, in effect, a protectorate of the United States. Drawing upon his genius as an organizer and administrator, he gave the Japanese a new life.

Now he is about to negotiate a treaty with them, restoring to them their independence and guaranteeing the United States a true friend in the Orient.

So what happens?

The British barge into the picture with a series of spiteful attacks on General MacArthur.

With the help of Americans shortsighted enough to do their bidding, they conduct a smear campaign against MacArthur, even within the borders of the United States.

And then, wholly unmindful that Soviet China is murdering Americans in a shameless war of imperialist invasion, these Britishers have the gall to demand that Soviet China should be invited to participate in the negotiations with the Japanese.

Can the British statesmen guarantee that once Mao Tze-tung has seized Korea, he will not make war on Japan?

Will the British stipulate now what they will do if and when Mao moves on Japan, or will they say that after Mao has again double-crossed them, they will let America fight to the last man?

They pledged themselves to support the United Nations. They were among the most vigorous and vociferous of its members prior to the Korean trouble. But after the bullets began flying, they let Americans do 90 percent of the fighting and 90 percent of the dying. They contended with token forces.

We are a proud and self-respecting people, no matter what the British choose to think about us.

Clearly, therefore, the time has come for us to say that Japan is our problem, that we shall make whatever arrangements with Japan we desire to make, and that we shall back General MacArthur to the limit.

And all the while, we should keep uppermost in our minds the hard-to-take fact that the British would not have had the impudence to force their sponsorship of Soviet China upon the United States if they were not openly contemptuous of the conduct of our foreign policy.

We have given them the handsome sum of $5,900,000,000 in the past 5 years alone. We have taxed our people till it hurt for their benefit.

We have every right in the world to expect some show of appreciation from them; but if we do not get it, there is no reason why we should tolerate more sneers and smears.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled, "Chiang Repeats Offer of Army To Save Korea," which appeared in the New York World-Telegram and Sun on January 10, 1951.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHIANG REPEATS OFFER OF ARMY TO SAVE KOREA—CAN RETAKE CHINA "WITHOUT GI AID"

TAIPEI, FORMOSA, January 10.—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek said today that his offer to the United Nations of Chinese Nationalist combat troops for use in Korea or any other part of the world still holds good.

He also said that his forces could liberate the Chinese mainland from the Communists without the help of United States troops.

American troops are not wanted or needed as sacrifices to communism in China, he said.

Chiang told the United Press that he stands by all his past declarations, both as to military help to the UN and liberation of the mainland.

Nationalist China offered 33,000 troops last summer for service in Koren. The offer was relayed to General of Army Douglas MacArthur as UN military commander. He declined it on grounds that the Nationalists needed their forces to safeguard Formosa.

Whether General MacArthur will reconsider the offer in the light of the deteriorating military situation in Korea was not known.

Mr. MALONE. Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement of the 10 suggested approaches to our international relationships, which were outlined on December 14, 1950, by the junior Senator from Nevada in an address before this body. Let me say that I intend to discuss at a later date the remainder of the ten recommendations.

"There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEN SUGGESTIONS IN PRESENT EMERGENCY

1. Forthwith stop assistance of every nature to Communist nations and to nations in any way assisting Russia or her satellites to consolidate Soviet gains and to prepare for world war III.

2. Stop supporting colonial slavery in any form anywhere.

3. Oppose the recognition of Communist China by the United Nations with every means at our command.

4. Three suggested approaches to the war in Korea and Asia:

A. We could do the obvious thing—arm Chiang Kai-shek's nationals and guerrillas to furnish the foot soldiers for the job, then under General MacArthur make the most efficient use of our air power, our Navy, including submarines, to destroy the war-making power of Communist Korea and the aggressor Communist China troops.

B. We could withdraw from Korea, arm and equip Chiang Kai-shek's troops, and let him do the job. It would require a longer time, but he would engage the Communist forces to the extent that it would be doubtful if they could harass us for a considerable time.

C. We could completely abandon Korea and China with all of its possible consequences and repercussions.

D. We can then establish our first line of defense through Japan, Formosa, Okinawa, Guam, the Philippines, Indonesia, New Guinea, and Australia.

E. If all of these suggestions are discarded, then we can come home and defend the Western Hemisphere. We must be prepared to defend this continent in any case. The one thing that we cannot do is to continue the present course of indecision and nervous jittery attitude.

5. Inform the governments of Europe which still maintain political and economic agreements with the Soviet Union that these should be terminated at the earliest possible date as a prerequisite to the continued friendship and assistance of Europe in the United States.

6. Give no more money as loans or gifts to any government, but if necessary loan such funds to private business in strategic areas without weakening our own economy, in the same manner that the RFC loans such funds to private business in this country in times of stress.

7. Build as rapidly as possible a military force, spearheaded by an adequate submarine fleet and an air corps of whatever number of groups may be called for, and install radar equipment to protect the Western Hemisphere.

8. If the European people will enlist in their own armies and furnish the ground troops, then serve notice on Russia that any move on Europe will be met with an aggressive aerial attack on their means of making war, using every means at our command to defeat their purpose of controlling Europe.

9. In every possible way, protect and strengthen our national economy; while making all possible speed toward proper preparedness, guard well our national economy; stop wasting the hard-earned dollars of our taxpayers through Marshall plan and other give-away schemes; inaugurate a businesslike fiscal policy.

10. Clean up our own Government, throw out the Communists, Communist associates, adherents to foreign ideologies, persons of abnormal moral weakness, and other dangerous security risks.

The Armed Services Committees of the Congress should immediately institute a thorough investigation to determine why we are not prepared to fight a war.

YALTA AND POLAND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on tomorrow, February 6, six years will have passed since Prime Minister Churchill, President Roosevelt, and Generalissimo Stalin announced to the world their signed pledge at Yalta to the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity guaranteeing the holding of free and unfettered elections on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot.

Six years have passed since Poland was promised that in these elections all democratic and anti-Nazi parties shall have the right to take part and put forward candidates.

This was a glowing commitment, full of hope and promise for the people of the country which was the first to resist the invading Nazi legions. What was not known in February 6 years ago was that the western democracies had, coincidentally with these great promises to Poland, secretly agreed to many other things. We did not know then that it had been secretly agreed not to apply the principles of the Atlantic Charter to countries which the Kremlin had absorbed, that it had been secretly agreed greatly to modify the Curzon Line in order to give the Soviets possession of the important city of Lwow and other strategic areas of Polish territory, that it had been secretly agreed to recognize the Ukraine and White Russia separately in order to give the Kremlin three votes in the United Nations, that it had been secretly agreed to accept the Soviet proposal for the fatal veto, that it had been secretly agreed to award the Soviets one-half of Germany's $20,000,000,000 reparations bill, and that it had been secretly agreed to sign away to the Kremlin Outer Mongolia, the whole Kurile chain of islands, half of the important island of Sakhalin, and in Manchuria exclusive occupation of the Port Arthur naval base, and a half share with China in control of the commercial port of Dairen.

These concessions involved the very existence of millions of human beings, including the people of Poland; yet Poland was not consulted. The Congress of the United States, traditional friend of the Polish people, was not consulted, even though the Constitution explicitly entrusted to the Senate the ratification of treaties. The affected nations of Eastern Europe were not consulted. Small wonder that many say that apparently only the Politburo was consulted.

Here is how the President of the United States, reporting to Congress on March 1, 1945, referred to these world-shattering secret agreements:

> There were, of course, a number of smaller things which I have not time to go into on which joint agreement was had. We hope things will straighten out.

Unfortunately, things have not straightened out, at least not insofar as the Polish people are concerned. Things have straightened out for the masters of the Kremlin, of course. But what became of the solemn pledge for "free and unfettered elections" in Poland, for "universal suffrage" and the "secret ballot," in exchange for which such vast concessions were made at Yalta 6 years ago?

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] properly characterized the Polish elections of 1947 as a "vicious travesty upon the promised freedom and democracy to which we pledged our support." Even the State Department had to admit that the Provisional Government of Poland, recognized at Yalta, had "employed widespread measures of coercion and intimidation against democratic elements which were loyal to Poland."

The net result of Yalta, so far as Poland is concerned, is that she was relieved of her sovereign territory in the east, promised free elections, and promptly abandoned to the scourge of implacable totalitarianism.

Little wonder it is that history has recorded the tragic verdict that Poland was truly sold down the river at Yalta.

Everlastingly tragic is this verdict to those who recall the fury of Polish resistance during those 35 days when the Warsaw radio played Chopin's immortal music, a stirring and unforgettable chapter of history. Even when Warsaw fell, Polish courage never faltered. Thousands made their way to France and England, seeking an opportunity to carry on the fight, which they did, on land, on sea, and in the air. If Yalta is the record of Polish betrayal, World War II at least is the record of Polish courage, the courage that flamed up everywhere—on and above the North Sea, in frozen Norway, in the deserts of Libya, on the slopes of Monte Cassino, wherever the freedom-loving peoples of the world fought for liberty and decency.

It was my unforgettable privilege to serve alongside of the Polish troops in Italy in 1944. We were together in the Fifth Army. I was present at one of the early attacks on Monte Cassino in March 1944—an attack which failed in spite of 7 hours of continuous air bombardment and artillery barrage. Monte Cassino, as you know, controlled the whole Liri River valley and the approach to Rome. Many had tried to reduce it, but none had succeeded. But the Polish troops captured it, opened the road to Rome, and changed the whole course of allied battle in Italy.

I was present in Rome on a sunny August morning in the beautiful Piazza Venezia when the American General Devers decorated that gallant and dynamic soldier, Gen. Wladislaw Anders, with the Order of Commander of the Legion of Merit. Much later in 1945, on a wintry day in eastern France, I saw General Anders decorate General Devers with the Polish War Cross—the order of Virtuti Militari, with its blue and black ribbon. During a long evening with General Anders we talked about his troops who last year were included in the displaced-persons legislation as eligible to enter the United States.

These things have given me a close personal interest in Poland, which I know is shared by many Americans who have not had a personal contact with Polish people. For every American, after all, knows about Kosciusko and his contribution to American independence and we all appreciate what Americans of Polish descent have brought to the development of our common country.

Flowery resolutions and pious words about Poland are scant measures of consolation for the millions of brave people condemned to existence behind the iron curtain. I want my country to realize that in the Latin phrase which adorns the Polish medal "Polonia Restituta" there is a message for us that we are obligated to honor.

It is a constant reminder that the terrible consequences of Yalta, to which this country was regretfully a party, exhort us today so to conduct ourselves that the debt is repaid—that "Polonia Restituta" shall become more than words on a medal, but a basic and never-to-be-forgotten objective of our whole national policy.

I yield the floor.

COMMUNICATIONS ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. LANGER obtained the floor.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the distinguished majority leader for the purpose of the introduction of a bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. I did not wish to introduce a bill, but to ask to have one considered.

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the majority leader for that purpose.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 658) to further amend the Communications Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 658) to further amend the Communications Act.

Mr. McFARLAND. I understand there are four amendments to be offered to the bill by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, on Monday last when this bill was called on the Consent Calendar, the able Senator from North Dakota asked to have it go over, and I joined in the request at that time, in order that we might study the bill. I merely say this by way of introduction. We have gone over the bill, and I have four brief amendments, about which I have conferred with the distinguished majority leader. I should like to offer them, and to discuss the bill very briefly. The amendments are self-explanatory, and I shall not discuss them, but I merely want to say a few words in connection with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, would the Senator mind having the amendments agreed to first?

Mr. CASE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] offers certain amendments, which will be stated.

The first amendment of Mr. CASE was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "salary," to insert "to be fixed by the Commissioner but."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word "assistants", to insert "the chief of each integrated division and his assistants."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 16, after the word "reports", to insert "except that any commissioner may present his own or minority views or supplemental reports."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 15, after the word "during", to insert "a national emergency proclaimed by the President or declared by the Congress and during."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 23, between the words "such" and "war," insert "national emergency or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, on the whole, it seems to me that this bill will greatly improve the Federal communications law. In reading the report I was impressed by the efforts of the author of the bill, the distinguished majority leader, and the committee to dissipate some of the fog surrounding some of the activity, or lack of activity, in the area in which the Commission has jurisdiction or responsibility.

Over a period of years, the Commission has moved from looking over a radio station's over-all program content to specific programs to which it objects. It has been unwilling to cancel the license, or to fail to renew the license for a station, for example, that is engaging in give-away programs and broadcasting horse-racing information, but it has proceeded to make rulings as to whether such programs are in the public interest, and, at the same time, it renews the station license. Hence a body of law seems to have been growing up with reference to specific programs, rather than the over-all program content of a given station. If this practice should continue over a period of years, the Commission will have specifically approved or disapproved various specific types of programs, notwithstanding the provision of the act, that "No regulation or condition shall be promulgated or fixed by the Commission which shall interfere with the right of free speech by means of radio communication."

As a matter of fact, of course, the Commission does not make rules and regulations with reference to the specific programs to which it objects, but it makes decisions containing such criticisms as obiter dicta in an opinion renewing the license of a station. The courts, in interpreting other sections of the act, have followed the line that opinions have the same status as rules and regulations of the Commission, and that rules and regulations of the Commission have the same effect as statutes. By reasoning, then, the decisions with reference to specific programs might be argued to have the same force and effect, by indirection, as if they had been enacted by statute. That would make such decisions a contravention of section 326.

From my reading of the bill and the committee's report thereon, it is my understanding that the bill is not intended to repeal section 326. I make this statement as a part of the legislative history of the bill.

Mr. President, I desire to thank the majority leader, who introduced this bill, for his consideration and patience in giving me an opportunity to study the bill to some extent, and to offer these amendments. I appreciate the consideration which has been given them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as "Communications Act Amendments, 1951."

SEC. 2. Subsection (o) of section 3 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(o) 'Broadcasting' means the dissemination of radio communications intended to be received directly by the general public."

SEC. 3. Section 3 of such act is further amended by adding after subsection (aa) the following:

"(bb) The term 'license', 'station license', or 'radio station license' means that instrument of authorization required by this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the use or operation of apparatus for transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, by whatever name the instrument may be designed by the Commission.

"(cc) The term 'broadcast station', 'broadcasting station', or 'radio broadcast station' means a radio station equipped to engage in broadcasting as herein defined.

"(dd) The term 'construction permit' or 'permit for construction' means that instrument of authorization required by this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act for the installation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, by whatever name the instrument may be designated by the Commission."

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the last two sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, profession, or employment but this shall not apply to the preparation of technical or professional publications for which reasonable honorarium or compensation may be paid. Any such Commissioner serving as such after 1 year from the date of enactment of the Communications Act Amendments, 1951, shall not for a period of 1 year following the termination of his services as a Commissioner represent before the Commission in a professional capacity any person, including all persons under common control, subject to the provisions of this act, except that this restriction shall not apply to any Commissioner who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Not more than four members of the Commission shall be members of the same political party."

(b) Subsection (f) (1) of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(f) (1) Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, (1) the Commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer and not more than two assistants, a chief accountant and not more than two assistants, a general counsel and not more than two assistants, and counsel temporarily employed and designated by the Commission for the performance of specific special services; and (2) each Commissioner may appoint and prescribe the duties of a legal assistant at an annual salary to be fixed by the Commissioner but not to exceed $10,000 and a secretary at an annual salary not to exceed $5,600. The chief engineer, the chief accountant, and the general counsel shall each receive an annual salary of not to exceed $11,200; the secretary shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed $10,000, and no assistant shall receive an annual salary in excess of $10,000: Provided, That on and after 1 year from the date of enactment of Communications Act Amendments, 1951, the secretary of the Commission, the chief engineer and his assistants, the chief accountant and his assistants, the general counsel and his assistants, the chief of each integrated division and his assistants and the legal assistants to each Commissioner shall not, for the period of 1 year next following the cessation of their employment with the Commission, represent before the Commission in a professional capacity any person, including all persons under common control, subject to the provisions of this act. The Commission shall have authority, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, to appoint such other officers, engineers, accountants, attorneys, inspectors, examiners, and other employees as are necessary in the execution of its functions."

(c) The first sentence of subsection (g) of section 4 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Commission may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for office supplies, law books, periodicals, and books of reference, for printing and binding, for land for use as sites for radio monitoring stations and related facilities, including living quarters where necessary in remote areas, for the construction of such stations and facilities, and for the improvement, furnishing, equipping, and repairing of such stations and facilities and of laboratories and other related facilities (including construction of minor subsidiary buildings and structures not exceeding $25,000 in any one instance) used in connection with technical research activities), as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the Commission and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress."

(d) Subsection (k) of section 4 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(k) The Commission shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain—

"(1) such information and data collected by the Commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of interstate and foreign wire and radio communication and radio transmission of energy.

"(2) such information and data concerning the functioning of the Commission as will be of value to Congress in appraising the amount and character of the work and accomplishments of the Commission and the adequacy of its staff and equipment: Provided, That the first and second annual reports following the date of enactment of Communications Act Amendments, 1951, shall set forth in detail the number and caption of pending applications requesting approval of transfer of control or assignment of a station license, or construction permits for new stations, or for increases in power, or for changes of frequency of existing stations at the beginning and end of the period covered by such report;

"(3) information with respect to all persons taken into the employment of the Commission during the year covered by the report, including names, pertinent biographical data and experience, Commission positions held and compensation paid, together with the names of those persons who have left the employ of the Commission during such year: Provided, That the first annual report following the date of enactment of Communications Act Amendments, 1951, shall contain such information with respect to all persons in the employ of the Commission at the close of the year for which the report is made;

"(4) an itemized statement of all funds expended during the preceding year by the Commission, of the sources of such funds, and of the authority in this act or elsewhere under which such expenditures were made; and

"(5) specific recommendations to Congress as to additional legislation which the Commission deems necessary or desirable, including all legislative proposals submitted for approval to the Director of the Budget."

SEC. 5. Section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 5. (a) The member of the Commission designated by the President as Chairman shall be the chief executive officer of the Commission. It shall be his duty to preside at all meetings and sessions of the Commission, to represent the Commission in all matters relating to legislation and legislative reports, except that any commissioner may present his own or minority views or supplemental reports, to represent the Commission in all matters requiring conferences or communications with other governmental officers, departments or agencies, and generally to coordinate and organize the work of the Commission in such manner as to promote prompt and efficient disposition of all matters within the jurisdiction of the Commission. In the case of a vacancy in the office of the Chairman of the Commission, or the absence or inability of the Chairman to serve, the Commission may temporarily designate and appoint one of its members to act as Chairman until the cause or circumstance requiring such service shall have been eliminated or corrected.

"(b) Within 60 days after the enactment of the Communications Act Amendments, 1951, and from time to time thereafter as the Commission may find necessary, the Commission shall organize its legal, engineering, and accounting staff into (1) integrated divisions, to function on the basis of the Commission's principal workload operations; and (2) into such other divisional organizations as the Commission may deem necessary to handle that part of its workload which cuts across more than one integrated division or which does not lend itself to the integrated division set-up. Each such integrated division and divisional organization shall include such legal, engineering, accounting, administrative, and clerical personnel as the Commission may determine to be necessary to perform its functions. The general counsel, the chief engineer, and the chief accountant and their respective assistants shall carry out their respective duties under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission shall establish a staff, directly responsible to it, which shall include such legal, engineering, and accounting personnel as the Commission deems necessary, whose duty shall be to prepare such drafts of Commission decisions, orders, and other memoranda as the Commission, in the exercise of its quasi-judicial duties, may from time to time direct: Provided, That no member of such staff shall participate in a hearing or represent the Commission, directly or indirectly, in any prosecutory or investigatory function or proceeding.

"(c) Except as provided in section 409 hereof, the Commission, when necessary to the proper functioning of the Commission and the prompt and orderly conduct of its business, is hereby authorized and directed to assign or refer any portion of its work, business, or functions to an individual Commissioner or Commissioners or to a board composed of one or more employees of the Commission, to be designated by such order for action thereon, and by its further order at any time to amend, modify, or rescind any such order or reference: Provided, That this authority shall not extend to duties otherwise specifically imposed by this or any other act of Congress. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken pursuant to any such order or reference shall have the same force and effect and may be made, evidenced, and enforced as is made by the Commission: Provided, however, That any person aggrieved by any such order, decision, or report may file a petition for review by the Commission, and every such petition shall be passed upon by the Commission. The secretary and seal of the Commission shall be the secretary and seal of such individual Commissioners or board.

"(d) Meetings of the Commission shall be held at regular intervals, not less frequently than once each calendar month, at which times the functioning of the Commission and the handling of its work load shall be reviewed and such orders shall be entered and other action taken as may be necessary or appropriate to expedite the prompt and orderly conduct of the business of the Commission with the objective of rendering a final decision (1) within 3 months from the date of filing in all original application, renewal, and transfer cases and (2) within 6 months from the final date of the hearing in all hearing cases; and the Commission shall promptly report to the Congress each such case which has been pending before it more than such 3- or 6-month period, respectively, stating the reasons therefor."

SEC. 6. Subsection (d) of section 307 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No license granted for the operation of a broadcasting station shall be for a longer term than 3 years and no license so granted for any other class of station shall be for a longer term than 5 years, and any license granted may be revoked as hereinafter provided. Upon the expiration of any license, upon application therefor, a renewal of such license may be granted from time to time for a term of not to exceed 3 years in the case of broadcasting licenses and not to exceed 5 years in the case of other licenses if the Commission finds that public interest, convenience and necessity would be served thereby."

SEC. 7. So much of subsection (a) of section 308 of such act as precedes the second proviso is amended to read as follows: "The Commission may grant instruments of authorization entitling the holders thereof to construct or operate apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio or modifications or renewals thereof, only upon written application therefor received by it: Provided, That (1) in cases of emergency found by the Commission involving danger to life or property or due to damage to equipment, or (2) during "a national emergency proclaimed by the President or declared by the Congress and during the continuance of any war in which the United States is engaged and when such action is necessary for the national defense or security or otherwise in furtherance of the war effort, the Commission may grant and issue authority to construct or operate apparatus for the transmission of energy or communications or signals by radio during the emergency so found by the Commission or during the continuance of any such national emergency or war, in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the Commission shall by regulation prescribe, and without the filing of a formal application, but no such authority shall be granted for a period beyond the period of the emergency requiring it nor remain effective beyond such period."

SEC. 8. Section 309 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"HEARINGS ON APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES; FORM OF LICENSES; CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO LICENSES

"SEC. 309. (a) If upon examination of any application provided for in section 308 the Commission shall determine that public interest, convenience, and necessity would be served by the granting thereof, it shall authorize the issuance of the instrument of authorization for which application is made in accordance with such finding.

"(b) If upon examination of any such application the Commission is unable to make the finding specified in subsection (a) of this section, it shall forthwith notify the applicant and other known parties in interest of the grounds and reasons for its inability to make such finding. Such notice, which shall precede formal designation for a hearing, shall advise the applicant and all other known parties in interest of all objections made to the application as well as the source and nature of such objections. Following such notice, the applicant shall be given an opportunity to reply. If the Commission, after considering such reply, shall be unable to make the finding specified in subsection (a) of this section, it shall formally designate the application for hearing on the grounds or reasons then obtaining and shall notify the applicant and all other known parties in interest of such action and the grounds and reasons therefor, specifying with particularity the matters and things in issue but not including issues or requirements phrased generally. The parties in interest, if any, who are not notified by the Commission of its action with respect to a particular application may acquire the status of a party to the proceeding thereon by filing a petition for intervention showing the basis for their interest at any time not less than 10 days prior to the date of hearing. Any hearing subsequently held upon such application shall be a full hearing in which the applicant and all other parties in interest shall be permitted to participate but in which both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence upon any issue specified by the Commission, as well as the burden of proof upon all such issues, shall be upon the applicant.

"(c) When any instrument of authorization is granted by the Commission without a hearing as provided in subsection (a) hereof, such grant shall remain subject to protest as hereinafter provided for a period of 30 days. During such 30-day period any party in interest may file a protest under oath directed to such grant and request a hearing on said application so granted. Any protest so filed shall contain such allegations of fact as will show the protestant to be a party in interest and shall specify with particularity the facts, matters, and things relied upon, but shall not include issues or allegations phrased generally. The Commission shall, within 15 days from the date of the filing of such protest, enter findings as to whether such protest meets the foregoing requirements and if it so finds the application involved shall be set for hearing upon the issues set forth in said protest, together with such further specific issues, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commission. In any hearing subsequently held upon such application all issues specified by the Commission shall be tried in the same manner provided in subsection (b) hereof but with respect of all issues set forth in the protest and not specifically adopted by the Commission, both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the protestant. The hearing and determination of cases arising under this subsection shall be expedited by the Commission and pending hearing and decision the effective date of the Commission's action to which protest is made shall be postponed to the effective date of the Commission's decision after hearing, unless the authorization involved is necessary to the maintenance or conduct of an existing service, in which event the Commission shall authorize the applicant to utilize the facilities or authorization in question pending the Commission's decision after hearng.

"(d) Such station licenses as the Commission may grant shall be in such general form as it may prescribe, but each license shall contain, in addition to other provisions, a statement of the following conditions to which such license shall be subject: (1) The station license shall not vest in the licensee any right to operate the station nor any right in the use of the frequencies designated in the license beyond the term thereof nor in any other manner than authorized therein; (2) neither the license nor the right granted thereunder shall be assigned or otherwise transferred in violation of this act; (3) every license issued under this act shall be subject in terms to the right of use or control conferred by section 606 hereof."

SEC. 9. Subsection (b) of section 310 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) No instrument of authorization granted by the Commission entitling the holder thereof to construct or to operate radio apparatus and no rights granted thereunder shall be transferred, assigned, or disposed of in any manner, voluntarily or involuntarily, directly or indirectly, or by transfer of control of any corporation holding such instrument of authorization, to any person except upon application to the Commission and upon finding by the Commission that the proposed transferee or assignee possesses the qualifications required of an original permittee or licensee. The procedure for handling such application shall be that provided in section 309."

SEC. 10. Section 311 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 311. The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313."

SEC. 11. Section 312 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"REVOCATION OF LICENSES; CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS

"SEC. 312. (a) Any station license may be revoked (1) because of conditions coming to the attention of the Commission since the granting of such license which would have warranted the Commission in refusing to grant such license, or (2) for violation or failure to observe any of the restrictions or provisions of a treaty ratified by the United States, or (3) for violation of or failure to observe the terms and conditions of any cease-and-desist order issued by the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) hereof. The Commission may institute a revocation proceeding by serving upon the licensee an order to show cause why its license should not be revoked. Said orders shall contain a statement of the particulars and matters with respect to which the Commission is inquiring and shall call upon the licensee to appear before the Commission at a time and place therein stated, but in no event less than 30 days after receipt of such notice, and give evidence upon the matter specified in said order: Provided, That where safety of life or property is involved, the Commission may by order provide for a shorter period of notice. If, after hearing, or a waiver thereof by the licensee, the Commission determines that a revocation order should issue, it shall make a report in writing stating the findings of the Commission and the grounds and reasons therefor and shall cause the same to be served on said licensee, together with such order.

"(b) Where any person (1) has failed to operate substantially as set forth in an instrument of authorization, or (2) has failed to observe any of the restrictions and conditions of this act or of a treaty ratified by the United States, or (3) has violated or failed to observe any rule or regulation of the Commission authorized by this act, the Commission may institute a proceeding by serving upon such person an order to show cause why it should not cease and desist from such action. Said order shall contain a statement of the particulars and matters with respect to which the Commission is inquiring and shall call upon such person to appear before the Commission at a time and place therein stated, but in no event less than 30 days after receipt of such notice, and give evidence upon the matter specified in said order. If, after hearing, or a waiver thereof by such person, the Commission determines that a cease-and-desist order should issue, it shall make a report in writing stating the findings of the Commission and the grounds and reasons therefor and shall cause the same to be served on said person, together with such order."

SEC. 12. Part I of title III of such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"MODIFICATION BY COMMISSION OF CONSTRUCTION PERMITS OR LICENSES

"SEC. 330. (a) Any station license granted under the provisions of this act or the construction permit required thereby may be modified by the Commission either for a limited time or for the duration of the term thereof, if in the judgment of the Commission such action will promote the public interest, convenience, and necessity, or the provisions of this act or of any treaty ratified by the United States will be more fully complied with: Provided, That no such order of modification shall be final until the holder of such outstanding license or permit shall have been notified in writing of the proposed action and the grounds and reasons therefor, and shall have been given reasonable opportunity, in no event less than 30 days, to show cause by public hearing, if requested, why such order of modification should not issue: Provided, That where safety of life or property is involved, the Commission may by order provide for a shorter period of notice.

"(b) In any case where a hearing is conducted pursuant to the provisions of this section or section 312, both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the Commission."

SEC. 13. Part I of title III of such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"LIMITATIONS ON QUASI-JUDICIAL POWERS

"SEC. 331. No license granted and issued under the authority of this act for the operation of any radio station shall be modified by the Commission, except in the manner provided in section 330 (a) hereof, and no such license may be revoked, terminated, or otherwise invalidated by the Commission, except in the manner and for the reasons provided in section 312 (a) hereof. When application is made for renewal of an existing license, which cannot be disposed of by the Commission under the provisions of section 309 (a) hereof, the Commission shall employ the procedure specified in section 309 (b) hereof, except that in any hearing subsequently held upon such application the burden of proceeding with the evidence and of substantiating the grounds and reasons specified by the Commission in the formal notice of hearing issued pursuant to section 309 (b) hereof shall be upon the appropriate division established by the Commission under the provisions of section 5 (b) hereof or upon any party or parties who may oppose such renewal; but as a condition precedent to the renewal the Commission shall affirmatively find that the public interest, convenience, and necessity will be served by such renewal. Pending such hearing and final decision pursuant thereto the Commission shall continue such license in effect."

SEC. 14. The heading of section 401 of such act is amended to read:

"JURISDICTION TO ENFORCE ACT AND ORDERS OF COMMISSION; DECLARATORY ORDERS" and such section is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) as follows:

"(e) The Commission is authorized, in its sound discretion and with like effect as in the case of other orders, to issue a declaratory order to terminate a controversy or remove uncertainty. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 (d) of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 239) declaratory orders shall be issued only upon the petition of, and after notice to and opportunity for hearing by, persons who are bona fide applicants for, or the holders of, construction permits or licenses, or otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and shall not bind or affect the rights of persons who are not parties to such proceedings. Such orders shall be available to declare rights and other legal relations arising under the provisions of any treaty ratified by the United States, under any provision of this act, or under any order, rule, regulation, term, condition, limitation, or requirement issued, promulgated, or adopted by the Commission, whether or not involving failure to comply therewith."

SEC. 15. Section 402 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 402. (a) The provisions of the act of June 25, 1948 (62 Stat. 992), as amended, relating to the enforcing or setting aside of orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby made applicable to suits to enforce, enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Commission under this act (except those appealable under the provisions of subsection (b) hereof), and such suits are hereby authorized to be brought as provided in that act. In addition to the venues specified in that act, suits to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend, but not to inforce, any such order of the Commission may also be brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(b) Appeals may be taken from decisions and orders of the Commission to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in any of the following cases:

"(1) By any applicant for any instrument of authorization required by this act, or the regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the construction or operation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(2) By any application for the renewal or modification of any such instrument of authorization whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(3) By any party to an application for authority to assign any such instrument of authorization or to transfer control of any corporation holding such instrument of authorization whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(4) By any applicant for the permit required by section 325 of this act whose application has been denied by the Commission or any permittee under said section whose permit has been revoked by the Commission.

"(5) By the holder of any instrument of authorization required by this act, or the regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the construction or operation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications or signals by radio, which instrument has been modified or revoked by the Commission.

"(6) By any other person who is aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by any order of the Commission granting or denying any application described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) hereof.

"(7) By any person upon whom an order to cease and desist has been served under section 312 (b) of this act.

"(8) By any party to a proceeding under section 401 who is aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by a declaratory order entered by the Commission.

"(9) By any radio operator whose license has been suspended by the Commission.

"(c) Such appeal shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the court within 30 days after the entry of the order complained of. Such notice of appeal shall contain a concise statement of the nature of the proceedings as to which the appeal is taken; a concise statement of the reasons on which the appellant intends to rely, separately stated and numbered; and proof of service of a true copy of said notice and statement upon the Commission. Upon filing of such notice, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceedings and of the questions determined therein and shall have power, by order, directed to the Commission or any other party to the appeal, to grant such temporary relief as it may deem just and proper. Orders granting temporary relief may be either affirmative or negative in their scope and application so as to permit either the maintenance of the status quo in the matter in which the appeal is taken or the restoration of a position or status terminated or adversely affected by the order appealed from and shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court, be effective pending hearing and determination of said appeal and compliance with the Commission with the final judgment of the court rendered in said appeal.

"(d) Upon the filing of any such notice of appeal the Commission shall, not later than 5 days after the date of service upon it, notify each person shown by the records of the Commission to be interested in said appeal of the filing and pendency of the same and shall thereafter permit any such person to inspect and make copies of said notice and statement of reasons therefor at the office of the Commission in the city of Washington. Within 30 days after the filing of an appeal, the Commission shall file with the court a copy of the order complained of, a full statement in writing of the facts and grounds relied upon by it in support of the order involved upon said appeal, and the originals or certified copies of all papers and evidence presented to and considered by it in entering said order.

"(e) Within 30 days after the filing of an appeal any interested person may intervene and participate in the proceedings had upon said appeal by filing with the court a notice of intention to intervene and a verified statement showing the nature of the interest of such party, together with proof of service of true copies of said notice and statement, both upon appellant and upon the Commission. Any person who would be aggrieved or whose interest would be adversely affected by a reversal or modification of the order of the Commission complained of shall be considered an interested party.

"(f) The record and briefs upon which any such appeal shall be heard and determined by the court shall contain such information and material, and shall be prepared within such time and in such manner as the court may by rule prescribe.

"(g) At the earliest convenient time the court shall hear and determine the appeal upon the record before it in the manner prescribed by section 10 (e) of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 243).

"(h) In the event that the court shall render a decision and enter an order reversing the order of the Commission, it shall remand the case to the Commission to carry out the judgment of the court and it shall be the duty of the Commission, in the absence of the proceedings to review such judgment, to forthwith give effect thereto, and unless otherwise ordered by the court, to do so upon the basis of the proceedings already had and the record upon which said appeal was heard and determined.

"(i) The court may, in its discretion, enter judgment for costs in favor of or against an appellant, or other interested parties intervening in said appeal, but not against the Commission, depending upon the nature of the issues involved upon said appeal and the outcome thereof.

"(j) The court's judgment shall be final, subject, however, to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as hereinafter provided—

"(1) an appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States in any case wherein the jurisdiction of the court is invoked, or sought to be invoked, for the purpose of reviewing any decision or order entered by the Commission in proceedings instituted by the Commission which have as their object and purpose the revocation of an existing license or any decision or order entered by the Commission in proceedings which involve the failure or refusal of the Commission to renew an existing license. Such appeal shall be taken by the filing of an application therefor or notice thereof within 30 days after the entry of the judgment sought to be reviewed, and in the event such an appeal is taken the record shall be made up and the case docketed in the Supreme Court of the United States within 60 days from the time such an appeal is allowed under such rules as may be prescribed;

"(2) in all other cases, review by the Supreme Court of the United States shall be upon a writ of certiorari on petition therefor under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended, by the appellant, by the Commission, or by any interested party intervening in the appeal, or by certification by the court pursuant to the provision of section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

SEC. 16. The heading of section 405 of such Act is amended to read:

and such section is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 405. (a) After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission in any proceeding, any party thereto, or any other person aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected thereby, may petition for rehearing. Petitions for rehearing must be filed within 30 days from the entry of any decision, order, or requirement complained of and except for those cases in which the decision, order, or requirement challenged is necessary for the maintenance or conduct of an existing service, the filing of such a petition shall automatically stay the effective date thereof until after decision on said petition. The filing of a petition for rehearing shall not be a condition precedent to judicial review of any such decision, order, or requirement, except where the party seeking such review was not a party to the proceedings resulting in such decision, order, or requirement, or where the party seeking such review relies on questions of fact or law upon which the Commission has been afforded no opportunity to pass. Rehearings shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish: Provided, That, except for newly discovered evidence or evidence otherwise available only since the original taking of evidence, no evidence shall be taken on any rehearing. The time within which an appeal must be taken under section 402 (b) hereof shall be computed from the date upon which orders are entered disposing of all petitions for rehearing filed in any case, but any decision, order, or requirement made after such rehearing reversing, changing, or modifying the original determination shall be subject to the same provisions with respect to rehearing as an original order."

SEC. 17. Section 409 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 409. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 7 (a) of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 241), all cases in which a hearing is required by the provisions of this act or by other applicable provisions of law shall be conducted by the Commission or by one or more examiners provided for in section 11 of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 244), designated by the Commission. The officer or officers presiding at any such hearing shall have the same authority and duties exercised in the same manner and subject to the same conditions specified in section 7 of that act.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 242), the officer or officers conducting a hearing shall prepare and file an intermediate report. In all such cases the Commission shall permit the filing of exceptions to such intermediate report by any party to the proceeding and shall, upon request, hear oral argument on such exceptions before the entry of any final decision, order, or requirement. All decisions, including the intermediate report, shall become a part of the record and shall include a statement of (1) findings and conclusions, as well as the basis therefor, upon all material issues of fact, law, or discretion, presented on the record; and (2) the appropriate decision, order, or requirement.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 (c) of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 239), no officer conducting a hearing pursuant to (a) and (b) hereof shall, except to the extent required for the disposition of ex parte matters as authorized by law, consult any person or party on any fact or question of law in issue, unless upon notice and opportunity for all parties to participate; nor shall such officer be responsible to or subject to the supervision or direction of any other person engaged in the performance of investigative, prosecuting, or other functions for the Commission or any other agency of the Government. No person or persons engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the Commission or for any other agency of the Government shall participate or advise in the proceedings described in (a) and (b) hereof, except as a witness or counsel in public proceedings. The Commission shall not employ attorneys or other persons for the purpose of reviewing transcripts or preparing intermediate reports of final decisions, except that this shall not apply to the review staff provided by subsection 5 (b) and to legal assistants assigned separately to a Commission member who may, for such Commission member, review such transcripts and prepare such drafts. No intermediate report shall be reviewed either before or after its publication by any person other than a member of the Commission or his legal assistant, as above provided, and no examiner, who conducts a hearing, shall advise or consult with the Commission with respect to his intermediate report or with respect to exceptions taken to his findings, rulings, or recommendations."

(b) Subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j) of section 409 are amended to read subsections (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), and (l), respectively.

SEC. 18. Section 414 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Except as specifically provided in this act the provisions of the act of June 11, 1946 (60 Stat. 237) shall apply in all proceedings under this act."

SEC. 19. Chapter 63 of the Criminal Code, title 18, is amended by inserting a new section as follows:

"FRAUD BY RADIO

"SEC. 1343. Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, shall transmit or cause to be transmitted by means of radio communication or interstate wire communication, any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, or whoever operating any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, knowingly permits the transmission of any such communication, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

SEC. 20. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. McFARLAND. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the committee on the bill, so that the legislative history and the viewpoint and intent of the committee will be clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report (No. 44) on the bill (S. 658) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 658) to further amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

GENERAL STATEMENT

The committee desires to emphasize that the bill (S. 658) here reported is identical with bills heretofore passed by the Senate unanimously on two occasions. These two bills were S. 1973, previously reported by this committee on July 21, 1949, and passed by the Senate on August 9, 1949, by unanimous consent; and H. R. 4251 which was reported July 25, 1950, and passed the Senate amended on July 26, 1950, by unanimous consent. The legislation deals solely with structure of the Commission and its administrative and appellate procedure. This entire field long has been the subject of severe criticism by special and select investigating committees of the Congress and currently is the subject of study by a subcommittee of this committee as well as by a House committee.

The provisions of this bill here recommended received the unanimous approval of every broadcasting interest who testified before this committee when open hearings were conducted on S. 1973, and at the same hearing the majority of the provisions here recommended were also favored by the Commission itself.

It should be noted that no attempt has been made in this legislation to deal with any changes in policy affecting radio or television broadcasting, nor policies affecting common carriers by radio or telegraph. Your committee is well aware that extensive testimony has been offered in the past and numerous recommendations made, including some by this committee, with respect to such policy matters. While the committee does not close the door to such policy provisions, it desires to point out that studies on these points are being further pursued; in the field of radio the subject of most pressing importance today is the functioning of the Commission.

It is important to note that this bill is the end product of more than a decade of congressional investigations, studies, hearings, and reports by committees in both Houses of Congress. This committee alone, in the past 7 years, has held more than 45 days of hearings on the general subject of changes in the Communications Act, during which 145 persons have testified and some 800 others submitted statements. Those hearings cover more than 3,700 pages of printed testimony. Moreover, a majority of the committee have been personally closely identified with extended hearings and legislative recommendations herein referred to. Because of the long history of hearings and legislative recommendations herein referred to before it, the committee was strongly of the opinion that additional open hearings were not necessary at this time. They unanimously endorse the bill here recommended as a necessary first step in any changes in the Communications Act of 1934.

The committee desires to call particular attention to the amendment to section 4 (g) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended. This proposal has been urged by the Commission as being particularly necessary now because of the current international situation. The Federal Communications Commission's radio monitoring activities are of foremost importance in periods of international tension and they have pointed out that the immediate extension of this activity is deemed essential by the defense forces. The Federal Communications Commission, on January 10, 1951, forwarded a letter to the United States Senate requesting "urgent and immediate consideration of the Senate for an amendment to section 4 (g) of the Communications Act which would authorize the Commission to expend funds in connection with its radio monitoring services." The reasons for the Commission's recommendation that section 4 (g) be amended to authorize the Commission to purchase land and to construct buildings for monitoring and research activities is that the Commission has been informed by the Bureau of the Budget that the present language affords insufficient authority for making expenditures for such activities, and that consequently any authorization for activities in the Commission's budget was, in the absence of special authorizing legislation, subject to being stricken by a point of order. Accordingly the Commission's budget for the last 3 years, including that for the fiscal year 1952, contained no authorization for improvement of the Commission's monitoring activities. The Commission contends that strategic territorial placement of monitoring stations is at a minimum. For example, the United States operates only one station in Alaska and one station in the Hawaiian Islands. The committee is convinced of the need for this authority and believes that enactment of this provision should be expedited.

The bill here recommended is, in the committee's opinion, an essential legislative step forward in bringing about improvements in the administrative functions of this vital agency and the committee believes that immediate action is necessary in order that the Federal Communications Commission can competently and adequately execute its functions under the Communications Act.

The sections of this bill were carefully analyzed in Senate Report 741, which accompanied S. 1973 and Senate Report 2119 which accompanied H. R. 4251, and the appropriate text of these reports unchanged are appended herewith.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The principal objective of the bill as amended is to clarify the meaning and intent of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended. It is designed to remove ambiguities; to make definite and certain administrative and legal steps and procedures in the interest of the expeditious handling of both license applications and the rule-making function; to separate, as far as is administratively possible, the prosecutory and judicial functions of the Commission; to provide for administrative reorganization of the Commission in the interest of more effective and speedy handling of cases; to better arm Commissioners to handle decisions by providing personal legal assistants; and generally to make clear and definite administrative actions and appellate procedures in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act.

Your committee is strongly of the opinion that enactment of the bill is a major step forward in the evolution of the regulation of radio and wire communications, both broadcast and common carrier. It believes that the legislation will be of inestimable value in making more certain that regulation of the industry shall be in "the public interest, convenience, and necessity."

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL BY SECTIONS

Section 1

This section gives a short title to this act, merely for purposes of reference to the dates of enactment of provisions herein proposed to be incorporated in the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

Section 2

This section amends subsection (o) of section 3 of the Communications Act of 1934 by redefining "broadcasting." The new definition defines "broadcasting" to mean "the dissemination of radio communications intended to be received directly by the general public." In the existing law, the term is defined to include radio communications intended to be received by the public "directly or by the intermediary of relay stations." Testimony has been offered that these so-called relay stations might be considered to be broadcast stations within the meaning of the act. The new definition clarifies this ambiguity, but the committee does not intend that such relay stations, when used in broadcasting shall be classified as common carriers under the law. The new definition also conforms with the provisions of the Radio Regulations of the International Telecommunications Convention (Atlantic City, 1947).

This section adds a number of new definitions to the Communications Act of 1934.

Subsection (bb) defines "license," "station license," or "radio station license" to mean the instrument of authorization required by the act or regulations for use or operation of radio-transmitting apparatus, and the terms are intended to include all forms of authorizations, temporary or otherwise. When considered in connection with other sections of the bill, this will limit the power of the Commission to grant special or emergency types of authorization to the cases specifically provided for in the bill.

Subsection (cc) provides a definition of "broadcast station," "broadcasting stations," or "radio-broadcast station." None of these terms is now defined, and all are used either in the present law or the amended section.

Subsection (dd) defines the terms "construction permit" and "permit for construction," which have not heretofore been defined, to clarify reference to such authorizations in procedural provisions.

Section 4

This section proposes several revisions of the existing section 4 of the act, which deals with the make-up of the Commission itself, top staff personnel, and matters to be included in the annual reports to Congress. Specifically, the provisions are as follows:

Subsection (a) makes a minor change in existing law which prohibits Commissioners from engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment by exempting from this prohibition the preparation of technical papers. Commissioners have pointed out that existing law might be interpreted to prevent such wholly meritorious publication of papers. The most important provisions of this subsection, however, would add to subsection (4) (b) the requirement that 1 year after the enactment of this act no Commissioner, if he resigns before his term of office has expired, may for 1 year thereafter represent before the Commission any person or corporation who comes within the jurisdiction of the Communications Act. This provision, the committee believes, is a most desirable one. It is intended to halt the practice by persons and corporations, who have business before the Commission, of employing Commissioners with the obvious purpose of benefiting themselves, perhaps unfairly, through the influence that such a Commissioner might have with employees in the agency. It is also intended to restrict a growing practice of using appointments to high Government posts as stepping stones to important positions in private industries which have business before the Commission. The recommended amendment would not prevent a Commissioner from resigning his post at any time, but if he resigned after 1 year following enactment of this provision and before his term of office had expired he could not for 1 year thereafter represent anyone who comes within jurisdiction of the Communications Commission.

Subsection (b) is a revision of section 4 (f) (1) of the act, a subsection which deals with the employment of certain top staff personnel and their salaries. It should be noted that the Civil Service Classification Act of 1949 made changes in the salaries originally provided by this subsection, and the committee in rewriting the language has written in the new salary schedules provided by that act last year.

Thus, it should be emphasized that while it was necessary to rewrite the section for other reasons, no changes have been made in salary schedules from those already provided by law. The important changes in the subsection made by the committee include authority for the employment of a personal legal assistant to each Commissioner at a salary not to exceed $10,000 annually, a reduction in the number of assistant general counsels, assistant chief engineers, and assistant chief accounts from three to two; and a prohibition against the general counsel, the chief engineer, the chief accountant, and their assistants from representing any licensee under the Communications Act for 1 year following termination of their employment with the Commission.

The committee believes some explanation of these and other minor changes in this subsection is pertinent. It is of the opinion that provision for the employment of a personal legal assistant to each Commissioner is one of the important features of the bill here recommended. The plain facts are that the Commission is tremendously behind in its work, one reason therefor being the necessity for each individual Commissioner to personally review each decision. Several of the Commissioners are not lawyers; even those who are find it difficult to give the time necessary to familiarize themselves with all pertinent points in a proposed decision. The result has been that all too frequently decisions coming up from the staff have not had the close personal attention they should have. When it is realized that such decisions frequently are of vital economic consequence to citizens as well as important to the public interest, it will be realized that too much attention cannot be given to such decisions. The employment of a well-trained lawyer who will be the personal legal assistant to a Commissioner will not only relieve the burden of work on each Commissioner but will permit close study of both proposed decisions and rules and should expedite materially the speed of Commission action on its backlog of cases. The committee desires to emphasize that it believes Commissioners can obtain, at the recommended salary, competent, trained, and well-experienced lawyers who know the administrative process, will adhere to orderly legal actions, and advise the non-legal-trained Commissioners in such matters.

In reducing the number of assistant counsels, assistant engineers, and assistant accountants the committee has followed the suggestions of individual Commissioners who believe that the employment of personal legal assistants will permit reduction in these posts. Moreover, the saving thus obtained will reduce the extra cost of seven legal assistants to Commissioners.

Another major feature of this subsection is the provision which would prohibit the chief engineer and his assistants, the chief accountant and his assistants, the general counsel and his assistants, and the secretary of the Commission from leaving their post with the Commission to represent a licensee until 1 year has elapsed after termination of their employment with the Commission. The committee believes that this provision is a necessary corollary to a similar provision applying to Commissioners themselves and that it will tend to curb an exceedingly unfair and occasionally improper practice. The ability to influence people in the Commission is reported to have been of great value in numerous instances; this provision should aid in building up a career service within the Commission and halt further efforts to woo key personnel from the Commission for the purpose of influencing subsequent actions by the agency. The committee also has tightened the language pertaining to the employment of temporary counsel to make clear that such temporary employees cannot become in effect permanent employees in the guise of holding temporary appointment. Such temporary counsel hereafter are to be employed for specific special service and no other.

A provision of this section of the law which permitted the appointment of a director of each division of the Commission has been eliminated; such posts have not been filled for years and there is no necessity for such positions under the organization of the Commission proposed by this legislation.

Subsection (c) of this section amends the first sentence of section 4 (g) of the law which deals with the authority of the Commission to make certain expenditures, including expenditures for purchase of land for the erection of monitoring stations. While the Commission has exercised this authority for years under specific appropriation acts annually, such provisions constituted legislation in an appropriation bill and are subject to a point of order. The Bureau of the Budget recommended that this point be clarified so that clear legislative authority to justify such appropriations would exist.

Subsection (d) amends section 4 (k) of the present act with the purpose of making more clear and definite what shall be contained in the annual report filed by the Commission with the Congress.

Briefly, the Commission is to furnish the Congress each year (1) information and data bearing on the problem of regulation of interstate and foreign wire and radio communication; (2) information on the general administrative operations of the Commission so that Congress may readily understand what it has done or failed to do; (3) information concerning new employees hired during the year, their experience, and those resigned or discharged; (4) information in detail of all sums expended by the Commission, for what purpose, and under what authority; (5) specific recommendations on necessary additional legislation.

The committee is aware that the information required by clause (4) is furnished to the Appropriations Committee of the Congress annually. But it is of the opinion that the legislative committees of the two Houses which are directly concerned with the functioning of the Commission also have a real interest in these matters. Moreover, such information will permit the legislative committees to examine under what authority expenditures were made.

Section 5 of the bill is a revision of section 5 of the law which deals with the organization of the Commission. The existing section of the law is an anachronism in that it provides for a permissive divisional organization of the Commission, which was adopted briefly shortly following enactment of the law in 1934 and then dropped. In recent weeks the Commission has again undertaken a functional reorganization similar to that herein proposed but the committee is satisfied that in the absence of specific mandatory provisions, no effective change ever will be carried out. Section 5 therefore has now been rewritten into four brief subsections which set forth the duties of the chairman; provide for a functional reorganization of the Commission; provide for necessary delegation of certain specific duties (now a part of the present law); and designate time-limit objectives to be met by the Commission in processing cases with the added provision that Congress shall be promptly informed when cases have not been acted upon within certain fixed periods.

The most important subsection, and in the committee's opinion one of the most important of the entire bill here recommended, is subsection (b) which would reorganize the Commission into a functional organization. To make clear what the effect of this subsection would be, it should be explained that the Commission has been organized into three principal Bureaus—Engineering, Accounting, and Legal. It also has, of course, other subsidiary sections and units but the bulk of its licensing work flows upward through these three Bureaus. Regardless of the type of case involved, each of these three Bureaus must independently, or occasionally in consultation, pass upon applications and other types of cases. Whether or not this system is responsible, the fact remains that the Commission's backlog of cases has continued to mount to alarming proportions. Hearing cases rarely get out in less than 2 years; some have been before the Commission as long as from 4 to 7 years.

Citizens and taxpayers are entitled to greater consideration and better service from their Government than this.

Moreover, under this system, the three Bureaus have become self-contained and independent little kingdoms, each jealously guarding its own field of operations and able to exercise almost dictatorial control over the expedition of a case. They can, and have, set at naught the best efforts of individual Commissioners to spur action.

The committee has, therefore, written into law by subsection (b) a mandatory reorganization provision but on the recommendation of the Commission has allowed wide flexibility to accommodate possible changes in the nature and volume of the Commission's work in future years. The Commission would be required within 60 days after enactment of this bill to organize its Legal, Engineering, and Accounting Bureaus into such number of integrated divisions as are deemed necessary to handle the Commission's workload problems. Under existing circumstances, these are expected to number three—broadcasting, common carrier, and special and safety service. Each of these divisions would include all necessary legal, engineering, and accounting personnel to handle the work but would operate together as a team rather than as separate professional groups. The Commission also would have authority to establish whatever additional divisions may be necessary to handle that part of its workload which may cut across the divisional organizations or which may not lend itself to handling by an integrated divisional unit.

Coupled with this divisional set-up, the committee also has provided for the establishment of a review staff, consisting of legal, engineering, and accounting personnel, whose sole function shall be to prepare and review decisions, orders, rules, and other memoranda as the Commission shall direct. The review staff shall be directly responsible to the Commission, and its personnel shall not engage in the preparation or prosecution of cases. Neither the general counsel, the chief accountant, nor the chief engineer shall have any authority over it. Its purpose is clear; it is to separate with finality the prosecutory and judicial functions of the Commission so that the same individual who prosecutes a case in behalf of the Commission before a hearing examiner shall not later be found preparing the final decision or advising Commissioners or the Commission as to the final decision. The records and facts well known to your committee and to the industry have proved beyond question that applicants have not always had the most equitable judicial treatment under the existing type of administrative judicial process. The committee believes that its proposed amendment will correct this situation.

Subsection (a) of this section sets forth the duties and responsibilities of the Chairman of the Commission, providing that he shall be the chief executive officer of the Commission and shall represent it in all matters relating to legislation and in dealings with the Congress as well as be responsible for the general organization and functioning of the Commission as a whole.

Subsection (c) is a revision of the existing subsection 5 (e) dealing with certain necessary delegation to the Commission's work to individual Commissioners, a board of Commissioners, or to employees. Such delegation is subject to the provisions of section 17 of this bill (sec. 409 of the act is revised by this bill) and to the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act as described in section 17.

Subsection (d) is a new provision specifying that the Commission must meet at regular intervals but not less than once a month for the purpose of reviewing and expediting its work. The committee has set as fair time limits, for final Commission disposition of cases, a period of 3 months for nonhearing cases and 6 months from the final date of hearing on all hearing cases. The Commission is instructed to report to Congress promptly all cases pending before it longer than these periods stating the reasons for delay. The Congress will thus be currently apprised of the progress of Commission actions.

This section amends subsection (d) of section 307 by deleting the phrase "but action of the Commission with reference to the granting of such application for the renewal of a license shall be limited to and governed by the same considerations and practice which affects the granting of original applications." Once a license has been granted, there appears to be no good reason why the Commission should be required to take into consideration many of the factors which it should and must take into consideration in granting a license in the first instance. Such matters as the character and ability of the applicant to operate a broadcast station or his financial ability to construct and maintain a station are important factors for the Commission to consider in evaluating original applications for a broadcast station; they no longer may be pertinent factors when the Commission is giving consideration to renewal of a station license. It should be emphasized that while the recommended amendment does eliminate the necessity for the type of involved and searching examination which the Commission must make in granting an original license, it does not in any way impair the Commission's right and duty to consider, in the case of a station which has been in operation and is applying for renewal, the over-all performance of that station against the broad standard of public interest, convenience, and necessity. This authority of the Commission is made explicit by specifying that such renewal grants are subject to findings by the Commission that the "public interest, convenience, or necessity would be served thereby." This section, the committee desires to emphasize, is not intended to nor shall it be interpreted as modifying in any degree the high qualifications required of a licensee; rather, the objective of the recommended changes is to expedite the administrative consideration of the renewal process and to reduce the work load and expenditure on both the licensee and the Commission.

This section amends subsection (a) of section 308 of the present act. It is designed to make more definite the procedures to be employed by the Commission in the exercise of its radio-licensing functions. This section fixes and determines the conditions under which the first step in the exercise of the licensing function is taken; it makes positive and a part of statutory law that which has heretofore been the subject of dispute and controversy. There has been confusion under the terms of existing law over the basic question of when and under what circumstances a written application must be filed as the initial step in license proceedings and when, by the device of calling a license by some other name, the Commission, and applicants with the acquiescence of the Commission, have avoided this step.

The amendment recommended herein would make the filing of a written application a necessary condition precedent in all cases except those arising out of emergencies involving danger to life or property or damage due to equipment breakdowns or when the authorization is required by emergency or security reasons during the continuance of any war in which the United States is engaged. The proposed new language does not change the substance of existing law; it merely makes certain that which has heretofore been uncertain. Moreover, the amendment is directed against the administrative practice of issuing special service authorizations, which have been held not to be licenses, and therefore persons affected by their issuance were precluded from relying upon them or challenging their propriety.

This section amends section 309 of the present act, which deals with the procedural steps involved in obtaining a license. It is the purpose of this section, as a necessary corollary of the preceding section, to make definite and certain the procedural rights and remedies of those who oppose, as well as those who apply for, a new instrument of authorization. The necessity for definite provisions of this character has been clearly demonstrated by experience.

Specifically, the amendment here proposed will make it possible, as at present, for the Commission to grant any application without hearing if convinced from ex parte examination that the statutory standard will be served thereby. It will, however, provide a method whereby any person, who has the right to challenge the legality or propriety of such a grant by appeal from the Commission's decision, can make his complaint first before the Commission—a guaranty which the present law does not contain. Provisions also are included which are designed to guarantee that any hearings held before the Commission upon any application will be conducted upon the basis of issues clearly defined so that the Commission will act as an arbiter.

Subsection (a) is merely a restatement of the present subsection (a) making clear that the standard of judgment which applies in issuing an authorization is in the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

Subsection (b) sets forth in specific terms what the Commission shall do with respect to notification of the applicant and known parties in interest, both prior to and after setting an application for hearing; the specification of issues; opportunity for an applicant to reply; who may participate, under what circumstances and how.

Subsection (c) provides for what is commonly known as the protest rule. This provision merely insures that if the Commission grants a license or other type of authorization without a hearing, the grant will remain subject to protest under oath for a 30-day period by any party in interest. Thereafter, the Commission is required within 15 days to make a finding as to whether the protest meets the requirements of the section and if it so finds the matter shall be set for hearing under conditions specifically set forth to insure fullest judicial protection to citizens involved in such proceedings. Some question has been raised in earlier hearings on proposed Communications Act amendment bills with respect to the meaning of the term "parties in interest" as used in this subsection and in other sections of the bill. Fear has been expressed that use of "parties in interest" might make possible intervention into proceedings by a host of parties who have no legitimate interest but solely with the purpose of delaying license grants which properly should be made. The committee does not so construe the term "party in interest"; "parties in interest" because of electrical interference are fixed and defined by the Supreme Court decision in the KOA case (319 U. S. 239) and the Commission's rules and regulations; "parties in interest" from an economic standpoint are defined by the Supreme Court decision in the Sanders case (309 U. S. 470).

Subsection (d) is the present subsection (b) of section 309 of the act unchanged and merely sets forth the form of the license and the conditions attached to its grant.

This section amends subsection (b) of section 310 of the act which deals with the transfer of licenses granted by the Commission. The existing provisions are indefinite in nature with respect to the procedure to be employed by the Commission in considering such transfers and this has led, in some instances, to differences in the treatment of applications for transfer of facilities. The recommended new language is designed to make certain that no construction permit or station license granted by the Commission may be transferred without the Commission's approval; to make definite the procedure to be employed by the Commission in passing upon transfer applications; and to clarify the standard to be applied by the Commission in passing upon the merits of such applications.

One of the purposes of the proposed new language in this subsection is to annul the so-called AVCO procedure adopted several years ago by the Commission to prevent a licensee from selling his property to a proper person of his choice but requiring an opportunity for others to make bids for any radio station proposed to be sold. The committee believes that there is no provision of present law which authorizes the Commission to employ such a procedure and it deems such a procedure an unwise invasion by a Government agency into private business practice.

The committee regards it as significant that the Commission dropped the so-called AVCO procedure several months ago as unsatisfactory and a cause of undue delay in passing upon transfers of licenses. It should be emphasized that the Commission's authority to see to it that stations are operated in the public interest and to determine whether the proposed transferee possesses the qualifications of an original licensee or permittee is not impaired or affected in any degree by this subsection. In fact, the latter requirement is expressly stated. The committee also desires to emphasize that the language recommended in this subsection specifically refers to construction permits as well as licenses. It is of the opinion that this lack of reference to construction permits in the present law may have led to some of the abuses which have taken place under the transfer provisions.

This section amends section 311 of the present act which relates to the application of the antitrust laws of the United States. The existing law contains two sections (secs. 311 and 313) which deal with this subject. Section 313 of the present law makes clear that all licensees under the Communications Act come within the provisions of the antitrust laws and that if any licensee is found guilty of a violation of antitrust laws the court may, as an additional penalty, also revoke the license of the person or group found guilty. Section 311 of the present law specifically directs the Commission to revoke any license which the court has ordered to be revoked under the authority of section 313 and authorizes the Commission to revoke the license of a person found guilty of antitrust violation if the court itself has not ordered such revocation.

Licensees have consistently contended during various hearings before this committee that these two sections considered together as now written constitute an unfair discrimination against radio licensees and that such a double penalty is not imposed upon other classes of business by any other statute.

The committee is impressed with the legal validity of the protests which have been made against this type of double jeopardy. It believes there is merit in the contention that citizens should not be subject to trial for the same allegations before two different tribunals. Moreover, such an argument is particularly pertinent in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust statutes which are the particular province of the Department of Justice, and do not, by any other law, come within the jurisdiction of any independent quasi-judicial agency of government.

The committee has made no change in section 313. That section, which makes all licenses amenable to the antitrust statutes and specifically grants the court authority, if a licensee is found guilty of an antitrust violation, to order revocation of his license in addition to all other penalties which may be imposed under authority of the antitrust laws, stands unchanged and unimpaired. It has, however, modified section 311, which gave to the Federal Communications Commission additional authority to institute license revocation proceedings in those cases where a licensee has been found guilty in court of an antitrust violation but where the court did not order revocation of the license issued by the Commission. The modification proposed merely prohibits the Commission from instituting its own antitrust proceeding. It retains the specific authority to refuse a license or permit in those cases in which a court under section 313 has ordered revocation of the license or permit.

The committee desires to emphasize that the Commission's existing authority under law to examine into the character of a licensee or permittee in granting a license or a renewal is in no way impaired or modified by the change here recommended in section 311. The Commission's authority to determine whether or not the public interest, convenience, or necessity will be served by the granting of a license remains paramount and if it finds that the conviction of a licensee under the antitrust laws or under section 313 has materially affected the character of standing of such licensee so as to warrant refusal of a renewal, or grant of license, it may so proceed. Thus, the Commission's power to protect against monopoly control of radio licenses remains unaffected by the changes herein recommended; it is merely estopped from initiating and proceeding with an antitrust case of its own.

This section amends section 312 of the present act which deals with revocation of licenses. Under existing law a station license may be revoked for false statements either in the application, or in the statement of fact which may be required from time to time, which would warrant the Commission in refusing to grant a license on an original application; or for failure to observe any of the restrictions or conditions of the act or of regulations of the Commission authorized by the act or a treaty ratified by the United States. It is clear, therefore, that revocation is the sole administrative penalty in the case of violations ranging from the most serious to the least minor and affecting those who may innocently violate regulations of the Commission on technical matters.

The committee feels that this is not a satisfactory situation for two reasons: The Commission is reluctant to revoke a license for a minor offense and therefore minor offenses may be committed almost with impunity, and there exists no clear distinction between types of offenses. It is felt that some method of procedure short of revocation should be provided for minor or less serious violations. It is, therefore, provided that the Commission may issue cease-and-desist orders for such less serious violations.

The revocation penalty would remain in effect only (1) for those situations in which the Commission learns of facts or conditions after the granting of a permit or license which would have warranted it in refusing the grant originally had it known those facts; (2) for violation or failure to observe provisions of a treaty ratified by the United States; and (3) for violation or failure to observe the conditions of any cease-and-desist order issued in accordance with the provisions of this section. As in the case of cease-and-desist orders, the Commission must first issue an order to show cause why a license should not be revoked.

The cease-and-desist action would apply to those cases where a licensee has (1) failed to operate substantially as set forth in his license; (2) failed to observe the restrictions of this act or of a treaty ratified by the United States; and (3) violated or failed to observe any rule or regulation of the Commission authorized by this act.

It will be seen that violation of conditions or restrictions of a treaty may be proceeded against initially either by a revocation proceeding or the less onerous cease-and-desist proceeding, thus allowing Commission discretion as to the seriousness of the alleged offense. Moreover, the recommended language clothes the Commission with power to prevent persistent minor violations by making violation of a cease-and-desist order cause for a revocation action.

The cease-and-desist procedure is a time-tried and wholly successful one in many administrative agencies and the committee believes that its adoption by the Federal Communications Commission will be salutary. The language here recommended has had the approval of all witnesses who testified on the bill.

Revocation and cease-and-desist proceedings are, of course, subject to proper hearing procedures and are appealable to the courts. The burden of proof in all such proceedings is upon the Commission.

This section provides for a new section (sec. 330) but its provisions are virtually identical with the present section 312 (b) of the law. In the interest of clarity and consistent order, the revocation and cease-and-desist provision has been assigned the number 312 and the provisions of the old section 312 (b) have been transferred to a new number.

The recommended language provides that modifications of licenses may be made where it will promote the public interest or where the provisions of the act or any treaty will be more fully complied with. This provision is identical with existing section 312 (b) except for language spelling out that a licensee whose license the Commission proposes to modify may on request secure a public hearing on at least 30 days' notice. This period of time may be shortened, however, where safety of life or property is involved. The section also provides that the burden of proof in all revocation, modification, and cease-and-desist proceedings is on the Commission.

This section, entitled "Limitations on Quasi-Judicial Powers," adds a new section (sec. 331) to the present act dealing with miscellaneous provisions relating to the procedures to be followed in modification, revocation, and renewal proceedings. It has been endorsed by all witnesses and has the general approval of Commissioners.

The intent of this section is to spell out in definite detail the authority of the Commission with respect to modification of licenses, and termination or revocation of licenses, and to provide a guide for the Commission in dealing with renewals of licenses.

The language makes clear that modification can be undertaken only in accordance with the provisions prescribed by section 330 (a) of the law (sec. 12 of this bill) and that revocation or termination of a license can be undertaken only for the reasons and in the manner provided by section 312 of the law (sec. 11 of this bill). It makes clear that Commission consideration of a renewal of license is also premised on the public interest, convenience, and necessity but the intent of the committee here is to separate more definitely and clearly the prosecutory functions and duties of the administrative staff of the Commission from the quasi-judicial functions of the Commission membership itself.

This section amends section 401 of the present act by adding a new subsection (e) dealing with declaratory orders. The declaratory order method of procedure has received the direct approval of Congress in the enactment of the Administrative Procedure Act, which provides for issuance of such orders by administrative and independent agencies. The committee believes this type of procedure is an extremely beneficial one, both for the Government and for those having business before a Government agency.

The first sentence of the recommended section is substantially the language of the Administrative Procedure Act. However, the committee is of the opinion that because of the problems with which the Communications Commission deals it is necessary to provide additional safeguards in the issuance of declaratory orders by the Commission. The Commission should not be in the position of entering fiats to the industry under the guise of unsolicited declaratory orders. Moreover, such orders should be binding only on those who are parties to the proceeding.

This section provides that the Commission may issue declaratory orders in cases of actual controversy or in order to remove uncertainty. Such orders would be issued only upon petition and after notice and opportunity for hearing and such orders would, of course, be subject to judicial review.

One of the frequent criticisms of governmental procedure, particularly that of the quasi-judicial agencies, is that in order to test the legality, or even the meaning, of a rule or regulation, it is necessary to violate it and incur the penalties that go with such violation. Such a condition results in a particularly difficult situation in the case of radio broadcasting, involving as it does highly technical and specialized rules applicable to engineering and other technical equipment and operations most complicated in character. The proposed new section would make it unnecessary to incur the risk of violating the law in order to secure an authoritative ruling.

This section amends section 402 of the present act, which deals with the subject of judicial review of the Commission's decisions and orders. The subject of appeals from quasi-judicial agencies to the courts and the legal remedies under such appeals are most important. Since the changes in existing law which are to be effected by the enactment of these subsections are several and substantial, detailed consideration is presented in this report.

Subsection (a) deals only with judicial review of Commission orders by specifically constituted three-judge courts. It substantially restates existing law with necessary clarification, and a provision is inserted which would give parties plaintiff, other than the Government, an option of venue for such suits, either in the appropriate United States district court or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Subsections (b) through (j) deal with the subject of judicial review of decisions and orders of the Commission which are entered in the exercise of its radio-licensing functions.

Subsection (b) attempts a more precise and comprehensive definition of the jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in cases appealed from the Commission. The language of this subsection, when considered in relation to that of subsection (a), also would make clear that judicial review of all cases involving the exercise of the Commission's radio-licensing power is limited to that court. Under present law, confusion and controversy have arisen concerning what decisions and orders of the Commission might become the subject to judicial review and in what court. This has been carried to the point where the time and effort of both litigants and courts have been too much taken up with jurisdictional problems rather than with the merits of particular cases. Enactment of this subsection is designed to obviate this difficulty.

Subsection (c) deals with the time for and the manner of taking an appeal from the Commission to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and the duty of the Commission with respect to the filing and certification of the record in the event that such an appeal is taken. The appellate period is made 30 rather than 20 days as at present, and provision is made that the appellate period will run from the date of the entry of the order appealed from rather than from its effective date.

This subsection also definitely fixes and prescribes the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the appellate court after a notice of appeal has been filed. It confers upon that court, by specific language rather than by inference, authority to grant temporary relief, which may be either affirmative or negative in its scope and application. The necessity for language of this sort in the statute itself can hardly be exaggerated in view of the controversy and confusion which have arisen concerning this subject. The language here is believed to be stronger and therefore preferable to that found in section 10 (d) of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Subsection (d) would continue in effect, substantially, the provisions of section 402 (c) of existing law. It does, however, attempt to settle certain ambiguities. The Commission would be compelled to file with the court both the record and its written decision within a period of 30 days after the filing of an appeal. Present provisions of law are susceptible of an interpretation which would require the filing of the Commission's decision 30 days after the filing of the record.

Subsection (e) is a redraft of section 402 (d) of existing law, with minor clarifying amendments.

Subsection (f) specifically confers upon the appellate court the right to fix by rule the material to be included in any record upon which an appeal is to be heard and determined. While this is now the practice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, questions have arisen concerning that court's power to take such action due to the peculiar language of the statute. This is a matter which obviously should be clarified.

Subsection (g) merely adopts the language of section 10 (e) of the Administrative Procedure Act as the procedure to be followed in the hearing and determination of the appeal.

Subsection (h) contains provisions which are intended to confer upon the appellate court a measure of control commensurate with the dignity and responsibility of that tribunal, requiring the Commission to give effect to the judgment of the court in the absence of proceedings to review. The committee points out that under the language of this subsection the appellate court would have ample authority either on its own motion or upon the petition of the Commission or any other litigant, to provide, either as a part of its original decree or supplementary thereto, that new parties and new issues may be introduced and a new record made after remand to the Commission. This authority stems from the phrase "and unless otherwise ordered by the court."

Subsection (i) carries forward without change provisions of section 402 (f) of existing law relating to the assessment of costs on appeal.

Subsection (j) contains important amendments to existing law. Under present law, review by the Supreme Court of decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is limited to certiorari proceedings and to certification by the court of appeals. This subsection provides that, in a limited class of cases, appeals may be taken directly and as a matter of right to the United States Supreme Court.

Experience to date has clearly demonstrated that it is extremely difficult for private litigants to secure an ultimate Supreme Court review of Commission action by the certiorari method. Since 1927, only one such petition has been granted upon request of a private litigant, whereas only one such petition has been denied when filed by the Government. The result has been that many cases involving Commission action on applications for renewal and modification of licenses have, during this period, been reviewed by the Supreme Court upon request of the Government, and only one has received such consideration upon petition of a private litigant. Since either revocation or renewal proceedings may result in absolute or final loss of license, the committee believes that adequate opportunity should be given the parties affected in such cases to litigate their claims; and that, in this limited class of cases, opportunity should extend to and include review by the highest judicial tribunal. Such appeals, as a matter of right, are given in practically all cases involving decisions and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission and are given under section 402 (a) of the Communications Act in cases such as the network cases (National Broadcasting Company, Inc., et al. v. U. S. et al. (319 U. S. 190)) which involve the exercise by the Commission of its legislative, as distinguished from its judicial powers.

The committee sees no basis in substance for the distinction made so long as the result reached is determinative and final in either case and goes to the right of a litigant to remain in the business of his choice. The inclusion of such a provision should impose no undue hardship upon the Supreme Court because of the limited number of such cases. On the contrary, it would make possible the development of an authoritative body of law upon a subject vital to those engaged in the communications business and of substantial importance to the public generally.

This section amends section 405 of existing law which deals with rehearing procedure before the Commission. Since the rehearing step is the final stage in the administrative process, the committee is of the opinion that clarity and definiteness are of paramount importance here. The new language recommended in this bill is intended to make more definite and certain the rights and remedies of the parties concerned.

Any party affected by a decision, order, or requirement of the Commission, or any other person aggrieved or adversely affected by it, is granted the right to petition for a rehearing. In order to expedite the rehearing process and prevent it from being used as a delaying action, the recommended new language specifies that, except for newly discovered evidence or evidence otherwise available only since the original taking of evidence, no evidence shall be taken on a rehearing. This is also intended to make such rehearing procedures conform to court practice, on appeal, in view of the fact that a rehearing conforms in many respects to an appeal to a higher court, where only the evidence already introduced is considered.

The recommended section also would eliminate uncertainties in existing appellate practices by providing that the time for appeal under section 402 (b) (sec. 15 of this bill) will run from the date upon which the Commission enters its order disposing of all petitions for rehearing filed in any case.

This section amends section 409 of the present act, which deals with the hearing procedure before the Commission. The proposed new language replaces the present subsection (a) with three new subsections. These are designed to make definite and certain the procedure to be employed by the Commission in all cases where a public hearing is required by the provisions of the Communications Act or other applicable provisions of law.

The subject here dealt with is that of judicial or quasi-judicial hearings held by the Commission and is one of the most important of any dealt with in the entire bill. The changes recommended in this bill are prompted by what is believed to be an abundance of caution and a desire to prevent conflicts or misunderstandings due to the presence on the statute books of other provisions relating to the same subject. Since section 12 of the Administrative Procedures Act provides that subsequent legislation shall not supersede or modify the provisions of that act, unless specifically stated, it has been necessary to make specific references to that act where the subject matter requires a different treatment. The section consists of three subsections, which will be dealt with in order.

Subsection (a) will, in effect, require all hearings of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature conducted by the Commission to be held either by the whole Commission or by one or more examiners appointed by the Commission. It will not permit the conduct of a hearing by a single Commissioner, as is now sometimes done. This is important because it is impossible for the Commission to review the preliminary or intermediate report of one of its members with the same degree of objectivity or fairness with which it reviews the report of an examiner. Since section 7 (a) of the Administrative Procedure Act is so phrased as to permit a continuance of present practices, specific references to it were regarded as necessary in order to effect a change.

Subsection (b) relates to the procedure which shall be followed by the officers conducting a hearing and what shall be included in the record. Here again certain provisions of section 8 of the Administrative Procedures Act seem to be ineffective or inappropriate, and specific reference to section 8 of that act was required.

Subsection (c) has further reference to the conduct of hearing officers and certain other employees both during the hearing and subsequent thereto, but before final decision. While provisions of this type are not found in the Administrative Procedure Act, the committee believes that the clearest and most detailed separation of the prosecutory and judicial functions must be maintained in the interests of equity and fair treatment to those having business before the Commission. An exemption has been made with respect to the review work that may be carried on by the review unit provided for in this bill (sec. 5 (b) of the act and this bill) and by the Commissioners' personal legal assistants. But the committee insists that citizens shall be safeguarded in the administrative process so that unfair and improper influence shall not be brought to bear in their cases without their knowledge and without an opportunity for them to rebut in accordance with American juridical standards.

In providing for the establishment of a special review unit, the committee does not intend it to act as a panel designed to screen or modify examiners' proposed decisions before they reach the Commission. On the contrary, the principal function of the review unit is to digest and analyze proposed decisions—or rules and regulations—for the Commission to save individual Commissioners' time and expedite their handling of cases and the rule-making procedure. Such review board does not have and is not intended to have any authority to revise, modify, amend, or alter any proposed decision by an examiner nor to recommend to the Commission changes in such decisions. It is expected to act as a clearinghouse to make certain that both law and fact have been correctly applied and to digest, analyze, and note the scope and purport of the proposed decision.

Apart from the authority expressly granted the review board, and the duties laid upon the Commissioners' personal legal assistants, every safeguard is written into this section to prevent examiners, lawyers, or other employees from advising or consulting with the Commission with respect to its action.

These three subsections are amendatory. In the interests of clarity, these additional subsections are retained in the act, and renumbered so that the present subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j), will become subsections (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), and (l), respectively.

Section 18

This section amends section 414 of the present act, which provides that nothing in the Communications Act shall abridge or alter the remedies existing at common law or by statute. The recommended new language to be added is: "except as specifically provided in this act, the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act shall apply in all proceedings under this act."

The purpose and intent of the amendment is to make clear that all of the pertinent provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act are applicable in all procedural and appellate matters involving cases and controversies before the Communications Commission, except where specific procedural and appellate provisions are set forth in this bill. It will be noted that section 409 (a), (b), and (c) (sec. 17 of this bill) specifically refer to the Administrative Procedure Act and specify that, notwithstanding provisions of that act, the procedures set forth in those subsections are to be employed. The committee is well aware of the salutary provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act and has no desire to vitiate or impair the rights granted under the provisions of that act to private citizens doing business with a Government agency. It believes, however, that circumstances and conditions involved in procedures before the Communications Commission, particularly radio-broadcast cases, which differ from common-carrier principles, are such that special recognition must be given to the problem. The Administrative Procedure Act, which is a general statute covering procedure in all administrative agencies, does not meet all of these conditions and circumstances.

This section is a new provision of law which adds a new section to chapter 63 of the Criminal Code dealing with fraud by radio. This provision has been recommended by the Federal Communications Commission on several occasions, and the committee has heard of no opposition to it from any source.

It is intended merely to establish for radio a parallel provision now in the law for fraud by mail, so that fraud conducted or intended to be conducted by radio shall be amenable to the same penalties now provided for fraud by means of the mails. The Commission has pointed out that the loophole now in the law leaves not only citizens at the mercy of some clever schemer but actually places an innocent licensee at a serious disadvantage, since the only recourse the Commission has under existing law is to revoke a license. Of course, should a licensee be found to be involved in such a fraud, the Commission's power to revoke his license is not affected by this new section. It does, however, provide a means to reach a nonlicensee who may make use of the radio to defraud.

This section is the usual separability provision to make certain that if any provision of the bill is found invalid it will not invalidate the remainder of the provisions of the bill and their applicability to persons or circumstances affected by the act.

JOSEPH P. ADAMS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CASE in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for approximately 30 seconds?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Washington. I understand he has an appointment at Uline Arena.

Mr. CAIN. That is precisely where I intend to go, at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LANGER. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Joseph P. Adams, of Washington, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board for the term expiring December 31, 1956, was confirmed by the Senate in executive session this morning. When the appointment of Mr. Adams was before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I responded to the chairman's request to express my views on the appointment by addressing a letter to the chairman under date of January 21, 1951.

For the reason that a number of my political associates and some lay persons will be interested in my position, and to make it clear that I wish Mr. Adams well in his responsibilities and difficult undertakings, I ask unanimous consent that the letter in question be made a part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 31, 1951.

Hon. EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: In response to your request I am writing to offer my view concerning the nomination of Joseph P. Adams of Washington to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board for the term expiring December 31, 1956.

I am but very casually acquainted with Mr. Adams. I know him in a general way to be a prominent Democrat in Washington State, who has unsuccessfully sought public office on several occasions. I know Mr. Adams more particularly for his interest and activity in aviation matters over a period of many years. I also am aware that Mr. Adams has been the Washington State department commandant of the Marine Corps League and president of the Marine Corps Reserve Officers Association. I do not know Mr. Adams as a personal friend or close associate for I do not recall having seen or met him on more than a dozen occasions.

I am now and only concerned with Mr. Adams because of his appointment to an important national office. If I knew of any single reason why Mr. Adams was not qualified for or not likely to succeed in the work to which he has been appointed I would strenuously oppose his confirmation. On the basis of what I do know about Mr. Adams' work in the field of aviation, and from what I have been told about the excellence of that work, I have reason to believe that Mr. Adams will be highly competent in his assignment and reflect credit on the State of Washington and the Pacific Northwest.

A Republican friend of mine, Mr. H. G. Jones, of the air express division of the Railway Express Agency has recently written to me from Wenatchee to say:

"I have been active in State aviation circles in the State of Washington for over 20 years and regardless of his politics Joe Adams did more for the State of Washington in aviation in his years as director of aviation than we have ever had."

Another Republican friend, Mr. Clay Nixon of the firm of Nixon & Hove in Seattle, has written to say this about Mr. Adams:

"I have known Joe, know all about his family, know him to be a man of outstanding integrity and abilities and as evidenced by the fact that he is one of the senior colonels of the Marine Air Reserve despite the fact that he is a reservist, indicates the loyalty he has had to his country over these years. It was certainly a deserved appointment when he was made head of the State aeronautics division here in Washington, and as you probably know he did an outstanding job. Any connection with Wallgren certainly should not be held against him on that score."

I have received critical letters about the appointment of Mr. Adams. All of these criticisms have been directed at Mr. Adams' political activities and at his several failures to be elected to public office. I have advised such persons who wrote in this vein that the appointment belonged to the Democrats and that the appointment could only be opposed for cause but not on the grounds of prejudice or emotion. I have pointed out that Mr. Adams' aviation background entitles him to consideration and support.

I wish to submit a comment from Mr. A. Elliott Merrill, chairman of the Washington State Aeronautics Commission, for it bears directly on the abilities and knowledge of the nominee. In part Mr. Merrill had this to say:

"Joseph Adams was our first director of aeronautics for the State of Washington, serving from late in 1946 until November 1949. During this period I had the opportunity as chairman of the commission to become well acquainted with his ability to handle and administer the work of such an office. Without going into details I can stanchly vouch that our office was well organized and the work program that was carried out was exceptionally well done with a minimum of funds available.

"The State of Washington now has a very fine reputation in the National Association of State Aviation Officials, as well as with our own organizations such as the Washington State Flying Farmers and the Washington State Aviation Operators Association.

"I personally consider this appointment an opportunity that the Pacific Northwest should unite on and wish by this means to let you know my own views on the matter."

This letter ought to be concluded with an attached editorial headed "Adams for Adams" which appeared in the Washington Post of January 29. This editorial judges Mr. Joe Adams' background and knowledge to be promising while it reflects on the causes which led to the dismissal of Mr. Joe Adams' predecessor. I trust that the committee will permit this editorial to be made a part of the committee record.

In being a Republican I would have preferred that a qualified Republican had been named for the pending appointment. That feeling is, however, quite beside the point at issue. My colleague and the administration have named an individual who appears to possess the qualifications required by a very demanding assignment. I am pleased to say that if Mr. Adams is confirmed, that I shall wish him well and cooperate with his office in every way for the good of my State and our Nation.

With warm personal regards, I am,

Most cordially,

HARRY P. CAIN.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from North Dakota.

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO THE MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTION OF GOODS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on January 8, I introduced Senate bill 141, which is a bill designed "to clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to the manufacture and distribution of goods; to strengthen small business in its economic struggle for survival; to promote competition by prohibiting a manufacturer from engaging in the retail field and by prohibiting a retailer from engaging in manufacturing; and for other purposes." That bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Two years ago I introduced a similar measure, then known as Senate bill 1709, which also was referred to the same committee. I later offered the substance of my bill, Senate bill 1709, as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 640, which had been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A similar situation again confronts us. On January 23 last a bill was introduced as Senate bill 629, to provide for the distribution of motor vehicle tires and for other purposes. I now offer as an amendment to Senate bill 629, in the nature of a substitute, the substance of Senate bill 141, which is now before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I ask that my amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 629 be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, if and when hearings are held on Senate bill 629 by the Committee on the Judiciary, I feel that the entire subject should be examined. I see no reason why the manufacturer of motor vehicle tires is in any different position, when it comes to selling tires through the manufacturer's own retail outlets, from that of manufacturers in other fields. That is why I feel that we should clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to the manufacture and distribution of goods, and that is the subject which is covered by my amendment.

Mr. President, I pointed out to the Senate on May 10, 1949, how the reasoning of Judge Minton, a distinguished former member of this body, had been set forth in the seventh circuit court case of United States against the New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., and others. I have had occasion in the past few days to demonstrate on the floor of the Senate that the A. & P. is the biggest egg handler in the country, and how its egg-buying operations usually set the pace. I said then, and I now repeat, that it is ridiculous for the farmers to receive only 21 or 22 cents a dozen for eggs when the consumer is obliged to pay anywhere from 70 cents to a dollar a dozen for eggs. I quoted then an article describing how the A. & P. orders its traders to buy up all the eggs in sight, and continues the feverish buying until A. & P. gives the signal to stop, and then buying ceases and the prices drop.

Such things go on, Mr. President, as to eggs, as to meat, as to milk, and as to other produce from our farms. The economic struggle for survival affects all walks of life. It affects manufacturers and farmers. It affects wholesalers and consumers. Obviously, Congress has to legislate for the greatest good of the greatest number, and, as a result, Congress long ago took its place on the side of the people and against monopoly. We passed the Sherman Antitrust Act. We added to it through the Clayton Act. Through the Robinson-Patman Act we legislated further in our efforts to lay down proper rules for competition.

While Judge Minton was on the seventh circuit court, where he wrote his famous opinion in the A. & P. case, he also wrote the opinion in Standard Oil Company v. the Federal Trade Commission (173 F. 2d 210). The Federal Trade Commission in that case had found that the Standard Oil Co. was selling gasoline to four comparatively large jobber customers in Detroit at a lesser price per gallon than the price at which it sold similar gasoline to many comparatively small service-station customers in the same area. The Commission ordered the company to cease and desist from that price differential, and the court of appeals required its enforcement.

What happened after that case was won, Mr. President? The Standard Oil Co. brought the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was argued during the October term of 1949. The issue was not then settled, and the case was reargued before the Supreme Court during this term.

On January 8, 1951, the Supreme Court reversed the court of appeals, but Mr. Justice Minton could take no part in the consideration of the case, for he had written the opinion of the court below. Justice Reed, Justice Black, and Chief Justice Vinson dissented.

Mr. Justice Reed said that the action taken by the majority "would permit a seller of nationally distributed goods to discriminate in favor of large chain retailers, for the seller could give to the large retailer a price lower than that charged to small retailers, and could then completely justify its discrimination by showing that the large retailer had first obtained the same low price from a local low-cost producer of competitive goods. This is the very type of competition that Congress sought to remedy."

Accordingly, I think that if we are to go into these subjects at all, we ought to examine the situation right across the board. Therefore, I offer my amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 629.

Mr. President, for a quick summary of the Supreme Court's opinion in the Standard Oil case I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an article from the Washington Post of January 9, 1951, entitled "Double Pricing Wins Supreme Court Test."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DOUBLE PRICING WINS SUPREME COURT TEST

(By Murray Marder)

A business firm can sell its goods at a lower price to one customer than it does to another if it is acting in good faith to meet competition.

This issue of long standing was resolved yesterday by the Supreme Court in a 5-to-3 decision. The Court's majority said "good faith" was the test to determine whether such double-pricing methods are illegal.

The decision was the only written opinion delivered by the Court yesterday, and the second in 2 weeks on a major question of price competition. Last week the Court held that it is just as illegal for manufacturers to try to set price ceilings on their products as to establish minimum resale prices.

STANDARD OIL INVOLVED

The "good faith" test for competition came in a case in which the Federal Trade Commission challenged the right of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana to sell gasoline to four large jobbers in the Detroit area at 1½ cents a gallon less than it charged retail service stations.

The jobbers at some time have also resold some of their gasoline at retail levels.

FTC ruled in August 1946, that Standard must discontinue its double-pricing method. It was insufficient to argue, FTC said, that Standard's actions were taken in "good faith" to meet an equally low price offered by competitors.

Even if they were, said the FTC, their effect, nevertheless, was to "injure, destroy, and prevent competition with the retail stations," as interpreted under the Robinson-Patman Anti-Price Discrimination Act of 1936.

FTC was upheld by the seventh circuit court of appeals, in April 1949, in an opinion written by the present Justice Minton of the Supreme Court. He did not participate in yesterday's decision.

OPINION BY BURTON

Justice Burton, delivering the majority opinion for the high Court, said the Robinson-Patman Act did somewhat after the issue involved as stated in the Clayton Act of 1914, but:

None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense. That still consists of the provision that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor threatens to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price.

"The heart of our national economic policy," Justice Burton said, "long has been faith in the value of competition. In the Sherman and Clayton Acts, as well as in the Robinson-Patman Act, 'Congress was dealing with competition, which it sought to protect, and monopoly, which it sought to prevent'."

FTC was ordered to comply with the opinion and it will determine whether the record showed good faith on the part of Standard Oil.

Justice Reed wrote the dissent, and was joined by Chief Justice Vinson and Justice Black.

"The court's interpretation" of the Robinson-Patman Act, Justice Reed said, "leaves what the seller can do almost as wide open as before."

DISCRIMINATION OPENING SEEN

Action of this kind, he said, "would permit a seller of nationally distributed goods to discriminate in favor of large chain retailers, for the seller could give to the large retailer a price lower than that charged to small retailers, and could then completely justify its discrimination by showing that the large retailer had first obtained the same low price from a local low-cost producer of competitive goods.

"This is the very type of competition that Congress sought to remedy," Justice Reed declared.

Congress sought to resolve the same issue last year in a section of the basing-point bill that President Truman vetoed in June. The good faith determination was in that bill, while the major part of that legislation would have permitted firms to absorb freight charges and quote uniform delivered prices for goods regardless of the distance they were shipped.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I send to the desk the amendment which I offer. I wish to say once more that so long as I am a Senator I intend to vote for the small-business man, who, in my opinion, has been harmed by the decision to which I have referred.

SUGGESTED INCREASE OF EXEMPTION ON PERSONAL INCOME

Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which was passed by the Grand Forks Trades and Labor Assembly at their last regular meeting on January 10, 1951, which was sent to me by Dan Olsen, secretary and treasurer of the assembly, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in full at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the United States Government in meeting the war crisis will need to continue to impose heavy taxes; and

Whereas the ability-to-pay principle should be the measuring rod in the imposition of income taxes; and

Whereas 2½ percent of the total Federal revenue in the 1939–40 fiscal year came from individuals with incomes of less than $5,000 a year, and increased to 25 percent by 1950, while the percentage of revenue from corporations during the same period increased only from 26 to 30 percent; and

Whereas despite an average 80.7 percent increase in wages for union wage earners from 1939 to 1950, while living costs were rising 74.8 percent and Federal income taxes for those earning less than $5,000 a year, increased to an average point of 10 percent of their gross income, the wage earner in 1950 finds himself with less real wages than in 1939; and

Whereas the Nation is more prosperous than at any time in history, the typical or average wage earner in 1950 with the dollar worth 57 cents of the 1939 dollar, has not only failed to advance, but has fallen behind his 1939 standard in amount of real value; and

Whereas the wage earner with wife as dependent who received $34.30 a week in 1939 and paid no Federal income tax, and who in 1950 receives $62 a week and pays $5.70 weekly taxes, has take-home pay of $56.30, which on the present 57-cent dollar, equals $32.30 of the 1939 dollar, and is $2 weekly less than the $34.30 take-home pay of the same worker in 1939; and

Whereas social and economic justice demands alleviations of the tax burden of those with dependents, who now pay most of the heavy excise taxes; and

Whereas an increase in the exemptions in Federal income-tax returns from $600 per person to $800 a year would give the average wage earner, with wife as dependent, a savings of $69.60 a year or about $1.33 a week; and

Whereas such an $800 exemption would reduce the tax load on individuals $4,000,000,000 a year, a drop from $18,000,000,000, to $14,000,000,000; and

Whereas corporations, paying $12,000,000,000 a year, or two-thirds of what individuals pay, are the only group better off today in comparison to the values of 1939, should be levied increased taxes to make up the $4,000,000,000 reduction resulting from increasing the exemptions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved this 18th day of December 1950, in the city of Duluth, Minn., That the executive boards of teamsters joint councils, 32 of Minneapolis, 34 of St. Paul, and 48 of Duluth do hereby go on record urging Congress at the next session in January 1951, act to increase exemptions on personal income tax returns to $800 per person, and to increase corporation taxes to offset any reduction resulting from the rises in exemptions; be it further

Resolved, That each of the three participating teamster joint councils work jointly and separately to enlist other organizations to support actively this resolution.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have a letter from Bowman, N. Dak., dated January 19, 1951, which I think is very interesting, and which I think every Senator should read. It is from an honest-to-God dirt farmer, Mrs. Rose M. Hansey, and it reads as follows:

BOWMAN, N. DAK., January 19, 1951.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Am writing to you in regard to farm product prices, especially eggs. We raise high-priced pullets, expecting the eggs to get our groceries, but so far eggs are so cheap, they don't even pay for the feed the chickens eat. And wheat should be at least $3 per bushel. Farm machinery is so high can't even buy what we need. Need a new linoleum, blinds, etc., but feel that we can't afford it. Taxes are so high we had to borrow money for the time being to pay them, in hopes that grain prices would go up, especially wheat, as that is our main crop.

And another thing we aren't in favor of drafting 18-year-olds.

We had two boys in the other war, and it spoiled their health and our home has never been the same since. We have the one boy left at home; he is soon 15 years old and all we have to look forward to is that he will have to go to war as soon as he is old enough. Future isn't very bright. The only bright thing we have is our Bible and family. We would like to keep them if we can.

There are many more things I'd like to write about, but the price on eggs was the main thing. Don't know just what the stores pay now, but it must be below 20 cents. Haven't taken any to town lately. The last time I got 27 cents a dozen. And a pound of coffee was 91 cents or rather 93 cents with tax.

Hope you can help wake them up down there, so we can make both ends meet.

Sincerely,

ROSE M. HANSEY.

Mr. President, I hope the distinguished majority leader listened very carefully to that letter, because, after all, the Democrats are in the majority and they are to blame. If anyone is to blame, it is the Democratic Party, led by my distinguished friend from Arizona. Only a short time ago, we could buy a can of salmon for 19 cents. Today it is 79 cents. During all the time the Democratic Party has been in control it has done nothing, apparently, to regulate the prices of the goods which poor persons must buy. This poor farm woman writes to me telling me she is receiving less than 20 cents a dozen for eggs. She cannot even buy linoleum, or any of the necessities of life. Coffee is 93 cents a pound.

I hope my distinguished friend and colleague from Arizona, for whom I have a very high regard, will read the letter very carefully. I know that a man of his great ability, and holding the great position which he holds as Democratic leader, will take steps immediately to see that farm prices are protected.

Mr. President, I now wish to make some brief comments on another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota may proceed.

UNITED NATIONS CHARTER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an editorial which was published in the Daily Oklahoman, of which Mr. E. K. Gaylord is editor. It is one of the outstanding newspapers of the West, and is published every morning by the Oklahoma Publishing Co. The editorial is entitled "While the People Sleep." I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed at this point in my remarks. It is one of the most thought-provoking editorials which has been published in any newspaper in the past 50 years. It shows that by the adoption of the United Nations Charter, against which I am proud to say I voted, we are now in a war without Congress ever having voted for war. The editorial refers to the fact that the Appellate Court of California in rendering its decision in a case was guided by action taken by the United Nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHILE THE PEOPLE SLEEP

In article VI, section 2, of the Federal Constitution it is provided that "All treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land." It further provides that the "judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Charter of the United Nations was presented to the Senate as a treaty and ratified as a treaty. Its provisions are therefore superior to any American law and even to the Constitution. All American judges are bound to recognize the Charter as the supreme law of the United States.

That Charter provides specifically that no nation that approves the charter shall enact any law that makes any distinction as to "race, sex, language, or religion." All of our existing laws and ordinances that make any such distinction are therefore invalid, since they violate the terms of the ratified charter, which the Constitution recognizes as the "supreme law of the land."

In conformity with that provision of the charter the Appellate Court of California has declared invalid the California statute which denies to orientals the right to own land. That statute has been upheld by the Supreme Court of California and by the Supreme Court of the United States. But the law is now declared void by the Appellate Court of California on the ground that it violates a treaty that was not even written until 25 years after the law was enacted.

If one State law that violates the Charter of the United Nations can be declared void, every law enacted by Congress, legislature, or municipal council can be nullified for the same reason. Laws that have gone unchallenged and undisputed for 150 years can be declared void if that decision of the California Appellate Court is permitted to stand.

The country thought that the San Francisco Conference was designing a fabric to render future wars less probable. Now the country is informed by a California court that the conference actually wrote an agreement that is superior to every law ever enacted in America and superior even to the Constitution of the United States. Now the people learn that when the Senate approved that Charter it accepted as the supreme law of the American people an instrument not written by Americans but by the nations and tribes and tongues of two hemispheres. Russians and Chinese and East Indians and other aliens enacted for the American people the supreme law of the American people.

Meanwhile there is pending what is known as the Genocide Convention. This is an instrument written by the Assembly of the United Nations which forbids all attacks on races as such. It leagues all the nations together to administer punishment to any nation or individual that attacks or abuses or oppresses any race or any member of that race.

That convention provides that any nation or any individual charged with the crime of genocide shall be tried in the nation where the crime has been committed or tried by a tribunal to be set up by the United Nations. If that convention is ratified by the Senate, it, too, will become the supreme law of the land, the "Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding."

Under that new "supreme law of the land" it would become at least possible to force any American citizen to trial before an alien court in Geneva or Moscow or Rome or Tokyo, where cruel and unusual punishment is not forbidden and where the privilege of a trial by jury is unknown. If the Senate makes that convention the supreme law, every liberty enjoyed by Americans will become subject to the wishes and whims and passions of Mongols and Slavs and Hindus the wide world over.

THE FEDERAL DEBT

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, a few years ago when I was Governor of my State, North Dakota owed very little money, only about $42,000,000. During the drought period we reduced the debt to roughly $21,000,000. We cut the debt in two, and cut the expenses of our State Government 54 percent. We cut them from $11,700,000 to $5,400,000. would be interesting to know what t[illegible]bt of North Dakota is today.

I hold in my hand an article which was published by the North Dakota Taxpayers Association. It says that North Dakota's share of the Federal debt—the Federal debt, Mr. President—is much greater than the total taxable value of all real and personal property in the State. Each individual's share of the $256,598,297,426 of Federal debt amounts to $1,708. That is what every North Dakotan—not every family, but every individual—owes. Mr. President, I have before me a list of every county in the State, showing the population, the county's share of the Federal debt, and the net taxable valuation in 1950. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UN MEMBERSHIP

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I call to the attention of every Member of the Senate that as the senior Senator from North Dakota I voted against every appropriation of money to be sent to foreign countries with one exception. I voted only for UNRRA. I voted for the two billion dollars which we sent abroad to feed the hungry, naked, and needy all over the world, regardless of religion or nationality. I voted against every other appropriation of money to be sent to foreign countries. Some of the $12,000,000,000 we sent to Russia is now being used against us.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article entitled "United States Could Cut UN Ties," written by David Lawrence, and published in a recent issue of the Washington Evening Star.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES COULD CUT UN TIES—RELEASE FROM OBLIGATION TO ACT IS POSSIBLE IN EVENT OF AGGRESSION IN EUROPE OR ASIA

(By David Lawrence)

The United States is beginning to ask various governments whether their attitude of procrastination in the United Nations means that, in the event of an aggression committed against their respective territories, America is to be released from obligation to act promptly in branding and punishing such aggression.

To say that the American Government is astonished by the strange behavior of various member governments of the UN is to put it mildly. It is doubtful if some of these governments themselves realize the extent to which they are jeopardizing the prospect of American protection for their interests in the future.

The United States went into Korea and has suffered 46,000 casualties in the belief that the members of the UN who voted to resist aggression in North Korea were sincere in that vote. If they did not mean what they said, then, in all candor, a resolution should be adopted at once rescinding and revoking that step and announcing to all the world that the members of the UN do not intend to resist any aggression in Europe or in Asia. This would give the United States a free hand.

The American taxpayer would be relieved, moreover, to discover that the $200,000,000, for instance, which India wants from our Government for food is something that need not be spent, after all, because India's Prime Minister, having allied his Government with the Moscow Government, presumably could receive such aid from the Soviets.

The policy of the American Government has never been one to tie in its financial or economic aid with any military alliance, but the 46,000 casualties in Korea in the face of the willingness of India to write off that entire adventure as an American blunder, and not a UN action at all, has aroused Members of Congress. It is unlikely that India or any other nation will find Uncle Sam generous hereafter to governments that are unwilling to risk their troops in support of American troops.

The speech of Indian delegate Rau at the UN declaring that, since a lull in the fighting has occurred, there should be more and more palavering with the Chinese Communists produced a sickening impression here. It could not have been worse if India had openly stated her intention to become allied with Moscow.

Allied sea power has, temporarily at least, upset Communist China's strategy in Korea. This, more than any intentional suspension of hostilities on the battlefront, accounts for the lull in the fighting.

The Chinese face the prospect of an amphibious landing or the threat of such a maneuver, and they recall that a large number of North Korean troops were caught in a similar trap before.

As long as Allied warships can move freely up and down the west coast of Korea and interfere with the landings of any supplies from Chinese ports and destroy not only port facilities but vital roads along the coast, the Chinese high command must face a serious menace to its rear.

Our naval power, incidentally, is not confined to bombardment from cruisers. Plenty of planes are flying from the decks of aircraft carriers, and their bombers are inflicting damage to supply lines as they operate alongside United States Air Force land-based planes which range the northern area, too. The Air Force is doing a wonderful job.

The average American who has been gathering defeatist impressions from the recent headlines about the strategic withdrawal of UN forces does not have a real conception of the extent of the damage done by sea power and air power in the last 5 weeks. The optimism which has been emanating from Washington and Tokyo in the last few days about the improved situation of our forces is based primarily on the tremendous losses being inflicted on the supply lines of the enemy.

In the course of reoccupying some of the areas which have been recently abandoned by the Communists, an opportunity has been afforded to make an actual count of some of the soldier dead of the enemy. In one place alone 2,200 dead troops were accounted for, and hence the belief has developed that Red China cannot indefinitely atand the losses, especially since she has her crack field army in Korea.

The UN can win in Korea, but the battle now is with the faint hearts and the craven intriguers in its own ranks.

THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, last week I offered a resolution asking that the Postmaster General's order cutting daily mail delivery be rescinded. We have been told a great deal about the deficit in the Post Office Department. I hold in my hand an article entitled "Railroads Settle Old Mail Claims," written by Joseph A. Loftus, and published in the New York Times of September 24, 1950. It says:

Agreement with postal heads for $150,000,000 covers rates for 4-year period.

I say now, as I have said on former occasions on the floor of the Senate, that this amount includes the cost of hauling empty mail cars from one end of the United States to the other. The Post Office Department has cut the pay of the men who work for the Department. When I tried to get a decent rate of pay for some of the veterans who are mail handlers, it was said that nothing could be done about it.

Mr. President, some of the employees of the Post Office Department get as little as $1,900 a year. They are expected to support wives and children on that. Finally, after great effort, I got their pay raised to $2,400. Some of the men are veterans who served on Guadalcanal, and many of them were wounded during the war. Some of them are getting small pensions, while others are getting nothing at all. When I tried to get them a raise, it was said that it could not be done. It was said that the Post Office Department did not have enough money. According to the article in the New York Times, the railroads are being taken care of. They got $150,000,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD in full at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAILROADS SETTLE OLD MAIL CLAIMS—AGREEMENT WITH POSTAL HEADS FOR $150,000,000 COVERS RATES FOR 4-YEAR PERIOD

(By Joseph A. Loftus)

WASHINGTON, September 23.—The railroads settled old claims for higher mail-carrying rates today for about $150,000,000.

This is a rise of about 19 p rcent. It covers a period of nearly 4 years ending next December 31. The railroads are asking further increases to take effect January 1.

The agreement with the Post Office Department is subject to approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Hearings on the settlement and proposals for a new rate structure are set for November before the Commission.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson announced a three-point agreement with the carriers. The three points are:

1. Elimination of the round-trip provision of the present rate schedule which requires the Post Office to pay for the return of empty cars on the same basis of pay as the movement of outbound loaded mail cars. This applies only to regular railroad equipment, which can be used for other shipping purposes. It does not apply to railway post-office cars, which are special equipment dedicated to the postal service.

This will place the Post Office Department for the first time on the same basis as other shippers. The round-trip c arge was instituted many years ago, when about 80 percent of the cars used for mail-carrying were special equipment. The growth in the volume of mail, particularly of parcel post, has permitted the use of more regular equipment. Only about 24 percent of the mail-carrying cars now are special post-office cars.

Government estimates of the payment for empty returns are $30,000,000 a year. Not all of that will be saved. The cost of empty cars that may be necessary to the transportation of mail will be included in the one-way rate, as it is in the case of other types of shippers.

2. Agreement on a proposed rate structure for the future whereby line-haul costs and terminal costs will be calculated separately. The Department said this was a more realistic approach to the problem of the individual roads. Under the present system there is a flat, country-wide rate which is supposed to cover haul and terminal costs. Terminal costs vary greatly among the carriers. The new method will take these factors into consideration.

The actual level of rates is not embodied in this section of the agreement. Actual rates would be set by the Interstate Commerce Commission after hearing.

3. Agreement on a lump sum cash settlement of claims by the railroads for additional revenue for transporting the mails during the 4 years the case has been pending before the ICC.

The railroads received $227,500,000 for transporting the mails in the fiscal year of 1950. The settlement of 19 percent would be applied to this and to the three previous years. Rail transportation payments in those 3 years were lower than they were in the fiscal year of 1950. An authoritative source estimated the settlement cost for the 4 years at about $150,000,000.

The pending applications of the railroads before the Interstate Commerce Commission seek a 95-percent increase over the rates in effect when the case was filed in February 1947. An interim increase of 25 percent in mail pay was granted by the ICC on December 1, 1947.

Hearings on the proposed settlement of the claims for the 4-year period will begin November 8. Hearings on the proposed new rate structure will begin November 29.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I listened with interest this afternoon to the address of the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] on the subject of the railroad strikes which are now in progress. I think he did it unintentionally, because I know the Senator, and I am satisfied that he did not speak with malice aforethought, or with any intent to criticize the railroad strikers, but, as I remember, he referred to the employees as a group of men who are looking out for their own economic interests.

Some persons may get an impression contrary to what I believe the junior Senator from Oregon had in mind. I know he agrees with me that during World War II there was no other organization which compared in patriotism to the railroad brotherhoods. To say that the men who are on strike—men who have sons in Korea, and whose sons are being drafted—are unpatriotic is untrue, because the record made by the members of the railroad brotherhoods during World War II speaks for itself. We are all familiar with that record. We know that 21 percent of the young people who worked on the railroads and belonged to the brotherhoods were in World War II—21 percent, Mr. President. With machinery, tools, and equipment growing older and older as the war progressed, the fact remained that the railroad brotherhoods hauled twice as much freight—twice as much, Mr. President—as was ever hauled in the history of America. That is their record, Mr. President. The distinguished junior Senator from Oregon gave the record as to what the White House is doing.

Under a Democratic administration headed by Woodrow Wilson we were at war. We have had two wars since. We are in one now. We had World War II. All this time the Democrats have been in power. It seems to me that they ought to have the laws ready so that they could handle strikes, so that the price of food could be kept at a fair level, and so that wages could be kept at a fair level. Yet month after month went by. The price of food rose to the highest point it has ever reached in all the history of the country. Then we found the automobile companies, with unheard-of profits, adding another 5 percent. When the prices were rolled back all they took off was the last 5 percent.

Mr. President, I have received letters from some of the strikers. I have received some from Fargo, N. Dak. I am sorry I do not have them with me. Those letters show the budgets of the workers, and establish conclusively that a worker cannot live decently and support a wife and children on the pay which he is receiving.

For 22 long months, nearly 2 years, this question has been before those in control of our Government. After all the experience which the Democratic Party has had with war, one might suppose that it would not be necessary to wait for 22 months to give either the railroads or the employees justice. One might suppose that by this time the administration could have figured out some formula so that it would not be necessary to have the terrible strike which is now affecting people all over the country.

Mr. President, I should now like to refer to an editorial on another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM KOREA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point as a part of my remarks an editorial entitled "Change in Attitude," published in the Kildeer (N. Dak.) Herald of January 18. The editorial states that the Legislature of North Dakota has passed a resolution urging that we withdraw our troops from Korea.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHANGE IN ATTITUDE

The Senate of the State Legislature of North Dakota has passed a resolution that we withdraw our troops from Korea. The Congress of the United States is all worked up over our foreign policy which involved our troops in the battle in Korea.

Like 95 percent of the rest of us they figured we had done the right thing when we decided to step into the Korean affair under the banner of the UN. It looked like a pretty simple matter to push the North Koreans across the thirty-eighth parallel from whence they had come. No one figured we'd be fighting a million Chinese before the fracas was over. Since that has taken place, our President, Harry Truman, has turned from hero to scapegoat.

It takes a lot of people to make a world, but I don't see how they all got into the United States.

FARM PRICES—LETTER FROM O. S. ELLEVOLD AND ARTICLE BY MARK SULLIVAN

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, last week on the floor of the Senate I took up the matter of the German Embassy being sold. Before I go into that question I should like to introduce another letter into the RECORD at this point in my remarks. It is dated February 2, and it is written by a farmer at Williston, N. Dak. It is so important that I shall read it.

WILLISTON, N. DAK., February 2, 1951.
Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I just read the enclosed article by Mark Sullivan and it is enough to make any farmer's blood boil when he reads that kind of stuff. Either the man is a hope-pin-head or he is a malicious cur. I get 3½ cents per pound for No. 1 wheat at the elevator and a loaf of bread which sells for 22 cents contains about 1 pound of dry wheat flour. And when you start figuring breakfast food for instance it is 10 times worse; 4 ounces of puffed wheat retails for 15 cents, that is 60 cents per pound. I get 3½ cents for producing the wheat at high expense and somebody else gets 56½ cents for shooting that wheat through a popping machine, putting it in a paper box, handing it to the customer, and then they brand me the villain and profiteer.

I wish you would take that guy to task and trim him down to size; I know you can do it if you make up your mind to.

It has been very cold up here now for a week, but is warming up this morning, and it looks nice outside.

Thanking you for your kind attention and all past favors, I am

Sincerely yours,

O. S. ELLEVOLD.

P. S.—I would appreciate very much if you would send me a copy or two of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of January 17, 1951.

Mr. President, I do not know of any better way to bring this matter to the attention of my friend Mark Sullivan than by reading this letter on the floor of the Senate and asking unanimous consent that the article which he published, which aroused the ire of my friend in North Dakota, be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATOR IS SEVERE

(By Mark Sullivan)

WASHINGTON.—In a rush of hurrying developments during several days past, the Government has set ceilings over many prices and is setting them on more. To fix the prices and enforce them it has set in motion several new agencies, among them a kind of over-all one, the Economic Stabilization Agency, administered by Eric Johnston. Associated with Mr. Johnston is Michael DiSalle, Director of Price Stabilization.

All this is portentous. It means, as a matter of course, that there will be ceilings over prices of a larger number of commodities. Further than that, it has created an impression that the rising cost of living is to be checked and inflation also. This, in fact, is generally assumed to be the official purpose and expectation of the administration. Whether it is likely to be achieved is a subject of much discussion. Some light may be found by inquiry beneath the superficial aspect of crowded and hurrying developments.

The basis and authority for all that has so far been done is a statute passed by Congress last September, the Defense Production Act of 1950. The act is very long, intricate, and technical. Two sentences of its mass of verbiage throw rather deeper light on it than all the rest together. They are sentences of limitation. Stating what Administrator Johnston and the agencies under him cannot do, they raise a question about how much he can do at all, certainly a question whether he can stop rising cost of living and inflation. The two sentences compose most of subsection 402 (D) (3) of the act: "No ceiling shall be established * * * for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: I. The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture * * * II. The highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950 * * * as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

This means that as to putting ceilings on farm crops, Administrator Eric Johnston, of the Economic Stabilization Agency, is in effect displaced by Secretary Brannan of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Johnston can put no ceiling on a farm crop that is below the parity price determined by the Secretary of Agriculture or, alternately, the other standard likewise determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the highest market price during May 24–June 24, 1950. While it is true that Mr. Johnston can put a ceiling on a farm crop that is above the parity price, he is here again subordinated to the Secretary of Agriculture, for it is the Secretary who determines the parity price.

The limitation on Stabilization Administrator Johnston is severe. He can at will put ceilings on prices in nearly all the country's industries but not on prices in agriculture. He can at will put ceilings on automobiles and other manufactured products, through a wide range of heavy goods and household appliances, practically the whole field of manufactured goods; but he cannot at will put ceilings on wheat and other grains or on eggs or poultry. Before he can put ceilings on these and other farm products, the ceiling price must be below standards determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

This is a momentous condition. The farm crops which are kept out of the Stabilization Administrator's discretion and authority are many and important; in the aggregate they compose a material part of the whole economy of the country. It is questionable whether the immense and complex mechanism of ceilings and regulations and controls now under way can function successfully with a material part of the country's economy not under its authority.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have received a letter dated January 17, 1951, from Grand Forks, N. Dak. The letter reads in part as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., January 17, 1951.
Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: Reading tonight's Herald, date January 24, 1951, where you talking about price of eggs 21 to 30 cents a dozen to farmers—well here goes to tell you what I paid for eggs at Xmas 25 a dozen at Cavalier and here in Grand Forks I paid 70 cents for pullet eggs. Of course, we all know it cost to have them brought to town, but not that much.

Also I see by my union paper from post office where you are in favor of 17 percent increase in pay for all post office employees.

Well, here goes to tell you what I receive for year—$3,050. Take out my income taxes, which is $65; taxes on my home, $203.60; interest on my investment, $235; Parson Prot. $14, total of $526 for taxes without trying to keep a family of five with an aged mother of 86 years old that can only get $10 per month from the welfare board. Of course, one should not complain about their parent. But I think and know this outfit in power are awful therefore I hope as you one my best friend in Washington I hope you stand up and give them heck down there in (D. C.) * * *

As ever,

NORMAN C. WILKEN.

P. S.—Hoping you and your wife very happy New Year as I received your welcome card for the New Year.

I bring that letter to the attention of my distinguished friend from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the majority leader.

Mr. President, I have another letter from Heimdal, N. Dak.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I decline to yield until I get through telling the distinguished Senator all about the egg prices.

Mr. McFARLAND. I merely wanted to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LANGER. I am sorry, Mr. President, that I cannot yield now. Inasmuch as the Senator is interested in the subject, however, I hand him two letters so he can read them at his leisure and then, if he will be so kind, return them to me. I shall identify the letters, so the Senator will know from whom they were sent to me. One is from Iven K. Wilkins, of Heimdal, N. Dak., and the other is from a very dear friend of mine, Julius Lemke, of Bentley, N. Dak. If the Senator will read the letters and digest them I am sure it will be greatly to his profit.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield at this time. I simply do not have the time. I have considerable more to present, and I am already late. The Republican meeting and box supper begin at 6:30 and it is now 6:20. The place of meeting is nearly a mile and a half away, and there still is a speech I wish to give. After I complete it, even though I am short of time, I shall be glad to answer questions if the Senator from Arizona desires to ask me questions.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator.

PROPOSED SALE OF GERMAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, AND DEFENSE ALLIANCE WITH WESTERN GERMANY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on Thursday of last week I said I wanted to complete my speech in relation to the proposed sale of the German Embassy. At that time I exhibited to the Senate an advertisement which appeared in the Wall Street Journal for Friday, January 19. It was an offer for sale and began as follows:

Offer for sale by the Attorney General of the United States of America.

Then it described the property known as the German Embassy in Washington. It was proposed to sell that property at the very time when General Eisenhower was in West Germany trying to get the Germans of that area to rearm. General Eisenhower told the people in Germany they would again become a great nation, and that we would recognize them again. It is very strange that the Democratic Party cannot have the Department of State, the Attorney General, and General Eisenhower all work together. On the one hand the people of West Germany are told we are going to welcome them as a nation, while a department of the administration is proposing to sell the German Embassy so that if the German people do become a great nation again their representatives will not have a place in which to hang their hats when they come here.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the "offer for sale" of the German Embassy be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the offer was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFER FOR SALE BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Notice inviting citizens of the United States of America to make offers to purchase from the Attorney General all his right, title, and interest in and to the following described improved real property situated in the city of Washington, D. C.

Description of property: Valuable downtown location, 1435-41 Massachusetts Avenue NW., improvements of brick construction, consisting of 70 rooms, large ballroom, 13 baths and 5 additional toilet rooms, garages and storage space; situated on plot containing 20,000 square feet.

This property is ideally located and offers unusual opportunities for development. The neighborhood is improving, with new construction in the immediate area and is within easy walking distance of the best hotels, many Government departments, churches, schools, financial district, good shopping and restaurant facilities. The site has a frontage of 138.6 feet on the north side of Massachusetts Avenue between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets NW., the avenue is 160 feet wide, and is one of the main traffic arteries of Washington.

Which property is more particularly described in a certain vesting order No. 15004, dated August 14, 1950, recorded on August 25, 1950, in the office of the Recorder in and for the District of Columbia in the record of deeds of said District of Columbia in folio 41 on page 9282.

Sealed bids addressed to the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, 101 Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., will be received until 10 o'clock a. m. on the 16th day of February 1951, at which time and place said bids will be publicly opened and declared. Each bid must be in duplicate and an irrevocable offer to purchase the property. Bids will be received only from American citizens and corporations controlled by American citizens and organized under the laws of the United States. Bids must contain an affidavit stating, among other things, that the bidder is not purchasing on behalf of an undisclosed principal, a person not a citizen of the United States, or for resale to a noncitizen.

A bank draft or certified check payable to the Attorney General in an amount equal to 10 percent of the bid price must accompany the bid. Any commission payable must be stated in the bid. The Attorney General reserves the right to reject any or all bids or at his election to waive all defects in any bid. The Attorney General's right, title, and interest in the property will be conveyed by quitclaim deed without covenants or warranties of any kind. Further particulars with respect to the said property and forms for submitting bids may be obtained by communicating with the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, 101 Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

Dated at Washington, D. C., this 12th day of January 1951.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Attorney General.

Mr. LANGER. As I previously said, in my opinion the Communists will howl with glee over the proposed sale. How the leaders of the democratic Western Germany must feel when they hear the gibes, "See, you West German leaders won't even have a place to hang your hats when you are in the United States talking about your joining in the western defense." Is it any wonder, then, that United States High Commissioner McCloy's survey says that most West German newspapers refer to the proposed German Army units almost unanimously as "Himmelfahrtkommandos," which means "legions headed for heaven," or extermination? Is it any wonder, then, that General Eisenhower found Mr. McCloy's report so disappointing and so disheartening, for the general knows that such stupid blundering, which is the kindest expression that can be used for such chicanery, unless stopped at once, will most likely cost American lives under his command, for which he carries the responsibility.

This chicanery is not an isolated instance in the operation of the Office of Alien Property administering the Trading With the Enemy Act in conjunction with foreign funds control of the State Department. This is the one agency of government in the United States that could perhaps do more than any other to forward the policies of our military leaders, who in the end carry the responsibility for the people, namely, to prepare the way for the successful integration of Western Germany in the defense alliance of their own free will, and, in addition, influence the civilian populations of all national and racial groups behind the iron curtain to think of America and Americans as their friends, which policies, if not further sabotaged, may yet prevent a spread of war to Europe, and thus save innumerable American lives.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of January 19, 1951, entitled, "Reluctant Germans—Most Would Refuse To Serve in His Army, Eisenhower Will Hear—West German Public Is More Opposed to Rearmament Than Ever, Poll Shows."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RELUCTANT GERMANS—MOST WOULD REFUSE TO SERVE IN HIS ARMY, EISENHOWER WILL HEAR—WEST GERMAN PUBLIC IS MORE OPPOSED TO REARMAMENT THAN EVER, POLL SHOWS—"LEGIONS HEADED FOR HEAVEN"

(By Edward Hughes)

BONN, GERMANY.—It will be fairly easy to get Germany's ex-Wehrmacht generals back into uniform. Recruiting the privates and corporals will be another matter.

That is what United States officials here in the West German capital will tell General Eisenhower when he arrives in Germany next week on his inspection tour of Western Europe's defense set-up. The new chief of the North Atlantic forces will be told: Most German men today would refuse to serve in a new army, and the public's antimilitary sentiment is trending upward—not downward.

THE HIGHLY DISAPPROVING MALES

The United States High Commission here has been conducting a series of poll-type studies in recent weeks. The findings are considered so grave the Commission will not allow them to be published in detail. But after a look at the poll figures, it's safe to say experts here now believe that:

No more than 5 percent of West Germany's fighting-age men would volunteer for service in a Western defense army. Less than 10 percent would serve even if drafted.

Nearly half of all West Germans—including the women, the crippled, and the men too old to draft—oppose participation in such an army, even if the Germans were granted full equality in it and full membership in the North Atlantic Treaty organization.

What's more, many people who used to favor some sort of German participation in a Western defense force have apparently changed their minds. In mid-August, for example, almost two-thirds of the population appeared to favor such participation—compared with the present figure of about 50 percent.

West German newspapers refer to proposed German Army units almost unanimously as "cannon-fodder" and "Himmelfahrtkommandos" (legions headed for heaven). Thousands of Germans gather around a nonpartisan group in Hamburg which is distributing neutrality cards pledging the holder to fight neither for West nor for East.

The prevailing antimilitary sentiment in this Nation today throws an eerie light on the important discussions of remilitarization now taking place in this capital.

PARLEYS AND BICKERING

Two separate parleys are being conducted—one in Bonn and the other across the Rhine at the old Hotel Petersberg, where Neville Chamberlain once bargained with Hitler for "peace in our time."

One United States-British-French group is dickering with German Government agents on over-all political concessions to be granted Germany if she actively joins the military build-up against Russia. At the same time another crowd of experts has opened discussions of the technical military problems Germany will face if agreement is reached on the political problems.

The swing of public opinion in coming weeks will have much to do with the success of the parleys. However, some United States

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Army officers are inclined to dismiss with an air of impatience the apathy toward rearmament. Says one general: "These fellows are waiting for orders. Naturally, they'll drift so long as we keep asking them if they want to be soldiers. They'll fall in line once we get a concrete agreement and plan in effect and start telling them what to do."

BUT WILL THE PUBLIC GO ALONG?

Since some of the tradition of obedience of the individual to high authority probably still exists among Germans, there may be some validity to this argument. But the big question is whether a hostile civilian public will permit the German Government ever to agree to such a concrete plan in the first place. Chancelor Konrad Adenauer's government is not as secure politically as it once was. It will not want to risk a parliamentary defeat on the question.

Chancelor Adenauer refused to bow to public opinion this week when he rejected the proposal of the East German Government for talks looking toward the unity of all Germany under one democratic government elected freely for the entire population. But he won't risk his neck by rushing swiftly into acception of the Western allies' request for German remilitarization.

Millions of Germans think there's still a chance to avoid rearmament if the United States, Britain, and France are able to sit down with Russia at a Big Four conference on the matter. So observers think Bonn will probably delay the end of the current talks as long as possible in the hope of some last-ditch compromise that might turn up between East and West.

While the French are mostly in favor of such a course, the general United States-British feeling in official quarters here is that it's loaded with dynamite. The High Commission poll of West German sentiment shows that a lot of people would unite with East Germany and, as a neutral nation, stay out of the East-West conflict—rather than join the West in fighting Russia.

DESIGN FOR SOVIET EXPLOITATION

For this reason, American political officials fear Russia would exploit this sentiment at a Big Four meeting. They figure the Soviets might come forth with a spectacular offer such as the dissolution of the East German People's Police (a Red-run army), coupled with free elections—in exchange for a standstill in plans for rearming Western Germany.

"Even though such a suggestion might be an obvious trap, it would be exceedingly embarrassing for us to have to reject it," an American official points out. By this simple maneuver, Russia could add thousands of people to the already sizable anti-Yankee element in occupied Germany, and could put forth new evidence that Soviet Russia is Germany's real friend. That's one big reason why the Western allies won't agree to the Big Four talks unless the agenda includes subjects other than Germany.

Such a Soviet proposal would look very good to a German public which is inclining toward neutralism. Carrying with it the implication that all Germans could unite and step aside to let the East and West fight their war, this term has become an increasingly popular catchword in recent weeks.

Impetus to the "neutralist" movement is provided by an active group of people who follow the guidance of the well-known Pastor Martin Niemoeller, leader in Germany's Evangelical Church, and of Prof. Alfred Noack, of the University of Wuerzburg.

WHAT NIEMOELLER DEMANDS

A few days ago, the 59-year-old Pastor Niemoeller went off to Berlin to confer with Communist officials in the East German Government. He came away renewing his oft-stated demand that all foreign occupation powers leave Germany immediately and be replaced by a neutral occupation force of the United Nations.

Professor Noack, who maintains regular contact with the east zone, highlighted a New Year's speech with a similar call for the removal of "outsiders" from Germany and the sealing off of Germany as a "peace zone" to permit free elections in all parts of the nation.

Despite many loud catcalls which have greeted these gentlemen, the German press is devoting an increasing amount of space to their utterances. The "neutralists" have also undoubtedly attracted thousands of average Germans who see the neutral alternative as a faint ray of hope in a black future.

Critics, on the other hand, maintain that it is futile for Germany to hope to avoid being a part of an East-West fight. Says a Bonn Government spokesman: "The bombs are going to fall on us no matter what we do. At least we must have the moral decency to choose the side of right and fight for it."

Convinced that the neutralists and other antirearming groups are playing into Russia's hands, Allied officials here have become increasingly irked by the cautious attitude which public opinion is requiring Chancelor Adenauer and his representatives to take in the current rearmament talks.

Seeing how slowly Chancelor Adenauer is moving, Allied observers are now predicting that under the most favorable circumstances it will be 6 months or more before the first German dons a uniform. Even at top speed, it would take another year to convert 100,000 to 200,000 recruits into trained soldiers—even if they were willing.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, let us see what the Office of Alien Property has done and is doing up to date. Let us see how that office is tied in with the Hiss-White crowd. The announced sale of the German Embassy building, and so forth, is typical of its actions after Harry Dexter White got control of it. How did this happen?

Mr. President, with the outbreak of World War II, even before we were involved in the conflict, the President of the United States created the Office of Foreign Funds Control so that the assets of all potential enemy countries in the United States could be controlled. Every American agrees that this was right and proper. This office was placed under the Secretary of the Treasury; and who was in charge? You guessed it—Harry Dexter White, as Assistant Secretary.

In January 1942, shortly after Pearl Harbor, the President of the United States established the Office of Alien Property Custodian. The President chose a man of impeccable character to head it, for he wanted no scandals, because he well remembered the scandals uncovered in an investigation of that office after World War I. He placed the office under the eminent leadership of Leo T. Crowley. He established the Office of Alien Property Custodian as an independent agency directly responsible to himself. It was the work of that office to take over all enemy assets and to hold them until the war was over, as was done in World War I.

I wish to congratulate my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Arizona, the Democratic majority leader, on the fact that Mr. Crowley and his staff did an admirable job under almost intolerable conditions, caused by Harry Dexter White and the Office of Foreign Funds Control, who immediately began their work to get control. They succeeded after Mr. Crowley resigned.

Let us not forget that Harry Dexter White had been in control of foreign funds since 1938. The Harry White crowd finally succeeded in securing an Executive order eliminating the Office of Alien Property Custodian as an independent agency and meshing it with the Office of Foreign Funds Control under Treasury jurisdiction. It became a siamese twin with Foreign Funds Control. Under whose control? Under the control of Harry Dexter White. Then came the infiltration of the Office of Alien Property with White's men, hand picked, to carry out White's policies in that agency. Now, as planned, the time for permanent confiscation of these properties was at hand. Yet they realized that the American people and the Congress of the United States were always opposed to confiscation of private property even in time of war.

They knew that the United States Chamber of Commerce publicly announced that they were unequivocally opposed to confiscation of all types of private enemy property in the United States. They knew that most of the leading members of the American Bar Association, students of international law, were also opposed to such confiscation, but there were many members of the Lawyers Guild who supported the Hiss-White policies.

I may say that I shall be unable to use the badge I have received for the dinner this evening, so I will hand it to the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], Mr. Republican, so that he may have one in each coat lapel, and so that he may represent me when he goes to the dinner and meeting. I know how well he will be treated and how graciously he will be received there.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's kind offer. I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], who now is presiding in this body, should be allowed to go to the meeting. Does not the Senator from North Dakota think so?

Mr. LANGER. I may say to my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio, that I understand the meeting will last until midnight, whereas at the present time it is only 6:30. So I shall be able to conclude well before the meeting has ended.

Mr. TAFT. Then I return to the Senator his badge, and I hope he will be able to attend the meeting at a later hour.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator from Ohio very much indeed.

Does the Senator wish me to yield to him for some other matter?

Mr. TAFT. No, thank you.

Mr. LANGER. Certainly.

Mr. President, the Hiss-White-Duggan crowd knew that the American public as a whole was opposed to confiscation. So, even before they got control of the Office of Alien Property, they prepared the groundwork for such confiscatory legislation. Who did it? The Treasury Department, Foreign Funds Control, under the brilliant leadership of Harry Dexter White. How was it planned? They knew that they would have to create a semblance of legality, even if that had again to be put on the false principle of mass guilt and mass punishment. What better arguments and what better semblance of right and legality could they bring before the United States Congress in their efforts to change the law so that all German civilian properties would be confiscated, than to see to it that even neutral countries first confiscated such properties? So they set out on a campaign, directed by Harry Dexter White, with agents from Foreign Funds Control, and they went into every neutral country and forced them to violate their own laws and give them lists of every German property owner.

Think of it, Mr. President; just think of it. They went into every neutral country and forced those in charge of the government there to violate their own laws and give them lists of every German property owned. Little Switzerland was forced by Foreign Funds Control to violate its own banking law, and did so after threats of trade restrictions, after having protested without success for many months to the Hiss crowd in the State Department, and finally gave them the lists of every piece of property and every bank account of every German civilian. Thus it was made to appear that the United States led the way in confiscation, and that other countries followed, when in truth and in fact they did not come before this Congress to get confiscation legislation passed until they had accomplished it in the other countries in the world. This confiscation of properties even in neutral countries was done on the theory that "we do not want the Nazi war criminals to gain from the loot they might have placed in neutral countries." In truth and in fact, it worked out just the other way, and they knew it would work that way. The German civilian who opposed Hitler and who did not want Hitler to use his savings in a war, and who violated Hitler's foreign-exchange laws, at the risk of being placed in a concentration camp, to get his few savings out of Germany into a neutral country, was stripped of those possessions; and there were vast numbers of such German civilians. Did Harry Dexter White and others plan to drive them from their friendship to the United States into the Communist camp? Did the Hiss crowd in the State Department, working hand in glove with White, and who turned down every protest of every neutral country against such blackmailing, also plan to drive the German civilian population into the Communist fold? There simply cannot be any question about it. So the stage was set for such confiscation in the United States. But even this pretense of justice and legality was not enough. They knew that they could not bring about confiscation of such property here unless they tied in a good use of the funds to be confiscated. So they came up with the idea that the funds so obtained were to be used to compensate Americans who were injured by violations of the rules of war. Such compensation was to be made by the use of alien-enemy property. That meant that all such property had to be confiscated first, before the compensation could be made. They knew that anyone who would object would be branded a Nazi or a Fascist, the scum of the earth, if he objected to confiscation and to the use of those funds for that purpose; and there is no doubt that every American, no matter how much he may be against confiscation, would want to see that his American neighbors who were thus injured were fully compensated, as much as it is humanly possible to do so. But the Hiss-White crew knew all along that the German civilian population and the Japanese population abhorred the crimes for which compensation was planned for the American victims, and if given a chance, they would have done it themselves. Let us not forget that immediately after the close of hostilities in Europe the first thing the German civilian population did was to take steps to make restitution as much as possible to all victims of Hitler persecution, Jews and Christians alike. They did make restitution, for they abhorred the crimes for which they got the blame.

Yes, Mr. President, the Hiss-White crew and their followers knew full well that no one would object to such confiscatory legislation. So once again those who ordinarily would have come forward to tell the Congress that the plan was wrong, were effectively silenced for fear of being smeared by the followers of the Hiss-White crowd, who were active in some fields of the public press and the radio. As a consequence, the American Chamber of Commerce kept silent; leaders of the American Bar Association kept silent; Americans of German and Japanese birth, who tried to provide for their relatives in enemy countries after the war was over, by gifts, or legacies, kept silent, and saw their properties also confiscated, for they knew that they would be smeared in the public eye even if they only came forward to ask that a distinction be made between property basically and intrinsically American property and that which is basically and intrinsically enemy property. The Hiss-White crowd knew at the time, as they know now, that the properties thus to be confiscated were far greater than all possible war claims provided for under the War Claims Act. Who did the Hiss-White crowd unknowingly and unwittingly use, Mr. President, to carry out their purpose? Certainly there can be no further doubt as to what effect these policies would have and have had on the civilian population of Germany and Japan. They used the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other veteran organizations; they fooled them, just as they fooled the Congress of the United States, and used it as a cat's-paw to further the master plan of the Kremlin—to weaken the will to resist. Yes, the Hiss-White crowd achieved their purpose to strip every German civilian, every widow and orphan of everything, even take the property of American citizens of German birth who were foolish enough to try to provide for their mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, and other kin in Germany through gifts, bequests, trusts, some of them created long before the war. The very men and women in the German civilian population most closely affiliated with ideas and ideals of American democracy, which they learned from their American relatives, the very ones who were the greatest thorn in Hitler's skin during the war; the ones who were subject to discrimination and repressions of all sorts, and who at best were listed by the Gestapo as politically unreliable; the very ones whom we now hope will lead the way in getting the Western German civilian population to join the western alliance of their own free will, were treated in that way. All those things were done before we knew or suspected any disloyalty on the part of Alger Hiss, Harry Dexter White, Laurence Duggan, and the rest; and it all happened while Gerhard Eisler, German Kremlin Communist agent No. 1, was operating in the United States, pulling all the strings, and watching the puppets jump.

Yes, Mr. President, the Office of Alien Property was careful that the legislation which confiscated all these properties made provision for a return in part, under certain conditions; but the fact remains that the language used in the act was the language wanted by the Office of Alien Property. The Congress had a right to rely upon the integrity of its representations, and did so. Now it turns out that the language of the act is drafted in such a manner that a German civilian or a Japanese civilian, unless he lost his citizenship by decree or unless he was a Communist, would practically have had to sit in a concentration camp from 1940 to the end of hostilities in order to qualify for the return of his property. The Alien Property Custodian knew that as the act was drafted, it would even take the properties of Christian churches, hospitals, orphanages, and would take the gifts and bequests made by Americans to such charitable institutions. Yet no one in the Office of Alien Property told the Congress that would happen. Thus, those who lost their citizenship by Hitler decree—Jews and Christians alike—can have their properties returned, which is right and proper. But, in addition, any Communist is in a position of being ipso facto considered a persecutee who was denied substantial rights of citizenship by reason of religion, race, or politics, and can have such property, held by the Alien Property Custodian, returned to him. So now we have the Attorney General of the United States, into whose jurisdiction the Office of Alien Property was transferred by another Executive order, in the position where, on the one side, he is to enforce anti-Communist legislation passed by the Congress, but through another agency he returns confiscated enemy property to Communists. Not even the Nazi's confiscated American properties located in Germany, because fearless German lawyers, many of them now taking leading parts in the West German Government, risked their very lives in opposition to such a move, and succeeded in getting Hitler to recognize that private property of American citizens situated in Germany should be held in trust for those American citizens by the German courts; and that was done all during the war.

Mr. President, ask yourself whether such policies make the position of the democratic leaders of the West German Government more secure when they plead for cooperation of the civilian population with western democracy or whether such policies make their position untenable.

Now, let us see how the Office of Alien Property was transferred to the Justice Department, now under Attorney General McGrath, who formerly was one of our colleagues in the Senate. It seems that the unrelenting work of the House Un-American Activities Committee slowly but surely was closing in on the subversive elements in our Government. What better time to bury the Office of Alien Property than in a period when a reorganization of many executive departments was taking place. So the Office of Alien Property was transferred by Executive order to the Department of Justice. What better place could be found to bury injustice than behind the fair shield of justice?

Now let us look at the situation of the national groups behind the iron curtain, and let us look at the present position of all American citizens and nationals of Polish, Czechoslovakian, Rumanian, Bulgarian, Hungarian, Lithuanian, Latvian, Estonian, or Ukrainian birth; and let us see what they have to look forward to in regard to their relatives behind the iron curtain. But let us first look at their record of Americanism, and then let us see what is planned for them. The records of the FBI disclose without a doubt that of the 50,000 active members of the Communist Party in the United States and of, perhaps, 10 times that many fellow travelers, the great majority of the membership is made up of native-born persons, those who should know better. The records of the FBI disclose that it is not the citizen of foreign birth, who immigrated to this country, who is the Communist. The Polish-American, the Czech-American, the Rumanian-American, the Bulgarian-American, the Hungarian-American, the Lithuanian-American, the Latvian-American, the Estonian-American, the Ukrainian-American, yes, the Japanese-American, the Chinese-American, the Korean-American, will seldom be found in the ranks of the Communists or in subversive organizations; and the records of the FBI in World War II disclose that the same thing was true about the German-Americans. They were not Nazis; they abhorred Nazi policies; they gave their sons in the fight for freedom, just as every other good American did. Now let us take a look at what is planned for the Polish-, Czech-, Rumanian-, Bulgarian-, Hungarian-, Lithuanian-, Latvian-, Estonian-, Ukrainian-, Japanese-, Chinese-, or Korean-American and for others who came to our shores to become American citizens, from lands now behind the iron curtain.

While we are spending millions of dollars on our Voice of America Freedom, to reach the people behind the iron curtain, to teach them something of American democracy and American ideals; while we are planning to reach those people, who never had any contact with western democracy, what is planned for those who have had contact with western democracy through their relatives and friends in the United States?

In the political, ideological, and psychological warfare now going on between the free nations of the world and those under communistic dictatorship, the friends and relatives of these American citizens—friends and relatives now living behind the iron curtain either in Europe or in Asia—can play, and are playing, an important part for democracy. Stalin knows this, just as Hitler knew it. Make no mistake about it, Mr. President; the relatives and friends of the above-named national groups, living behind the iron curtain, are in a serious situation, and their American relatives here are deeply concerned about them. The Communists know that the contacts those persons have with their American relatives and friends makes them at least politically unreliable and subject them to the greatest personal risk; and yet we know that in them lies our best hope for eventual, successful resistance, if we can give them the will to resist. These people, who have learned something of western civilization, western democracy, its aspirations, ideals, and principles from their contacts with their American relatives and friends here, hope and pray that all Americans will stand behind them in their hour of trial, ready to assist them in every way possible in their fight for freedom, when the time comes. Stalin has not forgotten that he lost Italy due almost completely to the campaign put on by Americans of Italian birth and descent, coupled with our decent human treatment of the Italian civilian population, which included a return of their properties taken by the Office of Alien Property.

The Czechs, the Poles, the Rumanians, the Bulgarians, the Hungarians, the Lithuanians, the Latvians, the Estonians, the Ukrainians, the Chinese, and the Koreans know that their relatives are in peril. They know they will need their help more than ever if they survive a war. They also know that the way the Trading With the Enemy Act reads now, their American money, their American property, and any trusts, they may create in order to feed and clothe their relatives behind the iron curtain after they are freed from Kremlin enslavement, will be confiscated by the United States. This is to be their repayment for the sacrifices they as American citizens are making and will make in the fight for freedom, for justice, for humanity, just as it has been the payment to all citizens of German birth and, I may also say, to all Japanese living in America. This is the repayment to be made to the people behind the iron curtain, whose relatives and friends are American citizens. Yet they are the very ones who are our greatest hope if we can only strengthen their will to resist.

Mr. President, why has not the Office of Alien Property integrated its functions with our military thinking, as far as Western Germany is concerned? Why has not the Office of Alien Property integrated its functions with the program established by this Congress, namely the Voice of America, in reaching the people behind the iron curtain? Why have they continued to keep Congress in the dark? There are only two possible answers: Either they are blunderers; or someone is still pulling the strings for the Kremlin, someone is still carrying out secret Communist member Harry Dexter White's plans. Let those who are responsible for the policies in the Office of Alien Property, who did more than anyone else to alienate the West German population from western democracy, who did more than anyone else to weaken the will of these people to resist Communist aggression, come forward and take a position now; let them tell us now whether, in the event the war spreads to Europe, they are in favor of confiscating the properties of Americans of Czech, Polish, Rumanian, Bulgarian, Hungarian, Lithuanian, Latvian, Estonian, Ukranian, yes, even Chinese or Korean birth, which those Americans may wish to leave to their relatives who are behind the iron curtain, to be delivered to them after they are free, and thus help keep them alive. Let those officials tell us whether they think that property should be confiscated, as has been done in the case of the property of Americans of German or Japanese birth. The officials of the Office of Alien Property know that will happen unless the law is changed. Let them come forward now and tell the Congress, while it may yet do some good, while it may strengthen the will of these people to resist, that they want those properties held in trust until the end of hostilities. If they really want the law changed, let them come forward now before the conflict actually swings from Asia to Europe, and before hysteria takes over. When they do come forward, will they still continue to do everything in their power to punish the Western Germany population by discriminating against them in a return of the property about which the Senate of the United States in its last session unanimously said:

> Such property is not enemy property within the strict sense of the word nor is it enemy property within the spirit of the Trading With the Enemy Act. It is intrinsically and inherently American property. Said property was amassed and earned in America by American citizens. It remained in this country to aid and abet the Government in the way all property does, to a successful fruition of the war. Certainly, and no one would contend otherwise, it was not the desire of Congress, or the people of this country to seize such property.

If those who favor such a change fail to do this, will they accept the consequences—perhaps a loss of Western Germany and the resultant—but unnecessary—loss of American lives of boys, who otherwise would not have to be sent there, or at least not in such great numbers. In accepting that responsibility, will they be in favor of returning those confiscated funds to the American donors or to the heirs of such American donors over here, so that they could then use the funds to help their relatives to help save Europe and help save ourselves; or will they want to punish Americans for being of German extraction? The same thing can be said of the property of Americans of Japanese descent.

It is time to let the West German civilian population know that Potsdam and all the other policies of oppression were not the policies of the President of the United States or the members of his Cabinet; and surely they were not the policies of the Congress of the United States, which was completely bypassed. Neither were they the policies of the American people. Let us tell these civilians frankly and honestly that while we were engaged in a war against their political leaders, and while Communist Russia was a cobelligerent, we let our guard down, and the things that happened to them were the result of a Communist conspiracy in our own Government, aimed as much against us as against them, by persons who had as their sole purpose the weakening of the will of those civilians to resist. They will understand this because they have had more experience with Kremlin intrigue than have we. Only last week the democratic government of Greece arrested two of its cabinet ministers as secret Communist spies. Let us tell those civilians that we are ferreting out the Communists and their fellow travelers, and that every policy that may be giving aid to the Communists, but which may be weakening the will of those civilians to resist aggression, will be changed immediately. I, for one, will not vote one more cent for the defense of Western Europe, and I will vote against sending one more American boy to Europe, unless there is a complete clean-up of this mess. I believe that the Members of the Senate will join me in this, and that the American people will stand behind us in this position, for the Members of the Senate know and the American people know, as do I, that unless these things are changed, we will not only lose our money, which we are asked to appropriate for a western defense, but we will lose the lives of American boys who will be sent to join the Himmelfahrts Legionen—legions destined for Heaven—as the German newspapers in the western zone refer to their own boys who are asked to join in the western defense.

The relentless work of the House Un-American Activities Committee in ferreting out the subversives of our Government finally gave courage to those who knew these policies were wrong to come forward and bring the facts to the Congress of the United States.

During the session of the Eighty-second Congress, Senators HERBERT O'CONOR, of Maryland, KENNETH WHERRY and HUGH BUTLER, of Nebraska, and myself, recognizing the injustices and wrongs that had been done in confiscatory legislation, introduced a bill in the United States Senate, known as S. 2929, providing for the return of seized properties to German civilians, where such property arose by gift, devise, bequest or inheritance from an American citizen, and where such persons proved they were not members of the Nazi Party. The bill was sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee under the chairmanship of the great American Senator, PAT MCCARRAN. The committee held extensive hearings, and, of course, the principal objectors were—you know who. Mr. President—the Office of Alien Property; and they used the patriotic members of the War Claims Commission as their stooges.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, consisting of the Honorable Senators Pat McCarron, of Nevada, chairman; Harley M. Kilgore, of West Virginia; James O. Eastland, of Mississippi; Warren G. Magnuson, of Washington; Herbert R. O'Conor, of Maryland; Frank P. Graham, of North Carolina; Estes Kefauver, of Tennessee; Alexander Wiley, of Wisconsin; Homer Ferguson, of Michigan; Forrest C. Donnell, of Missouri; William E. Jenner, of Indiana; and myself, carefully considered all the objections of the Office of Alien Property Custodian and of the War Claims Commission; and that committee, in its report to the Senate, unanimously waved aside these objections as meritless. The committee had voted unanimously for this amendment to the Trading With the Enemy Act.

When the bill came before the Senate, this body discussed it, adopted the committee report, and then passed the bill by unanimous vote. The Senate said to the Office of Alien Property, "You never should have confiscated these properties," for the committee report said:

> That such property is not enemy property within the strict sense of the word, nor is it enemy property within the spirit of the Trading With the Enemy Act. It is intrinsically and inherently American property. Said property was amassed and earned in America by American citizens. It remained in this country to aid and abet the Government in the way all property does, to a successful fruition of the war. Certainly, and no one would contend otherwise, it was not the desire of Congress, or the people of this country to seize such property.

Now if it is true—and it is true—that it was not the policy of the Congress of the United States nor of the people of the United States to confiscate such property, then whose policy was it? I charge it was the policy of Harry Dexter White, still carried on in the Office of Alien Property.

Any other agency in the Government, after having been turned down unanimously by the United States Senate on a position that it took on legislation, would have stopped right then and there, would have reexamined its position, and would have tried to get itself in line with the thinking of the Congress and with the thinking of the American people. But what did the Office of Alien Property do? After the Senate passed this legislation unanimously, they stopped it in the House of Representatives. They kept it from even getting onto the floor of the House, for they knew that the Members of the House of Representatives could and would take no different position than was taken by the United States Senate, and no different than the position of the American people. How did they do it? When the Senate bill reached the House, they succeeded in having it sent to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Why? Because they originated their confiscatory legislation in that committee, and they used the chairman of that committee. Representative ROBERT CROSSER, of Cleveland, as a cat's-paw. After hearings they persuaded him to pigeonhole it, they prevailed upon him to keep it even from a vote in his own committee. They did this, knowing the bill would die with the adjournment of the Eighty-first Congress. Now, I know that Representative CROSSER and the other members of his committee certainly do not want to play the game of Alien Property Custodian, which is weakening the will of our friends in Western Germany to resist Communist aggression.

When the Office of Alien Property first came forward with its objections to the Senate bill, which was drawn in such a way and was so fair and so just that it was almost impossible of belief that anyone could object to it, I began to wonder whose game was being played in the Office of Alien Property. What I have said here today is the result of my studies and discoveries, made since that time. What did the Office of Alien Property say, in effect, to the position taken by the Senate, that these properties should never have been confiscated, and that they were American properties? The Office of Alien Property said, in effect, "The United States Senate be damned, the will of the people of the United States be damned; we will carry on with our policies as long as we can keep the House of Representatives in the dark." Certainly, there can be no doubt about it that they are playing the Communist game, they are undermining the will of the people who are yet free to resist, and they are setting the stage and undermining our program which is to create in the people behind the iron curtain the will to become free.

At the time the Office of Alien Property Custodian objected to this legislation in the Senate I, for one, did not know all the facts about the connection of Hiss and White with all these things. I am frank to admit that I did not realize that they were playing a game which could have no other effect than to weaken the will of the German people to resist Communist aggression. And now let us observe how the Office of Alien Property is pushing the blame on Congress and on the American people. Their files are full of letters which they get from Western Germany, of letters from Christian German charitable institutions, hospitals, homes for the aged, homes for the blind, and orphanages operated by every Christian religious denomination in Germany. They get similar letters from Japan, asking about gifts, requests and trusts set up for them by their American friends, confiscated by the United States, and held by the Alien Property Custodian. If we investigate the Office of Alien Property we shall find that the Office replies to such letters about as follows:

> The bequest left you by American citizen * * * to carry on your worthy work of taking care of the blind (or the orphans, as the case may be) was confiscated by the United States Government as enemy property under Vesting Order No. ____. We do not believe that your organization qualifies for a return under the law enacted by Congress, unless you can establish that your organization suffered denial of substantial rights of German citizenship from the period 1941 to the end of the war by reason of racial, religious, or political persecution. We realize that your organization is an instrument of immense good to humanity, but unfortunately we are bound by the law.

Thus, they are now putting the blame on the Congress of the United States and on the people of the United States. They have not the courage to admit, in the same letter, that they are responsible for this situation, and that they do not want the bequest returned. I ask, who in the Office of Alien Property Custodian is doing work similar to what was done by Laurence Duggan, liaison man to Gerhard Eisler, No. 1 Communist, "to mess up policy, which was Duggan's job, in carrying out the policies for the Kremlin, to weaken the will of the German people to resist Communist aggression"? A Senate investigation of the Office of Alien Property will show innumerable cases of that type.

That is not all. Take the situation of the young men, who, not liking Hitler's policies, immigrated to the United States shortly before the outbreak of World War II, joined the United States Army, and were killed fighting for the United States. The Office of Alien Property has confiscated the GI insurance which they left to their mothers in Germany, and when these mothers write to the Office of Alien Property, they receive replies about as follows:

We deeply sympathize with you. Your son died in the fight for freedom, which we know must be a great source of consolation to you. This office realizes that you depended upon him for support, and also that he intended to bring you to the United States; but we are sorry that we cannot send you his GI insurance, which was confiscated by this office under Vesting Order No. —— because unfortunately the law will not permit it.

Once again, they do not have the courage or the guts to tell these mothers of American soldiers that they are responsible for the state of the law. Once again, they put the blame on the Congress of the United States, and on the American people. One asks himself whether there is in existence a deliberate policy playing directly into the hands of the Communists. And they get other letters, which read about as follows:

I worked in the German underground movement to overthrow Hitler. I can prove that conclusively. I was ordered to become a member of the Nazi Party to carry on underground work inside the party. I can prove that beyond a doubt. You have withheld the legacy left me by my American aunt. I would like to have it returned.

How does the Office of Alien Property answer those letters? They answer them about as follows:

The United States of America greatly appreciates your efforts on behalf of freedom, but unfortunately you were not caught by the Nazis, you were not substantially deprived of rights of citizenship by reason of religion, race, or politics, so this office is unable to return your legacy.

They again put the blame on the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States. They cover up the fact that they are responsible for the state of the law. Who is playing the game to weaken the will of these free people to resist Communist aggression? Mr. President, you know the answer, and we all now know the answer to this question.

As I have said before, the Trading With the Enemy Act was administered in part by the Office of Alien Property, in part by the Office of Foreign Funds Control, and in part by our State Department. Let us observe how Foreign Funds Control is playing into the hands of the Communists. Two weeks ago, they finally issued a blocking order freezing Chinese funds in the United States. Why did they not block these Chinese funds where ownership was in the hands of persons on the Chinese mainland under the control of the Communists, a year and a half ago, when Chiang Kai-shek was finally driven to Formosa? We know that the State Department had a hand in that. How many millions of dollars came into the control of Chinese Communists because Foreign Funds failed to Act? And what about the $50,000,000 released by Foreign Funds Control to the Polish Communist Government, control of which rightfully belonged to the democratic Polish Government in exile, actual ownership of which was in the Polish people, those who had relatives and friends in the United States, and who are our best hope in a resistance movement?

I should now like to return once more to a restatement of the policy of the Kremlin master plan of aggression, as we now know it to be. The plan requires, in all instances, carefully prepared campaigns; often subtle and often indirect; many times using causes, which in themselves are good, for evil ends; carried out over long periods of time; campaigns which have as their sole purpose the weakening of the will of the free people to resist Communist aggression when the time is ripe. In view of this master plan and in view of the fact that the Congress of the United States, because of these conspiracies and because of the work of fellow travelers, can no longer have confidence in agencies of Government that come before it sponsoring legislation, it becomes the duty of every Senator and every Representative to judge every request for specific legislation or every objection to legislation which the Congress has under consideration, on the following basis: Will what is proposed, or what is objected to, by these Government agencies tend to strengthen the will of the free people to resist, and strengthen the will of the people behind the iron curtain to resist, or will it weaken their will, as called for in the master plan of the Kremlin? I do not believe that we can from now on make any decisions without first asking ourselves that question and getting the true answers. In that regard, I shall offer a resolution which resolves that it is the desire of the Senate of the United States and of the people of the United States that the Office of Alien Property forthwith turn over to the West German Government the German Embassy Building and its grounds here on Fourteenth Street, in Washington, D. C., which that office confiscated, and which it proposes to sell to the highest bidder within 2 weeks; and that $50,000 be appropriated from the general funds of the United States to put the embassy in usable condition. This, for the reason that I understand the Office of Alien Property has deliberately let it run down to such an extent that it either has been or is scheduled to be condemned as a fire hazard. I am sure it can be put into a good state of repairs. Also, $25,000 should be appropriated from the general funds to refurnish the German Embassy. It has been suggested to me by economy-minded Senators—and I think their suggestions may be good—that we save the $25,000 for furnishings by taking the fine furniture from the Office of Alien Property, the office responsible for this mess.

Let us show the West German people that we intend to strengthen their will to resist, and that the Office of Alien Property does not speak for the Congress of the United States or for the people of the United States. I shall ask the United States Senate to take immediate action on this resolution, and to let the west German people know the facts, before the Communists use the proposed sale of the German Embassy Building as another means of weakening the will of the German people to resist.

A few weeks ago Senator HERBERT O'CONOR, Democrat of Maryland, Senators BUTLER and WHERRY, Republicans of Nebraska, and myself, reintroduced legislation to return American properties, seized by the Alien Property Custodian, arising out of gifts, bequests, inheritances, and trusts created by American citizens. It is known as Senate bill 172. The bill has been referred to the Senate Judiciary Committe for consideration, the same committee that unanimously approved it in the last session of Congress. However, in view of these new discoveries, I should like to recommend to the Judiciary Committee, with the consent of the Honorable Senator HERBERT O'CONOR, from Maryland, and the consent of the Honorable Senators KENNETH WHERRY and HUGH BUTLER, of Nebraska, to amend that bill, so that the thing which happened to German-Americans and Japanese-Americans will not happen to Czech-Americans, Polish-Americans, Rumanian-Americans, Bulgarian-Americans, Hungarian-Americans, Lithuanian-Americans, Latvian-Americans, Estonian-Americans, Ukrainian-Americans, Chinese-Americans, and Korean-Americans.

I should like to suggest that, in view of the gravity of the situation, and while there is yet time, such amendments may be of help in strengthening the will of the West German people to resist, and in strengthening the will of our friends behind the iron curtain to resist, the Honorable PAT MCCARRAN, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, call for a joint meeting with the House Judiciary Committee to immediately take steps to remedy this situation through proper concurrent legislation in the two Houses.

With the consent of the co-sponsors of Senate bill 172, I believe that, in view of all these disclosures, the bill should be amended to provide that all properties, or proceeds thereof, heretofore seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act, by the Office of Alien Property, or by any other agency of government, be returned to all persons of whatever national groups, and to all nations where such property rights arose out of gift, bequest, device, inheritance, or trust of an American citizen or national, provided that such claimant establishes that he or she did not willfully and intentionally become a member of the Nazi Party, the Communist Party, or any other subversive organization, does not believe in the overthrow of duly constituted government by force, and at no time was guilty of war crimes or crimes against humanity; the burden of proof to be upon said person. The amendment should provide further that hereafter, in any present or future conflict, in which the United States may find itself involved, the right of American citizens and American nationals to create any interest by gift, devise, bequest, inheritance, or by any trust for the benefit of any enemy alien, shall be held inviolate, and that such property shall not be subject to confiscation by the United States, but that such property shall be held in trust for such enemy alien by the courts having jurisdiction thereof, or, if there be none, then by an agency of government named by the President of the United States, subject to being used by the United States for the benefit of the United States for the successful ending of hostilities, at which time delivery shall be made to such enemy alien or his successor in interest; provided, that such enemy alien shall not have been guilty of war crimes, or crimes against humanity, during any such conflict, and shall not willfully and intentionally have been a member of the Communist Party or of any other subversive group, which said enemy alien shall prove by a preponderance of the evidence; and when a return of property is denied, said person shall have the right to appeal to Federal courts of the United States for final determination.

Mr. President, you will note I suggest that the same test be applied to an enemy for a return of his property as we have provided in the immigration bill. The test is that willful and intentional membership in a subversive organization bars immigration to the United States, and it should also bar the return of enemy property. When an individual can be admitted to the United States for eventual citizenship of the United States, even though he had belonged to a subversive organization, provided he can establish that his membership was not willful and intentional, but under duress and compulsion, then certainly the same test should be provided for a return of his property.

In view of the present situation, and in view of the fact that I am sure it is the intention of the Congress to do everything to strengthen the will of the West German population to resist Communist aggression, the Congress of the United States may also wish to give consideration to the matter of private trademarks and other properties taken by the Office of Alien Property; but there should be no delay in returning property, intrinsically and inherently American, to the German civilian population, and there should be no delay in protecting American citizens who came to this country from nations now enslaved by the Kremlin, by having their properties held inviolate in event the conflict spreads once again, in order to strengthen the will of people behind the iron curtain to resist communism.

This would not mean that we would return the properties of the Germans in the Russian zones, nor the properties of Rumanians, Hungarians, and Bulgarians, which was left them by their relatives in the United States. These should be frozen by foreign-funds control until the persons become free, and foreign-funds control should be prevented from turning these properties over to the Kremlin-controlled Communist governments. That is the way in which both the relatives in the United States, who have provided this property for them, and the people behind the iron curtain, who will eventually get it, want it to be.

The enactment of this legislation will do immeasurable good in the case of the Japanese and the Chinese people, who have property here. Let us thank God that we had General MacArthur in Japan, who prevented the carrying out of the Communist policies of oppression on the Japanese people as planned by the Kremlin. As a result of MacArthur's fight, the Japanese people have become democratic, and they now have the will to resist Communist aggression.

We all know how great the pressure was on General MacArthur, pressure to carry out the Kremlin's master plan in Japan, exactly as it has been carried out in Western Germany. The American people and the Japanese people will forever be grateful to General MacArthur for his stand.

I believe Members of the Senate will agree with me that an investigation of all agencies of Government having to do with the operations of the Trading With the Enemy Act is necessary and should be instituted immediately. We all remember that after World War I a Senate investigating committee turned up great scandals in that office. Those scandals had to do only with mismanagement and misappropriation of funds of that office. From what we know now, an investigation of that office will disclose chicanery of the gravest nature—chicanery, if not outright sabotage, which has furthered the plans of the Kremlin. I shall therefore submit a resolution tomorrow providing that the United States Senate immediately appoint a Senate Investigating Committee to examine every phase of the operations of the Trading With the Enemy Act, the Office of Alien Property, and the Office of Foreign Funds Control. I also include the State Department, whose policies were made by Alger Hiss and Harry Dexter White—to the present time, in order to find out those responsible for the policies that are playing into the hands of the Kremlin, with particular attention given to the effects its policies have had on the civilian population of Western Germany, its effects on the Japanese people, its effects on the friends of America behind the iron curtain, and last, but not least, the effect on American citizens, of all national groups, who have relatives in those countries. My resolution will call for the appropriation of $100,000 to carry on this investigation.

This does not mean, and I do not wish the people behind the iron curtain or the people of Western Germany to think that it means, that the Congress will not immediately take steps to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act, while there is yet time. Such amendments would show these people once and for all that the policies of the Office of Alien Property, the policies of Harry Dexter White and Alger Hiss were not the policies of the American people.

I should like to see the Honorable Senator RICHARD M. NIXON, whose work on the House Un-American Activities Committee did so much to uncover the Communist agents and their fellow travelers in our Government and to expose their Communist plans, become a member of this committee; and I should also like to see the Honorable Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin, who has done such admirable work in ferreting out Communits plans fostered by certain people in our Government, become a member of this committee.

We owe it to those men in the Office of Alien Property who have wanted no part in the plans of Harry Dexter White, many of whom resigned because they did not like what was going on, and many of whom stayed on, hoping for the day when things would change, to immediately begin this investigation, to find the guilty parties, and once and for all turn that agency away from policies which can only help the Kremlin, to truly American policies. I ask for an early consideration of this resolution. In closing let me repeat just once more the Kremlin master plan of aggression—to do all things, through carefully prepared campaigns, often subtle and often indirect, many times using causes, which in themselves are good for evil ends, carried out over long periods of time, which have as their sole purpose the weakening of the will of the free people to resist Kremlin Communist aggression when the time is ripe.

Mr. President, I wish now to take up another subject, which is connected with the matter of resolving differences in diplomacy, and the need of unceasing effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

THE NEED FOR UNCEASING EFFORT TO RESOLVE DIFFERENCES BY DIPLOMACY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the tragic events of recent weeks, and which are now unfolding on the field of battle, have initiated a debate on our foreign policy. Though this process, fundamental to a democracy, presents an aspect of disunity, I venture to say that it is fortunate for our country that the policy of the administration is being thus sharply questioned.

For a policy of exclusive or primary reliance on the accumulation of arms and armies has never served to maintain the peace. It has invariably culminated in war, and is likely to do so again. I believe that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is correct in saying that

"the course which we are pursuing will make war more likely."

It is not my purpose to attempt to discuss the whole range of administrative foreign policy. I am concerned here only with its attitude toward the conduct of negotiations with the Soviet Union.

As I understand that policy, it is one which holds that negotiation must await a time when we have attained what is referred to as situations of strength—when we have a certain number of divisions and tanks and planes, and when our Allies are similarly situated. An essential part of this plan involves the rearming of Germany.

But this vast effort may bring on countermeasures even including the world war which we all agree it is our prime purpose to avoid. Certainly there is reason to believe that an attempt to rearm Germany would have that effect. And recent events have made it quite clear that in the decisive area of the land army—the divisions in the field—we can hardly hope to establish a situation of relative superiority or even equality in the foreseeable future. The truth appears to be that while we have been suspending the practice of diplomacy during the past year, the balance of strength has not shifted in our direction.

The present course has not stopped local wars. It has not diminished the danger of a general holocaust. It has created the impression in many places that we are reluctant to attempt negotiations with the Soviet Union toward a peaceful settlement of differences. And now, in connection with the discussions in progress looking toward a four-power conference, the impression is created that we had to be forced by France and Great Britain into an agreement to participate in negotiations on any terms, and that we expect nothing to come of such a conference if it takes place.

Ferdinand Kuhn, the Washington Post reporter said to be close to the State Department, put it this way in a discussion of the proposed four-power conference, on Sunday, January 7, 1951: "If a conference is the price to pay for western unity, then Acheson will pay it. He cannot put the United States in the position of refusing a conference when his partners and his adversary want one."

I do not say that this is actually the attitude of the State Department. But it is the impression given to our people and the world. It also seems consistent with what the Secretary of State has been saying in the past, and with what the President said and omitted saying in his state of the Union message. The discussions concerning a four power conference were nowhere mentioned by the President. The President did say "We are willing, as we always have been, to negotiate honorable settlements with the Soviet Union." But this is a negative statement, suggesting that we will take no initiative. As I read it in the context of the President's message, and what the State Department is doing, it means essentially that if the opposing side will accept our terms, which it has already rejected, we will make agreements.

This policy, I submit, provides no basis for hope that we shall have a relaxation of tension and that the practice of effective diplomacy is suspended in favor of policies which seem to be founded on the view that war is inevitable.

I say that such a policy can only lead to disaster whether or not an agreement consistent with the aims of the United Nations and the interests of the United States can be reached through negotiation in good faith pursued with utmost energy and determination. For the American people and the people of Western Europe must know that every possible effort has been made by the United States to avoid war by diplomacy before they can be expected to give their wholehearted support to full-scale preparation for defense, and the war which may come if the present terrible tensions are not relieved.

I do not say that we must not arm for defense. That is, of course, necessary. But I do say that we must rely as much upon diplomacy as upon force. We must seize the diplomatic initiative from the Soviet Union. We must launch a great diplomatic campaign for peace. We must seek every opportunity to work for agreements in and out of the United Nations on any or all issues.

I do not suggest appeasement. I do not propose the abandonment of any fundamental principle. I do propose what negotiation has always meant—give and take on both sides.

It has been said that the word of the Soviet Union is no good; that it will not keep any agreement it makes. What is the good of making such agreements, we are asked? Even granting the total validity of this assertion as it applies to the readiness of the Soviet Union to break an agreement which no longer conforms to its interests, I believe that it does not justify a policy of continuing to suspend the effective practice of diplomacy.

I would point out first that we are prepared to enter into any agreements with the Soviet Union if it will accept our terms. It is then a question of terms and not of morality. For the less an agreement seems to the Soviet Union to conform to its interests, the sooner it can be expected to break it.

Moreover, I think it is correct to say that historically nations have made international agreements because they considered that the terms, taken as a whole, brought benefits, even if temporary, worthy of having rather than because they trusted the constancy or moral principles of the other party. It is equally true, I believe, that agreements concerning matters of great importance have been adhered to by governments because the interests which dictated their execution, or other national interests, continued to dictate their practical validity for the states concerned. The real question is whether it is reasonably possible to find a basis of agreement which conforms to the fundamental interests of both the Soviet Union and the other states concerned.

I think it is perfectly clear today that in a war involving the Soviet Union and the United States there could be no victor nation. At best there would be survivors. All notions concerning a push-button or mechanical war are by now fully exploded. Both sides will either find a way to live together in peace, or they will go down together in death and devastation.

The Soviet Union already knows that even with the few divisions we have, we can deliver terrible blows. They know now our vast potentiality for increasing our destructive power and delivering it many thousands of miles from our shores. To avoid that consequence of an effort to resolve differences by armed conflict, it is reasonable to expect that the Soviet Union would make and keep an agreement which did not involve surrender or appeasement on their side, because such an agreement would accord with their interests, if for no other reason.

That I believe is a basis for hope in negotiation. That is the hope which I believe we must explore endlessly, with utmost vigor and sincerity, and with a readiness to meet the Soviet Union halfway, if they display an equal disposition. I do not mean to minimize the difficulties and obstacles in the way of successful negotiation. They are undoubtedly enormous. They may well be insurmountable. But I say that there is no achievement open to mankind in our time which could equal the value of success in this effort. And I am unable to conceive of anything that could be lost if we now begin and continue this effort with a resourcefulness, determination, and tenacity at least equal to that we will now bring to increasing our military strength.

Today mankind demands statesmanship as never before. The function of statesmanship is not to make war but to avoid it.

Let us welcome the prospect of a four power conference and work for its realization, not deplore it. Let us go to the conference not warning of its futility, but determined to make it a success.

Our people want peace. The peoples of the world want peace. Let us exercise our historic role of leadership in such a manner that no man can ever say we failed in this critical hour to act as the preeminent champion of the fight for peace.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks an article entitled, "West Germans' Melting Pot a Failure So Far," from Bonn, Germany, which was published in the Chicago Daily Tribune on Monday, January 29, 1951.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WEST GERMANS' MELTING POT A FAILURE SO FAR

BONN, GERMANY, January 28.—West Germany's 9,000,000 refugees from the east feel they are being treated as second-class citizens and are showing their resentment.

They feel they have been discriminated against socially and politically in trying to get jobs or a place to live in and in education. They form a large proportion of the unemployed.

LACKED REPRESENTATION

Until recent elections in five states, the refugees had no parliamentary representation because the occupying nations would not allow them to organize politically. That decision was based on the belief that it would be better for them to become assimilated with the rest of the population and take their place within existing political parties.

But in the state elections the refugees put up candidates—largely right-wing Nationalists—and showed their power by polling a sizable vote. In refugee-crowded Schleswig-Holstein, where more than one-third of the population are refugees living in misery, they scored a resounding success by winning almost one-quarter of the vote in competition with both main established parties and special-interest splinter groups.

CHILLING RECEPTION

The failure of the refugees to merge with the local population is ascribed to two main reasons:

1. Their reluctance to give up hope of one day returning to their homelands in the east.

2. The chilling reception they have had in West Germany.

As the refugees comprise about one-fifth of the population, assimilation was bound to be long. But so far it has scarcely begun. Even the children have been unable to forget their origin and regard themselves as persons apart from the local people.

In the cities, places where refugees can meet have sprung up everywhere, usually in cafes. They can talk over their troubles, drinking East German schnapps such as Bears Tooth, Nikolaschke, or Pillkaller and eating their Koenigsberger klops and other regional dishes.

LIKE SOCIAL OUTCASTS

In small towns, villages, and the countryside, the contrast between refugees and local people is even more striking. Differentiated by dialect, religion, customs, and even clothing, they stand out almost as social outcasts.

When a refugee and a local workman go after the same job, it almost invariably goes to the local man. Refugee children have found that the local children obtain most of the places in the crowded secondary schools.

Especially unfortunate are the farmers. Thousands of skilled East German farmers are either unemployed or doing laborers' jobs.

Mr. LANGER. I yield the floor.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, February 8, 1951, at 12 o'clock meridian.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who hast blessed our beloved country so abundantly, we thank Thee for our Christian democracy which we have received and are enjoying as a priceless heritage.

We pray that the voice of America may bear clear and convincing testimony to men and nations everywhere that our democracy is not a self-centered, provincial, and political ideal but a dynamic spiritual principle and a way of life, bringing the richest blessings of freedom and opportunity to all mankind.

Grant that as fellow citizens we may feel that America's great hour has come when we must revive and strengthen the moral and spiritual foundation and qualities of our Republic if we are to survive and be an effective force in building a nobler civilization.

May all who hold positions of leadership and responsibility in church and state, during these days of world crisis, daily have the guidance of Thy spirit in their deliberations and decisions as they seek to do the will of God.

Hear us in the name of our blessed Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 2, 1951, was read and approved.

UNITED STATES TERRITORIAL EXPANSION MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 32, Seventy-third Congress, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN] as a member of the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission to fill an existing vacancy thereon.

BOY SCOUT WEEK

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a proclamation by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House the fact that the coming week is Boy Scout Week. We have many Members in this House who were Scouts themselves and many more who have been engaged in Scout work for many years. I hope the membership will find time to read the remarks which I will place in the RECORD, and especially the proclamation of the President regarding this important week.

From Maine to California, the Great Lakes to the Gulf, in every city, town, village, and crossroads, the forty-first anniversary of the Boy Scouts of America is being observed. To Boy Scout units, not only in the United States, but in Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, Guam, and other American territory, President Truman sent the following message:

To the Boy Scouts of America:

In sending you warm greetings and hearty congratulations on the occasion of Boy Scout Week, February 6 to 12—your forty-first anniversary—I speak for all patriotic citizens who believe Scouting is a bulwark against the evils of our time.

Scouting's determination to give to every boy the chance to absorb the benefits of the movement's program for physical, mental, moral, and spiritual development promises well for our Nation. In the days ahead we will need, as never before, men of high character, resolute purpose, and unflinching courage to meet successfully the problems of a challenging future.

Your enrollment of 17,500,000 members since 1910 and your present active membership of 2,750,000 as disclosed in official records is a great achievement. It speaks eloquently for our democratic way of helping boys through devoted volunteer leadership.

Your determination to continue with your campaign to strengthen the arm of liberty is most reassuring and merits sustained public approval. One and all, you have earned the confidence of our people and I salute you for your patriotic and selfless service.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The President has written eloquently of this great movement and all of us, I am sure, heartily concur with his timely and inspiring birthday greetings.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Yes, the Boy Scouts of America has earned the confidence of our people and has in these 41 years become deeply rooted in our national life as a great patriotic movement. Scouting is for all boys everywhere regardless of race, color, or religious belief. To the boys Scouting is fun, outdoor adventure, and fellowship. Boys become Scouts because they like to hike, to camp, to play, to learn how to do things. They like to belong to a gang, which in Scouting is the patrol. They like Scouting, too, because it is a man's life cut down to boy size, because they themselves are men in the making and are anxious to grow up.

Scouting gives a boy healthful outdoor adventure through its program of camping and hiking. A boy develops the ability to find his way in open country, to set up a shelter, build a campfire, and do many other things that develop self-reliance. Scouting also trains a boy to help other people in emergencies.

Over and above this program of skills is the Scout oath or promise by which a boy affirms his duty to God, his country, his fellow men, and himself.

Scout units are sponsored by the Nation's churches, schools, service clubs, veterans' posts, and other community institutions. Religious bodies of all major faiths, Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, and Mormon, sponsor Scouting on neighborhood basis; in fact more than half of the 78,716 Boy Scout units are sponsored by churches or synagogues. Scouts are trained to respect the convictions of others in matters of custom and religion.

The leadership of these units is in the hands of volunteer cubmasters, scoutmasters, and explorer advisers, and thousands of women are giving effective service as den mothers of Cub packs, for the younger boys.

The American people have come to recognize Scouting as a distinct asset to the community and their support of the movement has strengthened it in every part of the Nation. Scouting works closely with the home, the church, the school, and other basic institutions of our American life. The Boy Scouts of America is a ready and eager partner in every community effort to build boys into men of character and train them to be participating citizens. It is a program which develops physical fitness, courage, and high ideals of service to God and country.

As the President has stated in his Boy Scout Week message:

> In the days ahead we will need, as never before, men of high character, resolute purpose, and unflinching courage to meet successfully the problems of a challenging future.

Believe me, gentlemen, the Boy Scouts of America is doing an outstanding job in producing men of character trained for citizenship in our world of today. On the occasion of this forty-first anniversary we, too, salute the great patriotic service being given by the thousands upon thousands of volunteer leaders who are making this program so effective in the lives of American boys.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to address the House on Wednesday next for 15 minutes, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

BRITISH ADVICE TO GENERAL EISENHOWER

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in London they are worrying about American visitors who are coming there. From the Financial Post, of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, comes an interesting article bearing a London date line:

LONDON CALLING—HOW WILL BRITISH INDUSTRY GET ALONG WITH UNITED STATES ARMS PRODUCTION EXPEDITER?

(By Adelphi)

(While Adelphi is on holiday this column is being written by another distinguished British commentator.)

LONDON.—We will be glad to welcome Mr. William Rogers Herod from the United States next month for we are always glad to welcome any distinguished American, and Mr. Herod is an old friend who spent 3 years here in the thirties.

Nevertheless, there is just a little uneasiness about his visit. He comes here with an official title, long and cumbersome, and sinister. It is "Coordinator and Expediter of the North Atlantic Defense Production Board."

Well, now, that's quite a mouthful. But what is he going to do? The worry is that he is going to tell us what we are to do.

We are only too pleased to have anyone give us good advice on running our industries, but we are an obstinate people. We may listen politely and even nod agreement, yet we are still inclined to think we know best.

WHERE WILL EISENHOWER FIND HIS TROOPS?

We are, of course, getting used to American visitors. We have General Eisenhower who has been spinning round Europe like a tee-to-tum.

A few hours in every capital city of Western Europe and a hasty visit to Iceland and—hey presto—the thing is done. That was General Eisenhower reviewing his troops. The reason he gets through it all so quickly is that the troops are not so numerous as to engage a lot of his time. Having had a look around Europe no wonder he is going peering into the igloos of Iceland to see if he can find some chaps there.

I imagine the General will return to the United States a somewhat worried man. For in present circumstances it is not easy to raise a European army comparable to the 60 or 70 divisions which the Russians have on our western front.

Meanwhile the dispute goes on as to whether to mobilize the Germans or not. This is likely to be an exhausting discussion when it is realized that the Government here has not yet made up its mind about mobilizing our own manpower.

The men released from the services at the end of the last war remain on a reserve. There is talk of recalling some of them for a refresher course. But the people here have a marked reluctance to wearing uniform in peactime; the Germans love it. So it may be that they will get the first army after all.

DEFENSE BILL HAS CHANCELOR WORRIED

No less important than men is money. How are we going to pay for all these defense preparations? This is what is worrying young Hugh Gaitskell, the new 44-year-old Chancelor of the Exchequer.

It is worrying a lot of other people too. Yet there is a cheerful resignation about it all, for the tax-ridden public metaphorically shrugs its shoulders and says "Well, they can't get any more out of me; they are taking the maximum already."

A year or so ago when Mr. Gaitskell was Minister of Fuel he burst into tears at a miners' meeting. He was crying at the failure of his beloved nationalization to produce coal. A very natural reaction for anyone who had grown up with the kind of adolescent hang-over which led him to suppose it would.

Now at the time of the last budget the conservative opposition warned the then Chancelor Sir Stafford Cripps and Mr. Gaitskell (who had become his right-hand man) that they were using up all the national resources on their socialism and that in an emergency there would be no slack to take up.

Did Cripps and Gaitskell listen? No. They knew better, just as Gaitskell did about coal nationalization.

It would be all right if it ended there. Unhappily it does not. I could leave Mr. Gaitskell sobbing quietly in a corner by the hour. But he has got to make up his mind whether he is going to raise this money out of taxation or by a new defense loan.

Obviously a loan is the answer but he knows as well as the next man that the cheap-money days are over. He could not get a loan now at less than 4 percent. And then what would happen? He would have his old crony, Dr. Dalton, the apostle of the cheap-money policy, booming at him. And that is enough to make anyone cry?

Indeed, if the doctor starts having a finger in our financial pie then we shall all have good reason to cry.

HOW SOCIALISTS SWEEP EXPERT ADVICE ASIDE

It was Oliver Lyttleton, member of Parliament and a wartime Minister, who led the shouts of warning to the Treasury of the dangers ahead.

But the planners took no heed of him. He was just a financier and a leading industrialist and a great figure in the city of London. He had been in trade, industry, commerce, and the money market all his life. Worse still, he had made a success of it. So what could be possibly know about? They swept him aside.

PERSONAL TAX EXEMPTIONS

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, in the drive to increase taxes there should be no attempt to lower the personal exemption from $600 to $500 or any figure below $600. To do so would put an unjust burden on millions of fine self-supporting Americans who have always had to work hard and manage well to make ends meet. I am opposed to lowering the personal exemption. It was raised to its present level by the Republican Eightieth Congress.

A lowering of the personal exemption from $600 to $500 would increase the direct taxes about $10 per month for the individual who has a family of three or four children. This should not be done.

We are told that we are in an emergency and that sacrifice is necessary. In that case let those connected with the Government set the example. In times of high taxes we should make every attempt to be fair. Politicians should certainly not have an advantage. I favor the repeal of the tax-exemption status for part of the income paid to the President and Members of Congress. Let the rules for determining business deductions be applied to these officials in the same manner that it is applied to taxpayers back home. They should have the same treatment but no more.

Mr. Speaker, there are countless people in every community who because of their strong character have always been self-sustaining in spite of great odds. They have never been relieved by the Government or anyone else. With the high cost of living brought about largely by Government spending policies and by high taxes, both direct and indirect, these people are finding it most difficult to get along. Unless balance and sanity are brought into our spending and tax programs, great numbers of these splendid citizens will be removed from the role of self-sustaining individuals. Recently I received a letter from a working girl in one of the towns in my district. I want to quote portions of that letter, as follows:

DEAR MR. CURTIS: It appears that it is going to be necessary to raise more taxes this year, and the solution most commonly advanced is to lower the income tax exemption. I thought perhaps you would be interested in seeing how one typical Nebraska stenographer's pay is spent, and perhaps you will agree that while the income tax laws do need a revision, it is not in the manner suggested.

I earn $25 a week which is a very ordinary and usual wage for stenographers and salesgirls in Nebraska. My weekly deductions are as follows:

Income tax	$2.30
Social security	.38
Health insurance	.75
Life insurance	1.20
Contribution to support of dependent brother	3.50
Board and room (2 meals a day)	12.00
Lunch at noon (sandwich and coffee on weekdays and 60 cents on Sundays)	2.10
Balance left for clothing, dental bills, entertainment, Christmas gifts, personal tax and all other incidentals	2.77

And there you have it. I wonder how many Congressmen would enjoy such a prospect, multiplied by 52 weeks. You will note that I contribute $3.50 per week to a dependent brother. This represents my proportionate share toward his support, taking into consideration my income and other expenses. The amount I contribute represents 14 percent of my gross income, but I am allowed no income-tax exemption for this expenditure because it does not represent "chief support." While it is true that this amount does not represent his chief support, it is equally true that a deduction of $3.50 makes a very big hole in $25. * * *

I realize I could earn much more money if I changed my position but for personal reasons it is impossible for me to do so. * * * I have studied over my expenditures very carefully and have come to the conclusion that I have a choice between going without any noon lunch and cutting out my life insurance and health insurance. Inasmuch as my health is poor and I have quite an investment in the life insurance policy, I would like very much to keep both my insurance policies, but on the other hand since I am already 25 pounds underweight, I would also like to have a noon lunch. Apparently I cannot have both. My position is no different from many other persons existing (not living) on a small fixed income, and certainly there are many of them. I am not a believer in "taxing the rich," on the contrary, I believe every citizen should pay his fair share toward maintaining his Government, but I do not think that taxes should be increased on low income groups when its effect will be to deny them the necessities of life, while the only effect of raising taxes on the higher income groups would be to deny them some of the luxuries of life. Surely a noon lunch is more important than a television set, is it not? * * *

I am writing you because I know it has always been your policy to work for fair tax legislation. I can assure you that I and many other persons earning only a small salary will appreciate anything you can do in our behalf.

Respectfully yours.

There are those who will say that individuals working for $25 a week or less should be paid more. The facts are that whether it is desirable or not many, many people must live on a fixed income of wages, or savings, and rents in these small amounts. It is easy to say that an employed person in such circumstances should go elsewhere to work. There may be good and valid reasons for not changing their location and their employment.

As one member of the Committee on Ways and Means whose responsibility it is to recommend taxes to this House, I do not propose to see this great group of splendid citizens destroyed.

TRAIN THE BOYS BEFORE SENDING THEM TO COMBAT

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to read to the House a small news item from one of the newspapers I publish. It contains a story that I believe is of most vital importance to every Member of this body. I read:

Pvt. Wilbur Sweney, 22, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Sweney, of Lebanon, Route 2, who had been wounded in action in Korea, died January 16, in a hospital in Japan. Private Sweney had been in service only 3 months and 3 days, his family reports. He is the third Warren countian to die in the Korean conflict. He left Lebanon October 13 for induction.

Mr. Speaker, this boy was taken from the Warren County farm, sent by bus to Cincinnati, where he was inducted into the Armed Forces on October 13, presumably sent to some training camp, shipped across the continent to the west coast, then across the Pacific to Korea, sent into battle where he was wounded, and transferred to the hospital in Japan, where he died on January 16, 3 months and 3 days after his induction.

I am wondering just how much military training this boy had. How well he was prepared to engaged in battle. I am also wondering just how sincere and honest some of our military leaders are when they attempt to tell us here in the Congress they will see to it every boy taken under the draft is given adequate and complete training in preparation for military service before they are sent overseas.

I say to you, sirs, such situations as I have described are an outrage.

REDUCE LEAVE OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, if the President and this Congress really want to make savings in the cost of the Government by reducing nonmilitary expenses, I am introducing a bill that will make it possible to save $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 in the next fiscal year and every year thereafter during our present emergency.

My bill will cut back the present 26-day annual leave for all Federal civilian employees in the executive department of the Government to 15 days' annual leave with pay, on and after June 30, 1951.

This will affect only about 1,500,000 civilian employees who are now receiving 26 days' annual vacation leave with pay. It will not affect the 500,000 postal workers who have never received more than 15 days' annual leave with pay.

Based on the approximate 1,500,000 civilian employees it would make a saving of from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 during the coming year. It would probably reach $250,000,000 because doubtless 500,000 new additional employees will be added to the payroll between now and the end of fiscal year 1952.

If those now enjoying 26 days' annual leave are cut back to 15 days, they will, in fact, receive 3 weeks' leave with pay because Federal employees work only 5 days a week, 8 hours a day. It should be pointed out that those who work more than 40 hours a week receive increased overtime pay.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that a Nation-wide study made by the Civil Service Commission and other departments of the Government to determine leave without pay granted throughout the Nation by private business and industrial firms over a year ago reported 15 days' leave with pay is the customary standard policy of such firms and private businesses.

If this legislation is enacted it will keep leave of Federal employees in line with employees in private business.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that something be done to lower the load on the Government which derives its taxes from the people who are, in fact, the Government.

Federal civilian payrolls are now costing the people $7,500,000,000 a year based on 2,000,000 employees. Thousands are being added to the Federal civilian payrolls weekly. The number of employees may soon reach a peak of 3,000,000 which would increase the cost of civilian Federal employment alone to over $11,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, for 52 weeks of the year the average workweek is 40 hours or a total of 2,080 work hours a year including legal holidays.

About 10 percent of all this working time is allocated to annual leave. At present the cost of annual leave—for which no compensatory work is done—amounts to approximately $750,000,000 a year.

In these trying times no one working for the Government should object to working at least 95 percent of the time for which he is paid.

I think it is not asking too much if this reduction in leave is written into law.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed legislation also provides that beginning July 1, 1951, all leave thereafter accruing during the year must be used during the fiscal year in which the same is earned.

This will stop the unwise practice of allowing annual leave to accrue. It may be interesting to the Congress, and I am sure will be to the people, to know that accrued annual leave which has not been used up by the employees in the past has now reached the amount of $581,000,000, a liability the Government will have to pay.

My bill does not affect or prevent the payment of this annual leave already accrued under existing statutes.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the 26 days' annual leave at present, these Federal employees are entitled under the present law to 15 days' annual sick-leave allowance, which is also not affected under this proposed legislation. It is not proposed at this time to reduce the 15-day annual sick-leave allowance, but it might be well to tighten up the regulations governing it to make the abuses of malingering impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this legislation may have the endorsement of the executive department of the Government and the approval of the Congress at an early date so that it may go into operation with its benefits to the Government in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1951.

If a Federal employee takes advantage of the 8 holidays, the 26 days' vacation, the 15 days' sick leave, and the great majority of them do, they only work 212 days out of 365. Their net working time is only 1,688 hours, and on a 5-day-week average, instead of 40 hours, they work 32 hours and 27 minutes a week.

It figures out this way. There are 52 Sundays and 52 Saturdays they do not work, unless occasionally and then they draw overtime for the amount they do work over 40 hours a week. Add to this 8 national holidays, 26 days' leave with pay, and 15 days' sick leave and you have a total of 153 days that are not worked. This subtracted from 365 days in the year leaves 212 workdays in the present setup.

In addition to a steady job and sure pay, the Federal worker has the benefit of a liberal retirement, a part of which is paid for by the worker and a part of it by the Federal Government drawn from taxes of all of the people. In fact, millions of dollars each year is added by the Federal Government to the trust fund out of which Federal workers receive their annual retirement when they leave Government service. The President has said, and wisely so, that all of us must make sacrifices in higher taxes and in tightening our belts so that we may pay the expenses of Government without adding further to the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation, if approved, will help to keep down appropriations from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year. It does not reduce salaries, and it throws no one out of employment.

I believe the great majority of the patriotic Federal workers will be willing to make this light sacrifice, and it is light compared with the sacrifice our soldiers must make, to help to protect the solvency of our Government.

This is only one of hundreds of departments of Government that must make their equal sacrifice. The retirement Federal workers have helped to pay for along with Government which they hope to draw in future years after being separated from the Government, will all be lost and there will be no retirement checks coming in the future if we continue to pile up this national debt till we destroy the purchasing power of the dollar and wreck our Government financially.

The Congress has voted for many raises for Federal employees. It is not my purpose to single out one group of our good American citizens, the great majority of whom have been doing a splendid job for the Government, asking them to make the special sacrifice.

All groups and all American citizens are going to have to make equal, and in many instances, much greater sacrifices in the trying days ahead.

I am inserting herein a copy of the bill I have introduced:

A bill to reduce the annual leave of Federal officers and employees to 15 days during the continuance of the existing national emergency, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1951, and during the continuance of the present national emergency proclaimed by the President on December 16, 1950, annual leave with pay shall be granted and allowed to civilian officers and employees of the Government of the United States whose appointments are on an annual or monthly basis at the rate of not to exceed 15 working days per annum. No such annual leave shall be accrued and carried forward from one fiscal year to another fiscal year, but shall be taken and used during the fiscal year in which the same shall be earned from and after July 1, 1951: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting any annual leave that has heretofore been or shall be accrued to and including June 30, 1951.

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby suspended during the continuance of the existing national emergency proclaimed by the President by Proclamation numbered 2914 of December 16, 1950.

RESULT OF POLL CONDUCTED BY RADIO STATION KSUM, FAIRMONT, MINN.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, radio station KSUM at Fairmont, Minn., has just rendered a significant public service. Over a 1-week period ending January 30, this station submitted a poll of two questions to the people of the area it serves:

Question No. 1: "Should we pull out of Korea?" received 1,323 answers. One thousand one hundred and seventy-five, or 89 percent, said "Yes."

Question No. 2: "Who should determine whether American troops be sent overseas, Congress or the President?" received 1,291 answers. One thousand two hundred and fifty-one, or 97 percent, said Congress should make the decision.

Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to be an expert on foreign thinking and foreign morale, but I do claim to know something about American thinking and American morale.

Mr. Speaker, to those who lead nations or armies, morale is the greatest factor in victory or defeat.

Now is the time that all who love and are charged with preserving this country do some realistic thinking, before it is too late.

POLL CONDUCTED BY THE SANTA MONICA INDEPENDENT, SANTA MONICA, CALIF.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago one of the newspapers in my district, the Santa Monica Independent, initiated a poll of its readers to determine, if possible, the thinking of people in the area covered by the Independent on several vital foreign-policy matters. The results of the poll have been communicated to me by the editors of the paper, and I think that they are interesting enough to merit inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It should be remarked that the Independent is not a partisan publication, nor do the editors generally take any position with respect to the implementation of foreign policy which might be construed by its readers as evidencing a bias in either direction on controversial issues. There is every reason to believe that the publication sought to obtain an honest and objective round-up of current thinking on the questions posed.

The outcome of the poll represents no surprise to me, but rather confirms my convictions as expressed so often here on the floor of the House, both before the Korean expedition and following the Communist counterattacks. For many months I have pointed out time and again that Korea was the last spot on earth that we should have chosen for a test of strength with the military forces of communism. Geography, topography, communications, logistical factors were all weighed against this Nation in reckoning the chances of ultimate success for our arms; and even assuming ultimate success, recorded military and naval testimony before the committees of Congress has invariably indicated serious doubts in the minds of qualified witnesses as to the value of the operation. That Korea did not figure in the concept of the defense of the United States was admitted publicly by no less an authority than the Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, who placed Korea outside the perimeter of our defense line in the Pacific.

The operation in Korea has not been a military success. Our forces have suffered severe losses to this time, and the end is by no means in sight. An ever-mounting wave of public opinion is demanding withdrawal of United Nations forces from the Korean peninsula.

The Independent's poll consisted of seven questions, as indicated below. I think that it will be interesting to the Congress to see how readers responded, and for that reason the final results follow:

First. Should the United States withdraw from Korea? Yes, 78.16 percent; no, 21.12 percent; no opinion, 0.72 percent.

Second. Should the United States send more troops to Europe? Yes, 60.56 percent; no, 37.32 percent; no opinion, 2.11 percent.

Third. Should the United States withdraw to the defenses of the Western Hemisphere and build them up? Yes, 50.70 percent; no, 41.55 percent; no opinion, 7.75 percent.

Fourth. Should the United States launch an all-out attack against Red China, including the use of the atom bomb? Yes, 19.01 percent; no, 78.88 percent; no opinion, 2.11 percent.

Fifth. Should the United States abandon Formosa and allow Red China into the United Nations? Yes, 46.48 percent; no, 50.71 percent; no opinion, 2.81 percent.

Sixth. Should the United States rearm Germany? Yes, 36.17 percent; no, 52.48 percent; no opinion, 11.34 percent.

Seventh. Should the United States quit the United Nations? Yes, 43.67 percent; no, 54.22 percent; no opinion, 2.11 percent.

LENTEN SERVICES

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, in this hour of decision the fate of mankind mostly rests on our moral strength and spiritual faith and understanding.

As we approach this Lenten season the Christian world is faced with great challenges which will be successfully met through faith and a close adherence to the deep spiritual traditions upon which our Nation is founded.

I would like to call to the attention of the Members the daily 20-minute Lenten service for the Capitol Hill community at the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, opposite the Folger Shakespeare Library. These services have been conducted for some years and have given new inspiration and understanding to those of us on the Hill who have attended them.

The church is within quick walking distance of the House and Senate Office Buildings and the Capitol. The service is held each weekday from 12:10 to 12:30 except Saturdays. Speakers each day will be ministers of the various Protestant denominations of the Washington area. Everyone will be welcome.

I commend these services to my fellow Members of the Congress for their personal attendance. I also would like to suggest that we make it possible for our staff members to attend. The services start on Ash Wednesday, February 7, and continue through Lent.

GENERAL EISENHOWER

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress and the American people were sold a bill of goods that General Eisenhower toured Europe and ascertained whether we have allies in fact as well as in name.

He returned without specific information, as he blandly admitted before the joint meeting of Congress. And his radio speech to the Nation last Friday evening was saturated with "ifs."

According to Eisenhower, if England, if France, if Italy, if Holland, if all the rest can rise to the patriotic grandeur of their forefathers, we might get some help.

Does he mean the kind of help we are not getting in Korea?

In other words, and according to the Eisenhower formula, if we provide the ham, we will be sure to have ham and eggs—if we also provide the eggs.

REVISION OF IMMIGRATION, NATURALIZATION, AND NATIONALITY LAWS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a bill to revise the laws relating to immigration, naturalization, and nationality, and it is my desire at this time to draw the attention of the House and of the American public to this important legislation. It is long overdue and its introduction and enactment has been urged by every interested branch of Government, by the legal profession, and by numerous social and religious groups helping the new immigrants and concerned with the civic education of our future fellow citizens.

My bill is similar but not entirely identical with the bill, S. 716, introduced in the other body by the senior Senator from Nevada. It represents the final product of painstaking research and careful drafting done in cooperation with the Department of State and the Department of Justice. It certainly is not the last word of what we would like to see on our statute books. In many respects it does not even reflect my own views and no department of the administration has officially reported on it at this time.

My purpose in introducing it is to provide for a companion bill in the House, thus permitting us to hold joint hearings with our colleagues from the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. We intend to open hearings in about 4 weeks and we invite every interested person and organization to give us the benefit of their views.

My bill is designed to supersede a true maze of laws and amendments as they have accumulated through the years and to write a single, comprehensive and modernized Immigration and Nationality Code without departing from the basic thought governing our immigration policy since 1917, namely, the quota system based on the principle of national origin.

It appears to me that the present world situation is being rather satisfactorily reflected in this proposed legislation. While on the one hand we intend to correct certain shortcomings of our immigration and naturalization laws hampering the free and highly desirable international exchange of skills, scientific experiences, and professional abilities by the free nations of the world, on the other hands we have taken notice of the activities of subversive element inspired and directed by our enemies and we have tried to the best of our abilities to strengthen the safeguards protecting the internal security of this Nation. We believe that we are providing in this bill for more equitable means of preventing the separation of families. We have also incorporated into this bill certain legislative proposals hereto favorably acted upon by the House, such as the bill sponsored by the able gentleman from Minnesota [Dr. WALTER H. JUDD] repealing the remaining racial exclusion clauses of our immigration laws and granting minimum immigration quotas to every independent nation of the Orient. I can assure the House that an effort will be made to have this vital legislation extensively debated by the public and by the Congress but it is our earnest desire to expedite our work so as to be able to take final action on a bill, which I hope will emerge in improved form and shape from the Committees on the Judiciary of both Houses before this session of Congress adjourns.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT ACT

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to advise my colleagues that H. R. 1612, legislation to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, will be up on Wednesday in the amendment stage. In this connection I would like to call the attention of all Members of the House to the RECORD of last Friday on page A557 of the Appendix, where you will find a critical analysis of the existing so-called escape clause in these trade pacts. I trust everyone will have an opportunity to read it because it will concern an amendment on Wednesday. I propose to offer an amendment to provide an avenue of escape for all harassed industries, particularly during this period when the American Government is freezing so many critical materials, and therefore not available for domestic manufacture.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FORRESTER] be granted leave of absence for several days to attend a funeral in his district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a young marine lieutenant, here for the week end, asked me to do him a favor. He desired to send a marine lieutenant's trench coat to one of his friends who in a few days will be on his way to Korea. During the past few days, we have experienced cold weather here in Washington. From the reports coming to us from Korea, it is much colder there. I gladly agreed to send the coat to the young marine. This morning I went to the post office, after having had the garment properly packed, and requested that it be mailed first-class and insured. The package met all the postal requirements as to size and weight but was not accepted for mailing by reason of the railroad strike and embargo. Surely this is a deplorable plight. It is a concrete example of how this strike is impeding and interfering with the progress of the war. How anyone could condone or justify such acts is beyond my comprehension. I believe that there is adequate legal authority for dealing with such treasonable acts. Of course it is incumbent upon the executive department of the Government to see that the laws are enforced. If it appears that there is not sufficient legal authority to deal with a situation such as this, then we should immediately proceed with the enactment of proper legislation. Let it not be said that those of us who are calling young men from their homes daily for military service in foreign countries failed to make provision for their comfort and safety.

MILITARY MANPOWER DEMANDS

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, the most difficult question that confronts Congress today in its preparedness program is manpower, which involves the critical decision of drafting either 18-year-olds or veterans and fathers.

This decision—the most difficult of all—will require deep courage on the part of every Member of Congress.

Our present draft program of 19 to 26 is not sufficient to meet manpower demands.

It will not be sufficient to meet military manpower demands under any proposal yet submitted.

The great area of dispute, as I see it, lies in determining the best means of halting Russian aggression. Three major proposals have been offered.

One is the proposal of complete mobilization and combat with the enemy. This is the proposal of Governor Dewey, the titular leader of the Republican Party.

Another is the proposal to abandon Europe and Asia to the Communists, and leave only outposts in England and Japan. This is basically the proposal offered by the Honorable Herbert Hoover, our only living ex-President and a Republican elder statesman. Mr. Hoover, in the eyes of many in his party, has more claim to leadership than Governor Dewey. Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, referred to in the press as "Mr. Republican," subscribes to this policy, and is an active advocate of it in the other body. It has also found vocal support from the Honorable Joseph Kennedy, a former Ambassador to Great Britain and a leading Democrat.

Finally there is the policy of the administration. A policy of containing Russia; of bolstering the ability of allies to resist Russia; and of building up areas of strength from which to bargain, or, if full-scale warfare is required, areas from which to attack Russian military forces and strategic positions.

While the specific proposals of former President Hoover, former Ambassador Kennedy, and Senator Taft differ somewhat in detail, they are essentially identical. I do not believe they meet the test of what is best for the United States. If the recommendations of Mr. Hoover or Senator Taft are adopted, I believe we would be forced to withdraw even from Japan and England—especially from England. This would return our defense line to the limitations suggested by Mr. Kennedy, so the major distinctions between these positions become more or less academic.

What would be the result of the Taft-Hoover-Kennedy program? It would immeasurably strengthen Soviet Russia. Her strategic position would be greatly enhanced. Russia could get at the United States much more easily. If war comes—and I believe it would be an inevitable result of the Taft-Hoover-Kennedy proposals—our ability to wage it would be greatly weakened.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the time to list in detail the military advantages which would be Russia's if she controlled all the world except the Western Hemisphere and the few Pacific and Atlantic islands which would lie within our defense perimeter. This has been done enough times in our Congress and in our media for public comment to be familiar to all. Russia's manpower and industrial resources would be greater than ours.

If "pulling in our horns"—so to speak—as proposed by Mr. Hoover, Senator Taft, and Mr. Kennedy, and those who support their position, were a guaranty of lasting peace, I would support that position. I would support it even though it strengthens Russia and means living in a domestic economy, calling for a tremendous military budget and a tremendous number of our people in uniform.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that proponents of this program set forth the theory that we need only strong sea-air forces, but relatively little in the way of ground forces. In my opinion, this is an absolutely false premise. If we were to grant—and I do not so grant—that we would not require ground forces to aggressively engage the enemy in combat, we would still have to maintain a large standing army. In order to properly patrol our perimeter, we would need advance bases. These bases for sea-air power would have to be protected by ground forces. Perhaps in the case of our naval bases, protection could be afforded by marines—but these would still be ground forces, and would be a drain on our manpower.

Mr. Speaker, my main reason for opposing this proposal is that I believe it will make war with Russia—a stronger and even more formidable Russia—inevitable.

History has shown us that no aggressor ever stops of his own accord. He must be stopped. Sometimes it has been possible to halt aggression by strong diplomatic measures. Generally, aggression has had to be stopped by force of arms.

Diplomatic measures have been effective, only when an aggressor realizes that his diplomatic opponents are backed by military strength.

By turning over all of Europe and Asia, and probably losing England, we would be permitting Russian aggression to reach a point where our diplomatic overtures for peace would have no weight whatsoever. We would be forced to fight or surrender.

There is, Mr. Speaker, still another reason for opposing the proposals of Mr. Hoover, Senator Taft, and Mr. Kennedy. If we follow this course, we shall be playing right into the hands of Russian diplomacy—the goal of which is to drive a wedge between the United States and the Western European powers.

I should be the last person on earth to imply that the honorable and patriotic gentlemen who propose this course are motivated by any desire to play into the hands of Russia. To these distinguished gentlemen, I attribute only the highest of patriotic motives. In my opinion, they have reached their positions only after serious and sober weighing of all facts at their command. But—I also believe what they proposed would be as helpful to the grand strategy of the Kremlin as any proposal by the Politburo itself.

Mr. Speaker, as I see it, if we lost Europe, we would also lose most of our Western Hemisphere allies. It is human nature to want to be on the winning side. Once a bandwagon is rolling, it gathers passengers as it goes on. I am firmly convinced that the hard core of Communists in some of our neighboring lands would find their tasks made easier with the compelling bandwagon argument to back up their nefarious propoganda.

Before proceeding to analyze alternative courses, I believe a word of explanation is due Members. I have emphasized the political affiliations of the principal advocates of the foreign policy proposal just discussed. I shall also emphasize the political affiliation of advocates of alternative policies. I do this, Mr. Speaker, to highlight that thinking is not along partisan lines.

Two leading Republicans and one leading Democrat have given voice to the proposal just discussed. Both Republicans and Democrats are found as leading advocates of alternative proposals. Whatever course is followed, we find bipartisanship in its advocacy.

The policy, Mr. Speaker, which I believe best meets the test of what is good for the United States, is the policy of containment being followed by the administration. It has become known in the public press as the Truman-Acheson policy, but it is a continuation of the bipartisan policy in which the distinguished Senator VANDENBERG and our beloved colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, Dr. EATON, had so much a part.

The Honorable John Foster Dulles, a former Republican Senator, had a hand in its formulation, and assists in its implementation. By roll call votes in this House, and in the other body, many other Republicans have indicated their support. It too is bipartisan, although it does not have the support of all Democrats, and it does not have the support of all the Republicans.

This is a policy aimed at halting Russian aggression. To do this, we have embarked on a program of building up those nations who will fight Russian aggression. We have had some notable successes. Greece and Turkey are two outstanding examples. The Marshall plan of building up the economic strength of anti-Communist Western Europe has been, and is continuing to be successful.

We were effective in stopping the rise of communism in Italy. We have driven a breach in the iron curtain by weaning Tito—himself a Communist—from the lap of the Kremlin.

Its chief aim is to build up areas of strength from which to bargain with Russia. It is predicated upon building the United Nations into an effective vehicle for maintaining world peace. If successful, this policy will bring peace. If it fails in its primary mission, it has the collateral benefit of building up the war potential of our allies to assist in military operations.

This policy, Mr. Speaker, offers no guarantee of peaceful settlement of problems arsing from Russian aggression. But it most assuredly strengthens the hands of the United States and our allies in dealing with these problems through diplomatic channels. And if war comes, we are in a better position for prosecution than if we follow the Hoover-Taft-Kennedy alternative.

There is a third alternative proposal. It was given voice by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey. Briefly, Mr. Dewey wants full mobilization now—to the extent of 200 divisions. In effect, this means war with Russia now. Mr. Dewey does not suggest actual combat, but I believe that would be the direct result.

I shall not discuss this proposal, because I believe it is merely an extension of our present program. It merely presupposes that diplomacy will not do the trick, and that our sole hope lies in military measures.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to a second set of serious decisions Congress must make. As I see it, no matter which way we move, no matter which of the three proposals for dealing with Russian aggression we adopt, we must mobilize to a greater extent than we at present find ourselves.

Even the Hoover-Taft-Kennedy proposal of tightening our perimeter, and depending largely on sea-air power, calls for manpower. Even if we do not maintain Ground Forces for offensive combat, we must have large numbers of ground troops to protect the advance bases. None of the proposals will do other than make heavy demands on our Treasury. Industrial capacity must be diverted to military production in greater proportion.

The die has been cast on taxes, but the end is not yet in sight. The die has been cast on controls over our economic life. In fact, the people have demanded faster action than has been displayed so far—and, firmer action.

The manpower decision is the one which Congress must make. This choice is going to be the most difficult of all. Our present draft program of 19–26 is not sufficient to meet manpower demands. It will not be sufficient to meet military manpower demands under any proposal yet submitted.

Congress must decide whether we shall take 18-year-olds, or whether we shall take veterans and fathers. Many of the veterans were called up when they were 18. If total mobilization becomes necessary, we must take all, and we shall have no choice.

Mr. Speaker, the decision I must make shall indeed require courage on my part. I believe this can be said of every Member of the House. I do not know, at this time, how I shall vote when the issue is drawn. I constantly think of the two alternatives. I read, I think, and I search for a third alternative. One which will meet the necessities of the crisis we face. I find none. No alternative which will relieve me of this distasteful decision. It must be "either-or." Either 18-year-olds, or veterans and fathers. Which shall it be?

I do not want to draft 18-year-olds. Congress does not approve this course, but we may reluctantly authorize it. How easy it would be, Mr. Speaker, to say "No" to this proposal, and thus ease the minds and hearts of millions of American mothers. If we follow the dictates of our emotions, that would be the vote each of us would cast. It would be an easy way out; it might win votes.

Such a course would be beneficial, Mr. Speaker, if we did not have to meet manpower requirements from another source—this other source being veterans and fathers. A "Nay" vote to this alternate proposal would be easy also, and one we would make, if we followed our emotions. What a great relief this would be to millions of American mothers, whose sons served during World War II—many of them going to the colors at the age of 18. Again—what a great relief this would be to millions of American wives of these veterans with small children. Again, too, such a course might win votes.

But, Mr. Speaker, we cannot say "No" to both propositions. This would endanger the lives of every American, and indeed risk the homes and security of every American—mothers, wives, and children all. Our emotions must not guide our decisions.

We must take care that our decision on this matter, and all others, is not guided solely by pure, cold reasoning and logic. When America is governed by reasoning and logic, America will cease to be.

It is the fact that ours is a Government of people, whose decisions are tempered with warm emotion, and are subject to human frailties, which makes our democracy a living, vibrant force. All hope for the world would be lost if the lawmakers of this Nation could subvert their human emotions to cold logic. I find it impossible to accomplish such a subversion. I believe this to be true of all Members of the House. In approaching this or any other problem we must seek to achieve a careful balance between cold logic and warm emotion.

I know, Mr. Speaker, this body will courageously face this and other grave issues in the ensuing months. I know that decisions will be reached only after a collective soul searching—as great as any recorded in this country.

Finally, I know that whatever decision is reached, that decision will be supported 100 percent by all the people.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Buildings and Grounds of the Committee on Public Works be permitted to sit during general debate this week during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

TO REQUIRE A YEA-AND-NAY VOTE ON ALL APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing my resolution requiring a yea-and-nay vote on all appropriation bills passed by this House. I introduced this same resolution last year, but the Rules Committee never granted a rule for its consideration by the House. I have never introduced a bill that received more favorable response and aroused more public interest than I got from the introduction of this resolution.

There are 38 States in the Union that require a yea-and-nay vote on appropriations. There is no rhyme or reason why the Members of Congress should not be required to stand up and be counted in appropriating the taxpayers' money, irrespective for what purpose it may be appropriated. I know that our taxpayers desire to know how their Congressmen vote when it comes to spending their money. In the Eighty-first Congress, first session, we passed appropriations of $29,000,000,000 in the House without a record vote, and the people cannot tell who voted for or against a single appropriation bill.

It appears that we will do away with the omnibus appropriation bill this year and will be called upon to pass a number of appropriation bills, and the requirement of a yea-and-nay vote could be the means of making each Member consider seriously his vote on each appropriation bill and possibly could be the means of bringing about some economy.

This is a period when we want to economize. I do not know whether or not this will bring about economy, but I believe it will have a tendency to do so. I think our constituents have a right to know how we vote on spending their money. I hope the Committee on Rules will grant a rule to bring this resolution up for consideration and give the membership an opportunity to work its will.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield, does the bill apply to the Senate?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. This is a House resolution amending House rule XXI and applies to the House only. I am quite sure if the House sets this good example by passing this resolution, the Senate will follow. However, that is their business.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE SITUATION

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, in the armed services when a man faked illness he was branded a gold bricker and usually wound up in the guardhouse. This illegal, wildcat, unpatriotic strike on the part of certain railroad employees is nauseating to the American people. My information is that many of those men who are now out on strike have been deferred by their draft boards solely because of the fact that they were engaged in an industry or occupation which was essential to the national defense. This strike is paralyzing the commercial life of our Nation and is impeding the war effort.

I am today introducing a bill which provides that the selective service law be amended so that whenever any man who has been deferred because of occupation or employment for any reason stops working he must immediately report to his draft board and go into the Army of the United States. I hope I have the support of every Member of the Congress to see that this bill becomes law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

OUR ARMED FORCES NEED SKILLED RAILROAD MEN

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of fine boys in Korea. I understand there is a possibility that they may run short of ammunition. We have a lot of fine, patriotic folks in this country who are being terribly handicapped in whatever war effort they are putting forth. Some time ago the House of Representatives and the Senate acted in a situation which was of great interest to the people. It was declared that there was a shortage of doctors in the Army and Navy. So, in the public interest, and the interest of national defense, and in the interest of our country which is at war, we passed a bill and singled those men out, and said, "You are specially trained to render special service to this country in this great emergency." And we drafted them. There has never been a time that I know of when this Nation needed some skilled trainmen and skilled engineers and trained railroad men more than we need them this morning. Are we going to rise to the occasion, or are we going to permit the war effort to lag behind, to the detriment of the country? Personally I cannot help but feel somewhat as a fine American wrote me this morning, and I quote:

> When this country is at war the hands and minds of everyone able to move and think effectively should either voluntarily channel themselves or be involuntarily channeled into essential tasks in the Nation's defense.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. SUTTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

SPEAKER RAYBURN HONORED AT WHITE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a transcript of the proceedings of the White House recently in honor of our distinguished Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, there was an extraordinary and historic event at the White House on January 30, 1951, when President Truman honored our Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, of Texas, on the occasion of Mr. RAYBURN's setting a new record for tenure of the Speakership.

At the President's invitation, there were many notables present, including Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson and Vice President Alben W. Barkley, both from the State of Kentucky, which had held the Speakership record through Henry Clay.

The majority leader of the House, Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, the minority leader, Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., also of Massachusetts, and former Speaker, and the Texas delegation, including Senators TOM CONNALLY and LYNDON JOHNSON, were present.

Mr. Truman also had as his special guests at the ceremony of presenting to the Speaker a gavel made of wood that had been placed in the White House in 1817, the Speaker's sister, Miss Lucinda Rayburn, and his brother, Dick Rayburn, both of Bonham, Tex., and his nephew, Robert Bartley.

The White House was kind enough to let me have a transcript of the proceedings on that occasion, as follows:

President TRUMAN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, Mr. Chief Justice, I have a very pleasant duty to perform this morning, to congratulate the Speaker of the House of Representatives on having served longer as Speaker of the House than any other man in the history of this Republic and in order to show him that I feel very kindly to him, if he has to be shown that, I had a gavel made of wood from the White House that was used in 1817 to rebuild the White House after the British burned it. But this is to SAM RAYBURN who has served as Speaker of the House of Representatives longer than any man in the history of the Republic, with honor and devotion to his country, date January 30, 1951, and it is signed by the President. Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

Speaker RAYBURN. Mr. President, to me this is a great occasion for many reasons; to be here in your presence and with you and to receive this presentation, evidence of your friendship and your trust. I appreciate every colleague of mine and every friend from the Hill, including the newspapermen and photographers and television people, whom sometimes I have a little trouble with. To everyone from the depth of a grateful heart I thank you. This is a great day to me. It means much to me. It means much to my family and to my friends back in Texas who have so long trusted me by voting for me and making me their representative. Here again, Mr. President, again I thank you most sincerely. [Applause.]

President TRUMAN. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to present you with a gavel. This was made of wood that was used in the reconstruction of the White House in 1817.

Speaker RAYBURN. I shall treasure it all the days of my life.

President TRUMAN. I would like the Vice President to say a word.

Vice President BARKLEY. In 1824, President Monroe gave many a great reception in the White House here out of which this gavel came. Everybody wanted to attend one reception and everybody wanted to meet General Lafayette. Two men came to the reception unaccompanied and when they were presented to Lafayette he said to one of them, "Are you married?" He said, "Yes; I am married, I have a wife and three children." He said to the other one, "Are you married?" He said, "No, I am a bachelor." He said, "Lucky dog." [To Speaker] You are a lucky dog.

President TRUMAN. Chief Justice Vinson.

Chief Justice VINSON. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether I ought to be happy or not being a Kentuckian. We must concede that the record set by our great Henry Clay has been broken. I tell you it took a long time to do it and it took Texas and a great Texan to do it. [Applause.] I tell you the truth. Even though I am a Kentuckian I am happy that my good friend SAM RAYBURN holds the all-time record for service as a Speaker of the House of Representatives, where he has performed a duty, where he has performed tasks, where he has been a great pacificator many, many times over. Clay you know was known as a great pacificator. He may have pacificated once or twice but this man RAYBURN has been pacificating for almost 40 years.

President TRUMAN. I would like to ask the former Speaker of the House and the minority leader to say a few words, Hon. JOE MARTIN.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. President, Speaker RAYBURN, friends of Speaker RAYBURN, it is with a little misgiving that I join in these ceremonies. I, unfortunately, held them up. They would have taken place 2 years previously but for me. Nevertheless, I am happy to come here and join in wishing my good friend of many years, SAM RAYBURN, the very best of wishes. Mr. RAYBURN is a very great parliamentarian and a great American, and I know I express the words of everyone who has come in association with him that we love him and honor him.

President TRUMAN (to Speaker). Do you want to thank these people for the kind words they said to you?

Speaker RAYBURN (banging gavel). I think, Mr. President, it is about time to bring the speaking to a close. But first I want to say thanks to my friend Fred Vinson, who was my manager when I was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives and to my successor and predecessor JOE MARTIN for his kind words.

President TRUMAN. I think the majority leader ought to express his opinion.

Majority Leader MCCORMACK. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker RAYBURN, Chief Justice Vinson, the association between Speaker RAYBURN and me during his years as Speaker has been very, very close, not only on the personal level, but because of our relationship as Speaker—he as Speaker and I as majority leader of the House during the greater part of the period that Speaker RAYBURN has been Speaker. He may come from Texas, he might be termed a Texan, but, in the hearts of all Americans, he is an outstanding American and one of the greatest men of this era.

President TRUMAN. This has been a great day for me. Way back in the early days I tried to get out of the way and let SAM RAYBURN be nominated for Vice President. I didn't have any luck, and now I am privileged to present him with this memento of a long term of service. I have had no greater pleasure in any time I can remember.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes today, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD'S CONTROVERSY WITH UNITED STATES TREASURY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, before any Member takes the side of the Federal Reserve Board in the controversy with the Treasury Department, I hope he seriously considers what the result will be here in the event the Federal Reserve Board should win in this contest.

During the past year the Federal Reserve Board has deliberately caused an increase in short-term paper up to 300 percent in interest. The Federal Reserve Board is now trying to greatly increase interest rates. We are paying this year $500,000,000 additional interest on our national debt by reason of the policies of the Open Markets Committee of the Federal Reserve Board, which the Federal Reserve Board is responsible for.

I certainly urge you to consider the fact that the Federal Reserve Board, if it should win—and I certainly hope it does not—will increase interest charges on our national debt from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 by next year, and price control, I submit, should apply to banks and the Federal Reserve the same as to the people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION WHIP SET-UP

Mr. ARENDS. I ask permission to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include the organizational set-up of the Republican whip.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to follows:)

Republican whip, LESLIE C. ARENDS, Illinois; deputy whip, RALPH A. GAMBLE, New York.

Eastern regional whip, W. STERLING COLE, New York—8 States, 50 members: Maine (3), New Hampshire (2), Vermont (1), Connecticut (4), Delaware (1), A. N. SADLAK; Massachusetts (8), W. H. BATES; New York (22), KATHARINE ST. GEORGE; New Jersey (9), T. MILLET HAND.

East central regional whip, HARRY MCGREGOR, Ohio—6 States, 54 members: Pennsylvania (20), LEON H. GAVIN; Michigan (12), GEORGE DONDERO; Ohio (15), HARRY MCGREGOR; Maryland (3), Tennessee (2), Kentucky (2), J. GLENN BEALL.

Midwest regional whip, CHARLES B. HOEVEN, Iowa—8 States, 56 members: Indiana (9), RALPH HARVEY; Illinois (18), C. W. BISHOP; Wisconsin (9), Minnesota (5), North Dakota (2), South Dakota (2), GLENN DAVIS, of Wisconsin; Iowa (8), Missouri (3), CHARLES B. HOEVEN, Iowa.

Western regional whip, A. M. COLE, of Kansas—9 States, 39 members: Kansas (6), Colorado (2), Nebraska (4), Oklahoma (2), A. M. COLE of Kansas; Washington (4), Oregon (4), Montana (1), Idaho (2), Wyoming (1), WALTER NORBLAD; California (13), ALLAN HUNTER.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] as to what the House would do about the railroad strike, I am no prophet, but I probably know as much about future events as some fellows who talk over the radio, and my prediction is that we will not do anything about it. It is a simple problem, as has been said so many times before. These gentlemen, who are on strike, who are preventing the support of Armed Forces abroad, have that power and they have special privileges only because of legislation that the Congress has enacted. I would not want to vote to take away the right of any man to strike, but I would like very much to have an opportunity to vote upon a bill that has been before this House several times in years gone by which would deprive these union men of the special privileges which the House has granted them, when they misuse those privileges, when they interfere with national organizations, like the transportation system, or the telephone, light, and water companies in such a way as to endanger the public. When they cut off those things which the people must have and interfere with the war effort, there is no reason why we should not take away the authority granted them and which has enabled them to do these unpatriotic things.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

REPUBLICAN LEADERSHIP

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the people of America are looking to the Republican Party for leadership today. They have lost confidence in this administration. If we were to hold an election today, the Republican Party would win an overwhelming victory.

Our people cannot understand how the strongest nation in the world has gotten itself so mixed up that it does not know whether it is afoot or on horseback. This is the time of the year when we remember two of our country's greatest heroes. They were men who stood for fixed principles. They knew what they had to do. The Republican Party knows what must be done today. We are not afraid of the Soviet Union. The administration is quaking in its boots in fear of Russia. That is the key to its whole policy—fear. Let us make the situation clear. Our people abhor war, but if any nation drives us into war, we are not going to sell America short. This should be our position—America is strong. The Republican Party will make it still stronger. We shall make America impregnable. Our party today stands for the biggest, most modern air force in the world. We want the aircraft carriers the administration vetoed not so long ago. We want the Marine Corps, which this administration called a police force. When we have these things, the Soviet Union will know that America means business. When this is known, we shall have peace.

PRICE STABILIZATION

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, along with everybody else in this House, I voted to create the Office of Price Stabilization. I was shocked last night when I heard Drew Pearson say that the only thing which kept this Office from rolling back prices was a phone call which supposedly came from a powerful industrialist.

I make the statement here that the Office of Price Stabilization should not be guided in its decisions by telephone calls either from industrialists or labor leaders, or any other highly placed individuals, except the rank and file of the people of the United States. For that reason, I believe that the statement made by Mr. Pearson should be looked into and investigated. If things like that are going on, they should report the information for the welfare of the people of the United States.

To freeze prices at levels they are today would be a drastic mistake, although it would be better than to let them go unchecked.

The real way to give the people their money's worth of a costly price-administration program is to roll back price levels to 1939.

I said prices, not wages. And I mean food prices at retail, not on the farm. I also refer to all the other items which go to make up the average consumer's needs.

Roll them back to 1939, leave wages high, and let us get down to the serious business of shouldering our responsibilities in the current crisis.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, a particular note of unrealism exists in the whole wage-price freeze in that due to section 402, paragraph (3), subsection (d), of the Defense Production Act of 1950 the price freeze does not apply to many agricultural commodities selling below 100 percent of parity. Wheat and corn are excluded as selling under 100 percent of parity, while cotton, beef, veal, and lamb are selling far above parity and are included. I have introduced a bill, H. R. 1778, to correct this situation and to provide that the 100 percent parity price standard should give way to the actual support-price standard, thus making the freeze immediately applicable.

Though retail products like bread are frozen in price, the fact that the basic ingredient is permitted to rise further inevitably results in exceptions for these end items, and the freeze order makes such exceptions, or they would soon disappear from the retail shops. Undoubtedly there are certain middlemen and processors making hay out of the situation; the way to fix attention on them and get that corrected is to cure the obvious defect in the law as it relates to the freezing of prices of farm products at the farm. The same is true regarding the point made—of such great importance to all of us—that a small proportion of farmers—those who need it least—are collecting most of the Government-support money on agricultural commodities. A thorough investigation is needed on both matters.

The problem raised by section 402 of the Defense Production Act is fundamental to the relations between the people in the cities and the people on the farm. Food represents 40 percent of the normal family budget and city consumers just cannot understand why it continues to far outstrip the rise in the BLS Consumer's Price Index generally, an increase for example to a record of 220.5 for foods as of January 15, 1951, on the 1935–39 average as 100, and an increase of over 5 percent from November 15 alone, against 178.4 in the BLS index for all items as of December 15, 1950, last available date. Is it not time to ask whether those who believe they are protecting the farmer are straining the situation to a point where it may prove to be impossible to maintain proper and advisable floors under farm prices—which I am for—because consideration of the consumers' needs have seemingly not been given enough weight at this time.

In view of the statements of the leaders of the great farm organizations, city people question, too, whether the rank and file of the farm people themselves want this super-maximum protection. Perhaps they are themselves caught in the squeeze of being the beneficiaries of something they know ultimately to be against their best interests as it is not in the national interest in the present situation. Certainly the Banking and Currency Committee ought to look into this situation without delay, as I am sure it would if the administration gave the lead on it.

KOREAN CONFLICT AND PETTY POLITICS

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that our serious predicament in Korea is being used by a few within the minority party of this Congress for the selfish purpose of fostering their own individual political ambitions; while, in effect, such criticism is serving only to disunite our people at a time when unity is essential. They appear daily upon the floor of this House to arbitrarily denounce every personal, business, or political activity of the leader of the majority party. They gleefully speak with vim, vigor, and vitality of our unsuccessful military efforts; and one is impressed by their happiness to report disaster to our Armed Forces.

The absence of the I-told-you-so approach in these daily words of criticism is distinctly obvious and glaringly noticeable. They have failed to offer any constructive approach and would just as vigorously be criticizing any other course that might have been followed. These critics were not heard at the time denouncing the idea of defending South Korea, or even crossing the thirty-eighth parallel; but, to the contrary, most of them were openly insistent that we defend South Korea and were critical of hesitancy to cross the thirty-eighth parallel. Most of these same Members have been hollering ever since I have been in Congress for us to tie up with Chiang Kai-shek in order that we could more quickly find ourselves in military conflict within Asia.

The minority party has always taken great pride in referring to the foreign spending program as a bipartisan matter; in fact, the Marshall plan was the brain child of the Republican Eightieth Congress. They have strongly insisted upon infiltrating with our wealth in an effort to buy with money that which Russia is attempting to take with force. They should not now be surprised to find the results of their so-called bipartisan efforts to stick the nose of the United States into the business of every other country, resulting in the warfare that has continuously been predicted by a few of us who have attempted to put country above petty politics.

The hindsight of an illiterate is usually more reliable than the foresight of an intellectual. It is a simple political maneuver to criticize the activities of an opponent without mentioning the critic's predictions at the involved time. One of this group has just announced to this House that the minority will get together tonight at the Uline Arena for the purpose of criticizing our situation in Korea. I am just wondering how much time will be devoted at this parley to criticizing mistakes made by General MacArthur, the pride of the minority party.

Considering the over-all foreign situation, none of us can now look upon the Korean conflict as the proper solution for difficulties in the Far East. It must be conceded that our military and executive leaders guessed wrong; but it is unknown whether any now criticizing the movement would have acted to the contrary. Most of us are good "Monday morning quarterbacks" who might have called the same plays we later criticize had we been dealing with a like situation under similar circumstances.

We now know that perhaps the immediate cause of our country's becoming entangled in the Korean conflict at the time was due to a sudden reversal of our policy concerning Korea. Knowing Communist philosophy and ulterior motives as we do, I doubt that a different policy would have definitely precluded similar conflict at some place within that area. All of us now know that a definite and ironclad decision should have been made on the proposition of whether South Korea was vital to our defense and should or should not be defended. These factors were questionable within all ranks, and no doubt the indecisions which culminated in a couple of complete reversals of policy hastened the conflict in Korea. These were mistakes to which all are susceptible. It is difficult to find a present-day critic of the Korean affair who suggested at the time that we not enter Korea. It is still debatable whether we should have crossed the thirty-eighth parallel when it was reached. Some of our military leaders contend that such act was detrimental to our welfare there, and even to our internal security; while other such experts contend that we would have found ourselves in the same critical situation had our forces not crossed the thirty-eighth parallel. Of course, all the answers now available to questions concerning our difficulties in the Korean conflict would be in reverse and the picture there would be quite different, but for the fear of so concentrating our efforts in that campaign as to weaken our defense on more vital fronts.

Therefore, our position in Korea is similar to one man wearing boxing gloves fighting 10 men armed with knuckles—we are restrained to a limited warfare while the Communist opposition has no limitations. We are fighting a war while not being permitted to fight a war. Our appeasement policy precludes us from bombing the enemy's vital production facilities within China and Manchuria, while our enemy is in no wise restricted concerning our defense supplies.

Because of restraining policies, we refuse to use millions of Chinese Nationalists who are anxious to combat communism upon the theory—which is possibly justifiable—that we cannot afford to aggravate and antagonize the Chinese upon the mainland for fear that we would find our defenses divided, a part in the East, a part in Western Europe, and a part in Alaska, should Russia take advantage of our divided situation. Under such restrictions, our possibilities for a successful conclusion are doubtful; and it would not take a military tactician to know that if such is to be our continued rules for warfare in that area, we should immediately evacuate Korea. If it be decided that we continue the fight in Korea, certainly we should not be restricted in our warfare if we expect a successful conclusion to that conflict.

Those believing contrary to my thinking will suggest that our leaving Korea will injure our prestige and that, actually, we are merely assisting and should continue our efforts on behalf of the United Nations. Well, I do not go for that face-saving stuff when young American manhood is involved in a lost cause; and even though I am a strong advocate of the United Nations as an eventual international agency for lasting peace, it so happens that 95 percent of the efforts in Korea are by the young men of the United States of America. We have lost other battles without losing face or disgracing ourselves, and can leave Korea in pride for having gone all out in the defense of democracy, and to save a division of our forces at a time when areas more vital to our defense are in peril.

We must gain and maintain additional dependable allies, never forsaking them or thinking of withdrawing our defenses to the borders of this country; and we should never forget those who furnished us a place to fight and assisted us to defeat our enemies during World Wars I and II, precluding conflict from our homeland, preventing the destruction of our material possessions, and prohibiting the suffering of our families.

There is no doubt in my mind but that we can defeat our Communist enemies in Korea, or the whole of Asia, in a short time and with a minimum of casualties, provided an all-out warfare in that area be determined feasible and justifiable in face of Communist threats adverse to our security elsewhere. We must depend upon our military leaders for this vital decision.

Whether we are in accord with all foreign policy activities in the past, the world crisis today has passed the point where academic and rhetorical discussion is in order. Common sense and practical action, uninfluenced by political considerations, party alinement, political indebtedness, or personal ambition, should be our foremost objective. Political demagoguery has no place in our decisions; the welfare of our country should be uppermost in our minds—even above true party alliance and devotion.

To daily publicly denounce proven mistakes that you might have made had the decision been yours to make in no wise contributes to the security of our democracy and to the settlement of the world crisis. This arbitrary criticism has even reached the infamous stage of suggesting the impeachment of the leader selected by the people of the United States. This is just another underhanded method of promoting discord to the detriment of our people. None of these critics suggests that the President is guilty of any of the crimes upon which he might be impeached constitutionally; they do not even intimate that mistakes or errors constitute impeachable grounds, and I am not acquainted with any person—including all the arbitrary critics to whom I have referred—who are free from susceptibility to mistakes and errors. Any of us can justifiably find fault with and strenuously debate policies, philosophies, and advocacies of most any person; but to prominently promulgate the congregated activities with which we do not agree without taking into consideration activities with which we are in accord is to dissimilate the true picture and fail to properly evaluate the advisability of such actions.

The people elected our President in 1948; he is the same man with like ability as when elected. We knew him then as we know him now. To suggest his impeachment upon the advance complaints is to suggest an impeachment of the people's rights. Even though I am not in accord with many of the policies and philosophies of our leader, I could not and I would not, even if he were a Republican, suggest his removal from office merely because he is not in full accord with my beliefs or because he may have been in error. No doubt a few in high-ranking positions with the present administration have considerably dampened the popularity of our leader. They are burdensome to the administration, and I wish they were not so connected; but to remove them at this time is impractical and could well lead to defeat on the diplomatic front.

There is nothing more honorable than the admission of blunder and bungle. No doubt I have made a lot of them, but I am, indeed, grateful for my willingness to admit and acknowledge a cognizable error or mistake; and I am thankful that my Good Maker endowed me with the ability to realize that only constructive action, rather than arbitrary criticism, serves to benefit mankind.

In order to further promote discord, disunity, and lack of confidence in our leadership, some of these critics would have the world believe that there is a Communist behind every bush in this country awaiting his time to practice his beliefs, which is no less than encouraging Communist Russia to feel that a majority of the people in this country are communistically inclined and want liberation at the hands of Russia. No doubt there are a few Communists in this country, but it would be known to any intelligent person that those few people know nothing about the principles of democracy or they would not be followers of such a wild-eyed, fairy-tale, utopian idea.

Believers in democracy need not worry half so much about the people throughout the world knowing the ideologies of communism as Russia needs worry about their knowing the true democratic principles which have made these United States into the greatest nation on the face of the globe. Our systems are in no wise comparable, as different as night and day; and there is no question which system would be selected by those who know both systems of government.

I have daily listened to these arbitrary critics and have never heard one of them utter a constructive suggestion; they just criticize and don't seem to know which one of their fellow party members to follow. All are divided on the Korean conflict as well as everything else; just anything to be arbitrary. Some advocate the Taft doctrine, which is a doctrine of indifference even to the extent of suggesting the draft of 18½-year-old boys rather than the draft of 18- or 19-year-olds—just anything to be different. Others are for the Wherry philosophy, which is just a couple of words different to the Taft doctrine. Still others are stringing along with me-too Dewey; and, too, others are preaching the praises of Hoover whose theories, ideologies, philosophies, and policies once led this Government into its most despicable dilemma.

My short experience in this Congress convinces me that there is no lack of intelligence in this legislative body, but it is regrettable that many of the Members do not exhibit more individual courage and place their Government above petty party politics, follow the wishes of their people and the dictates of their conscience rather than act as poll parrots to a few so-called party leaders.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 95, Rept. No. 24), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations relating to matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee under rule XI (1) (l) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and for such purposes the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, its Territories, and possessions, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

CREDIT AND INTEREST RATES

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has raised the issue found between the Treasury and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Far too long this country and its people have been subjected to the feud which has been running between the Secretary of the Treasury, the White House, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

The gentleman from Texas has cautioned us on taking a position. I hope to use my 20-minute special order today discussing this very question.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, as acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I wish to announce a new departure and experiment in committee procedure which I hope will further legislative participation in the formulation of United States foreign policy. This new procedure has been agreed upon after consultation with Chairman KEE, who is temporarily absent for a routine physical check up, and careful study by the committee.

The Foreign Affairs Committee has unanimously approved this plan and has voted to call in the authors of all bills referred to the committee and give them an opportunity to speak for 15 minutes on behalf of their proposals. Most of these bills and resolutions touch on some phase of the foreign policy of the United States. Special hearings for this purpose will begin Tuesday, February 6, and run through Thursday, with additional meetings to follow later.

This will give Members of Congress an opportunity to be heard before the committee's legislative schedule is made up for the session. Boiled down to its essentials, it means that the thinking of Members of Congress will be weighed and their reasons for sponsoring bills taken into consideration before establishing priority of committee action.

Members of the committee have long been conscious of a growing need for more adequate presentation and consideration of the general legislative viewpoint. The area of legislation coming before the Foreign Affairs Committee has a peculiar relationship to the power of the Executive that does not exist with any other legislative committee. It is clearly the function of the Executive to proclaim and conduct the foreign policy of the United States. It is the function of the legislative to implement this policy when considered advisable or necessary.

In recent years the State Department has established the growing and happy custom of conferring with the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate before, and not after, formulating proposals for legislative action to implement foreign policy. In other words, the legislative is now to some extent being taken into the confidence of the Executive in foreign-policy matters.

Now we propose, in view of the critical international situation and the acute interest of every Member of the House in foreign affairs, to go one step further and bring the membership of the House closer to the Foreign Affairs Committee and its problems before, and not after, we begin to formulate the momentous legislation effecting foreign policy that we are bound to consider in our committee during this session.

Formerly the usual practice has been to receive views of Members of Congress only after regular hearings commenced. Along with witnesses from the executive branch, or private life, they presented their testimony for or against bills. There was a significant difference however in the relative positions of congressional and executive committee witnesses. On most major bills, the hearings had been scheduled at the request, direct or indirect, of the executive branch and some Members of Congress have felt that the stew had already been seasoned and cooked before they were invited to partake of the repast.

The new procedure will put consideration of legislative views of the rank and file of the House on foreign-policy questions on a more equitable basis by assuring their study before firming up the order in which bills will be listed for regular legislative hearings. A lot of Members of Congress have come up with some pretty good ideas which have been very helpful in the past, and we want to make sure that in the pressure of work we do not miss any good bets by not hearing from all the Members who have sponsored foreign-affairs legislation.

A glance at the work record of the committee would show how the need has increased for a new method of screening bills. In past years it was possible for the committee to give full attention to bills sponsored by the executive branch and still have plenty of time left over for hearing Members who requested to be heard on measures of their own sponsoring.

However, during the Eighty-first Congress the Foreign Affairs Committee was almost continuously occupied, holding 273 meetings on 115 of the 405 bills referred to it, and hearing 659 witnesses in the process. Although as much time as possible was devoted to congressionally sponsored legislation, the committee was so busy with many urgent and major measures sponsored by the executive branch that the need became more and more evident for a system that would provide the fairest and most efficient possible method of pre-schedule screening. It had not even been possible to give consideration to all of the administration-sponsored proposals because of various factors relating to timing, relative degree of urgency, and so forth.

The Eighty-second Congress is little over a month old. Already 80 bills and resolutions have been referred to the committee. They embrace over 40 different subjects and cover practically all phases of the critical problems that face the world today. Included are questions involving use of atomic weapons, our membership in the United Nations, the situation in the Far East, disarmament, communism, assistance to other countries, both military and economic, and even international efforts to discover a cancer cure.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON SERIES E SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. DOUGHTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 2268) to authorize the payment of interest on series E savings bonds retained after maturity, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 25), which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

WE ARE TOO CLOSE TO DICTATORSHIP

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks recently made by the gentleman from Arkansas concerning the opposition party holding a meeting in Washington and criticizing the party in power. Now, that is just too bad, is it not?

If the situation ever develops in this Nation when the opposition party cannot complain about the party in power, God help the Nation. I know the gentleman does not represent and he is not expressing the views of the majority of his party. Certainly it is a matter of general debate across the Nation as to the Korean crisis, the Korean war, the Korean police action, or whatever you wish to call it.

I doubt if that is going to be the predominant note at the Republican meeting to be held at Uline Auditorium this evening. I do not like the majority party crying when they are in power about the opposition party saying anything against what the majority party may be doing because, God knows, this country will never advance or progress if such condition is ever brought about in this Nation. We are too close to dictatorship in this country right now. What do the Democrats want? Do they want the right to do as they please without opposition from any source. When the party in power cannot stand opposition or criticism there must be something radically wrong in the administration that should be revealed and brought to the attention of the public.

I, for one, shall never yield my right to speak out and criticize the faults of the party in power when I think they are wrong and to suggest, recommend, and propose improvements in the administration of the Government in the best interests of the public welfare. That is what the people of my district sent me here to do.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. WOOD of Idaho asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PREPAREDNESS

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I just listened to my very good and able friend, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT], asking why and what we would do about Korea. I might say to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas that we never had an opportunity to determine what we would do about Korea.

I would like to ask my distinguished friend what his party did when we, in the Committee on Armed Services, recommended a national defense program of $17,000,000,000 and the administration cut it back to $14,000,000,000? At that time they were going to take off a little of the fat and none of the muscle. But when the administration got through with it, they not only had taken off the fat and the muscle but severed a couple of main arteries as well and the patient—the national-defense program—almost expired.

I might ask the gentleman from Arkansas why something was not done about national defense at that time. I do not recall hearing any protest. It was a great program of a great American, Secretary of Defense Forrestal.

That great and able Secretary of Defense was retired; the 70 air groups were cut back to 48; they moth-balled the fleet; canceled the carrier; fired Admiral Denfeld; cut back the ground forces; cut back the Navy Air; and skeletonized the Marine Corps; all of which scuttled the defense program.

We were then precipitated into the Korean situation totally unprepared and our boys were rushed to Korea to fight tanks with carbines. Why does not the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas comment about that?

The Committee on Armed Services prepared a very comprehensive program of national defense to give this Nation strength to meet any demands that might have been made upon us and had this program gone through as was authorized by the Congress, we might not have had a Korea.

The gentleman asked what we did. Well, I might say the Committee on Armed Services did their part. However, no action was taken by the administration on the defense program. That is the reason we found ourselves in a desperate position when the Korean situation broke.

STAYING ON THE JOB

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the order of the day today to criticize and complain about people not doing their full job during this emergency, and it occurs to me that perhaps we who are connected with the Government are somewhat guilty in that respect. I am becoming a little impatient every Saturday morning to come to my office and find, in connection with these innumerable problems that the people are sending to us and asking for help, that every time we call up some department or agency very rarely is a person on the job. It makes us wonder just how important this national effort is. It seems to me that the Government itself, especially the administration, could do well by setting an example and have its people on the job some time between Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock and Monday morning at 9 o'clock. Full speed in defense production cannot be had by taking the week end off for pleasure—either by industry or Government.

AUTOMOBILE TAX

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I was rather shocked a few minutes ago to pick up the Washington News and find that in the headline today there is a proposal by the Secretary of the Treasury to impose another 20-percent tax on automobiles. Part of the economy, a very large part of the economy of this country, is represented by automobiles. They are no longer a luxury. They are an absolute necessity, and our national defense depends a great deal upon the use of trucks and automobiles in the moving of goods and men and women to their places of employment. I have in mind thousands of men residing in my State, and they also reside in your State, who are employed not only in the actual making of the automobiles in the factories, but in the preparation of material that goes into those automobiles. I know of one firm in the city of Detroit making automobiles that has 7,000 contributors in the way of small corporations in every State of the Union.

If automobiles become too expensive to buy, there will be no work for those who now make them and our economy would be injured by the loss of a vast amount of tax money now being poured into the Treasury through this source. This loss of revenue would impose a greater burden upon the Government than could possibly be offset by imposing another tax upon a commodity already paying more than its just share. Such a tax would injure our economy rather than help it.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if this Congress has the courage, the patriotism, and the decency to deal effectively with the railroad workers now treasonably on strike against our soldiers who are fighting, bleeding, and dying in Korea.

JERE COOPER, JR.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have just received the sad news that one of our distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], has lost his only son, Jere Cooper, Jr., who passed away rather suddenly at his home in Tennessee on yesterday.

He was one of the finest little fellows I have ever known. His untimely death was a great shock to all who knew him.

I ask unanimous consent that the House extend to Mr. COOPER our heartfelt sympathies in his great bereavement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I had thought it was axiomatic that we cannot have our butter and our guns too. Yet that is exactly what is proposed in the President's recommendation for the proposed St. Lawrence waterway-hydroelectric project. At a time when we are faced with perhaps the greatest crisis ever to confront this country, at a time when our young men are being taken from their homes and their schools, at a time when record-breaking taxes are to be imposed upon the people, we are asked to embark upon this fantastic undertaking whose ultimate costs, you can rest assured, will total more than a billion dollars; which would require the diversion of materials and labor so badly needed for defense, and which, if the claims of its proponents even approximate the truth, would bring about an economic dislocation to a great part of our country. I say it is preposterous.

Mr. Speaker, long before I came to Congress, long before most of my colleagues came, this project was being agitated. Until a few years ago, the agitation for this project was largely confined to a relatively few civic boosters, with more civic enthusiasm than logic or economic sense, who dreamed of making ocean ports of the Great Lakes ports. In their enthusiasm they even visualized the Queen Mary docking at Duluth.

In those days it was sought to arouse the interest of Midwest farmers with arguments that they could ship their wheat abroad more cheaply. An even earlier argument was that bananas from Latin America would be delivered to midwestern markets more cheaply. As regards wheat the argument was that Liverpool controlled the world market, that it even influenced the price which the farmer received here at home. There is no evidence that the Midwest farmers were ever greatly aroused although some farm organizations have given perfunctory support to the project down through the years.

Well, the wheat argument is now out. No one contends any more that Liverpool controls any markets, and the fact is that the amount of wheat which the farmers can ship abroad and the price they receive is now fixed by international agreement.

In more recent years the moving argument for the waterway is that it is essential to national defense. We have successfully fought two World Wars without it but nevertheless it is now brought forward as essential to the present emergency. Yet it would take 7 years to build it and when constructed would be icebound 5 months of the year.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is generally understood that there is at present a 14-foot waterway in the St. Lawrence which permits smaller foreign vessels, mostly Scandinavian, South American, and Russian, to come into Great Lakes ports—Cleveland, Detroit, Toledo, Chicago, and so forth. This waterway has a capacity of some 15,000,000 tons a year. With a relatively small expenditure, this capacity could be increased several million additional tons. Yet the highest tonnage ever handled was 9,500,000, and this figure dropped in 1948 and 1949 to 7,500,000 tons, although I understand the figure for last year is back up in the neighborhood of 9,000,000 tons. So it is proposed to build another and deeper waterway of 27 feet depth. I want to say in passing that when the New York State barge canal was being agitated it was claimed it would handle 25,000,000 tons a year. The largest it has ever handled is 5,000,000 tons.

The propaganda of the proponents has long been that just a little bottleneck in the International Rapids of the St. Lawrence River, just about 50 miles long, is all that prevents the Great Lakes ports from becoming a New York, a Boston, a Baltimore, a Philadelphia or a New Orleans, and is a blow at the democratic processes—that a few "selfish interests" on the Atlantic seaboard will not permit this little obstruction to be removed.

Mr. Speaker, every port on the Great Lakes is an additional bottleneck in that there is not one with a harbor depth sufficient to accommodate the shipping which a 27-foot waterway depth that is proposed would invite. Millions of additional dollars would have to be spent at every one of these ports using the new waterway in the deepening of entrance channels, harbors, slips, and the like.

Then what would be accomplished? The American merchant marine on which we have spent $19,000,000,000 would have been given a stab in the back. Larger foreign, cheaply manned vessels would be able to use this depth than those which now use the 14-foot waterway, but less than 9 percent of American-flag tonnage, because of the size of American-flag ships—and the trend, for economic reasons, is toward still larger ones—would be able economically to use the 27-foot depth.

These statements, Mr. Speaker, are not subject to dispute. They are substantiated by Secretary of Commerce Sawyer, by General Fleming, head of the Maritime Administration. The late Secretary of Defense James Forrestal, in endorsing the project, nevertheless pointed to its limited use by American-flag vessels. Naturally I am referring to loaded vessels.

It is contended, however, that the proportion of American-flag ships that could use the waterway would be considerably enlarged if they carried only part loads. That, I submit, is a splendid proposition to put up to our American ship operators. They are having their troubles enough to compete with foreign shipping for world commerce because of their higher costs of operation, and no doubt vessels are frequently moved with part loads. This is manifestly not a desirable situation and certainly a situation becomes impossible, when a part load becomes a capacity load and they have to scramble to fill even that.

This is the reason why 30 of this country's leading oceangoing operators have testified they could not use the waterway and are vigorously opposed to it.

Then, Mr. Speaker, for whom are we being asked to build the waterway? Is there any question in anybody's mind that if the waterway would be profitably available to American ship operators, they would be for it?

What is being proposed is that after the taxpayers of this country have put up $19,000,000,000 to develop and maintain an American merchant marine, we throw them to the mercy for 7 months in the year—the waterway would be icebound for the five other months in the year—of cheaply manned, lower operating cost foreign vessels. It costs an American-flag vessel at least $500 a day more to operate than a comparable foreign vessel.

Mr. Speaker, our merchant marine depends to an inestimable extent upon the commerce that moves from the Midwest down to the Atlantic seaboard and Gulf coast for reshipment abroad. Is it conceivable that we want to wreck this set-up?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I frankly do not know, and neither does anyone else know, to just what extent these smaller and more leisurely moving foreign vessels would come into the Great Lakes. I doubt there would be many more than come in now. It is not an inviting proposition even to foreign vessels because it would take about 18 days to make a round trip between Quebec and Duluth or about 17 days between Quebec and Chicago. Thus it would take any sizable vessel longer to make either of these trips than it would to cross the ocean.

Mr. Paul M. Zeis, of the Department of Commerce, in his report on "potential" traffic for the waterway, issued in 1948, estimates this "potential" traffic at from fifty-seven to eighty-five million tons annually. He does not say this amount of tonnage would be handled; indeed, he admits that the locks in the Welland Canal would have to be duplicated to handle this amount. But he is charged with showing that enough tolls would be available to make the project self-liquidating. More realistic previous estimates of tonnage that would be handled were 25,000,000 tons, or roughly 16,000,000 more than is now handled.

But interestingly enough, Mr. Zeis and more practical proponents of the waterway do not visualize any great fleet of oceangoing vessels, foreign or any kind, moving between Great Lakes ports and Europe. What they have in mind is that cargoes moving from the Great Lakes would be transshipped at Montreal instead of at Buffalo and other United States transshipping points as is now the case. What a project for the United States Congress to authorize and appropriate for.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with this proposition as it was originally justified, and as it has been justified until here recently. A new angle has been added. To the ranks of the civic boosters who have primarily visualized the waterway as making it possible for citizens of Duluth, Detroit, and others, to go down to the wharves on Sunday and see European vessels, have been added a small but very influential and financially well heeled steel operators. Six of the smaller Midwest steel companies, vociferous private enterprisers and vigorous opponents of the waterway in the past, have invested in the Labrador-Quebec ore project. So this subsidized project, because no serious student of the subject thinks it would, in fact, be self-liquidating, becomes essential to national defense.

These gentlemen have hooted in the past at the promise of moving the Atlantic seaboard to the Midwest and they chuckle privately over such a dream even now. But they have a justification of their own.

It is, and they have just come to belated realization, coincident with their investments in Labrador-Quebec, that the waterway would extend the Great Lakes system to Montreal, not to Europe, just to Montreal. And above Montreal, on the Bay of St. Lawrence, is a place called Seven Islands which is to be the port for their ore which they are to bring down from the Canadian wilderness over a 360-mile railroad that must be constructed through tunnels, up and down grade and over about as barren ground as you can imagine. So if the taxpayers will just build the waterway and extend the Great Lakes system to Montreal they will be in a better competitive position with their ore at the Midwest steel centers.

This, I insist, Mr. Speaker, is a cost problem of theirs, not a matter of national defense or of national importance.

The situation in regard to this country's ore supply is this:

For several years steel producers have been looking around for foreign sources of high-grade ores to supplement, not replace, the lower grade ores of the Lake Superior area which are being developed to serve as the new ore of this fabulous area now that its high-grade ores are running out. I want to emphasize that these Lake Superior ores are still to be the steel industry's main reliance. Foreign supplies from all sources foreseeable in the next 20 years are less than one-third of what the industry's needs are expected to be at that time.

Of the three main foreign sources which American steel operators are working, Labrador-Quebec is only one and its promoters promise to bring in 10,000,000 tons annually in 1955. The other two sources are the Bethlehem and United States Steel operations in Venezuela, and that of Inland Steel and the Cyrus S. Eaton enterprises at Steep Rock, Ontario, only 140 miles from Port Arthur on Lake Ontario. Of equal importance, the Labrador-Quebec project is the only one of the three whose promoters would be helped by the waterway. Bear in mind there is no question of this ore coming in; its promoters have said that without the waterway, it will be brought to Midwest steel centers on presently available transportation facilities on favorable competitive terms. Manifestly, if this ore is so essential to our national well-being, its promoters would not have a worry about competitive terms.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that three of the steel companies asking for this subsidized waterway, have low-grade or taconite ore deposits in the Lake Superior area and their representatives have been down here negotiating with the RFC for a loan with which to develop them. It strikes me that this group of private enterprisers are becoming mighty dependent upon the Government, yet I have heard expressions of fear in the steel industry that the so-called bureaucrats are trying to move in on that industry.

It strikes me that there have been a lot of irresponsible statements, in the agitation for the waterway, about Detroit, Chicago, and other Great Lakes cities becoming ghost towns, because, unless they do get the waterway, the steel industry will move to the eastern seaboard. Certainly the 10,000,000 tons of ore which are promised from Quebec-Labrador, just about one-tenth of this country's present consumption and the only foreseeable ores that would move over the waterway, would not prevent such a calamity.

Furthermore, these statements appear all the more ridiculous when they are uttered at the time of the greatest expansion ever to take place in the Midwest steel industry, and in Great Lakes steel construction. It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Midwest steel industry has no idea of moving to the seaboard or anywhere else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another phase to this project. It is proposed to construct a power works in the International Rapids. The power generated would be divided equally between the United States and Canada. It is from this phase that the waterway derives much of its strength. The adjectives applied to this power project have reached the grandiloquent stage. It would unquestionably be a big power plant, Mr. Speaker, but the power available to the American side, 570,000 kilowatts of firm power, would be no more than that produced by any one of four privately operated plants at present in New York State. It would produce no more than 10 percent of the State's present consumption. I am not trying to minimize the size of this project, I want simply to put it in its true perspective. It is wrapped up in all sorts of romance and accomplishment of a free and progressive people. This St. Lawrence undertaking, propagandized as an eighth wonder of the world, to repeat, would be no more important, no bigger, for the American side, than any one of four plants in New York now operating.

I doubt that I have heard any more hysterical statements than those recently made by Governor Dewey who has sought to make political football of this proposition. In one outburst he claimed that his reelection was a mandate for New York State to enter into an agreement with Ontario to build the hydroelectric works of this dual project, in order that he could give the people of his State cheaper electricity. The denial of this great beneficence to his people, he said, constitutes a monumental fraud.

Mr. Speaker, Governor Dewey has contended that this plant operated by the State of New York would save consumers of New York State $20,000,000 a year. These alleged savings would come from the fancy bookkeeping fact that the State-operated plant would not be subjected to taxes and other costs which the private utilities have to bear. But even in this way, these alleged savings would mean to the average household consumer of electricity one-twentieth of 1 cent a kilowatt-hour or a saving on the monthly bill of 5 cents a month.

The claims of its proponents that it would bring a new day to all New England, except for Maine, are denied by the former chairman of the Federal Power Commission, Mr. Nelson Lee Smith. In a letter and staff memorandum to Senator SALTONSTALL, it was stated that its effect on New England power rates and on the needs of the area would be negligible.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard, time after time, these advocates lamenting the tremendous amount of power that is going to waste because the St. Lawrence goes undeveloped. I have heard this project likened to the labor of millions of Chinese coolies.

But Mr. Speaker, I hear no grief expressed for the billions of tons of coal that are lying undeveloped in the ground. This is unutilized energy, Mr. Speaker, just as much as an unharnessed river.

Mr. Speaker, in the past 18 months, the private utilities of New England, excluding Maine, have built practically the power equivalent of the St. Lawrence project. Notwithstanding the continued clamor of the public power advocates about an alleged power shortage in New England, the facts are that this region has a margin of 20 percent of reserve capacity. On schedule between now and the end of 1952, these private utilities plan to provide an additional 450,000 kilowatts, privately financed. Taken with the 500,000 kilowatts added in the past 18 months' period, these private utilities will have added in 3½ years, one-half the time it would take to build the St. Lawrence works, only 190,000 kilowatts less than twice the firm power capacity of those works. Yet we are told that the St. Lawrence is needed as a defense project.

The facts are, Mr. Speaker, that a recent Federal survey showed that only one section of the country is better off than New England in power reserve capacity and that is the South Central region.

On the question of its being a defense project, Mr. Speaker, I quote from a recent speech by Mr. Charles E. Wilson, Director of Mobilization. He said:

> The development of the St. Lawrence would take a long time. There are much more pressing problems if we are to win the war of production.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me say this. If the claims of the proponents as to what the waterway would accomplish are not true, then certainly there can be no justification for it. But if they only approximate the truth the waterway would wreak an economic revolution in this country.

For 7 months in the year when the waterway is open, there would be an almost complete demoralization of the present transportation system, by which goods move from the Middle West to the Atlantic and Gulf ports for export to Europe, and imports from Europe for the Middle West come into these ports for inland distribution. This intended bypassing of the Atlantic and Gulf ports would, as I have said, do irreparable harm to our merchant fleet and it would do irreparable harm to the Great Lakes fleet which is not adapted to deep-sea navigation because of fog, ice, and other navigational hazards.

The railroads estimate their annual loss in revenue at between $100,000,000 and $250,000,000. The foreign traffic through the port of New York would be cut more than half or more than 3,000,000 tons a year. Other Atlantic and Gulf ports would suffer proportionately. The coal industry would be rendered another blow which in its present state it can ill afford to take. We in the anthracite mining area in Pennsylvania recall the mid-thirties when British, Russian, Indochinese, German, Moroccan, and other foreign anthracite invaded our New England and Canadian markets to the extent of more than 2,000,000 tons per year. What the opening of new Lake States markets may entail to the anthracite industry bewilders the imagination. A great portion of this tonnage entered the United States duty-free because of either reciprocal trade agreements or most-favored-nation clauses in our treaties. It is estimated that approximately a half-million persons in the Atlantic- and Gulf-coast areas whose livelihood rests directly or indirectly upon this traffic would be adversely affected. Millions of dollars of investments would be wiped out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BECKWORTH). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS] is recognized for 1 hour.

LUSTRON CORP.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that defense housing occupies No. 1 priority in our defense program. A few days ago, one of our distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from the Seventh Congressional District of Tennessee, made some timely statements concerning this important subject on the floor of this House. Since then, I have spent considerable time and effort in an intensive investigation of this vital project. My investigations have disclosed some startling facts, which I would like to present as an aid to our defense effort.

As my honorable colleagues know, the Lustron Corp., formerly one of the Nation's leading manufacturers of prefabricated houses, is located near Columbus, Ohio. This great plant has been shut down for over a year.

Through loans made by the RFC, the Lustron Corp. owes the Federal Government some $37,500,000. Lustron officials have come up with a proposal to reactivate the plant, reschedule payments of this loan, and repay the moneys over a period of 6 to 7 years.

Mr. Speaker, I have learned that certain high Government officials are planning to scuttle Lustron and give it to the Navy to convert into an assembly plant for airplane frames.

Now, I am not concerned with the issue of whether or not Lustron should have had the loan granted them in the first place. The fact still remains that here is one of the most modern plants equipped to produce critical housing ever constructed, equipped with $15,500,000 worth of valuable and modern machinery, standing idle.

While our defense production lags all over the United States because of housing shortages, here is a plant that can be reactivated and turning out 100 units of housing a day in less than 3 months.

To my mind, any responsible person or persons in the employ of the Federal Government who can advocate destruction of a plant whose admitted salvage value is not more than $5,000,000, should be examined by a board of psychiatrists.

The acute housing shortage throughout the Nation has affected not only much-needed defense workers, but our fighting men as well and by that I mean our men training in camps all over the country.

Their morale has hit a new low and something must be done for them now.

I have in my possession photostatic copies of letters on surveys on housing conditions made late in 1950 by civilian and military authorities in various parts of the country. Their contents are an unbelievably accurate portrayal of conditions which have no right to exist in this Nation today.

Here are excerpts from several of them:

Scott Air Force Base, Ill.:

> We have 439 quarters and 2 trailer parks of 40 trailers for airmen and 20 trailers for officers. Of a population of approximately 14,000, some 4,000 are eligible for quarters. You will readily see that our capacity is limited and, therefore, the personnel who are not quartered at the base must find housing within a radius of 30 miles.

United States Atomic Energy Commission, Richland, Wash.:

> For permanent operating personnel on the project, we have need for 800 rental houses within the next 2 years. Several hundred Army personnel will also require housing in the same area.

Castle Air Force Base, Calif.:

> The latest survey revealed 1,215 families were without housing or living in substandard housing.

George Air Force Base, Calif.:

> Of the 1,000 families represented by personnel stationed at this base, which require dependent accommodations, it is estimated that 300 families will require quarters locally. Inasmuch as this base is situated on the Mojave Desert, 50 or 60 miles distant from communities which are capable an appreciable amount of rental possibilities, it is evident that the personnel of my command are seriously restricted for adequate housing.

Camp Breckinridge, Ky.:

Comparison of rents being charged before this post was reactivated and the present rate: Four families live in a converted barn. There are 11 two-room apartments available. Four are occupied by servicemen. The other seven are vacant. No modern facilities, no plumbing of any type, outside toilet with shower, walls of plasterboard, paint coming off. Occupants must use a coal stove for heat and hot plate for cooking. Rent, $50 a month for two rooms. Previous civilian occupants were paying $15 per month.

I might say I have made some personal investigation at some of the other camps, notably Camp Pickett in Virginia, and I found down there that many apartments, which are substandard by any set of standards you can apply, are renting at $100 and $125 a month to Army personnel.

I have endeavored to show how seriously the Government is in need of immediate housing. Manpower shortage is an item to be considered. Actual figures show that in erecting a Lustron house, a saving of 80 percent manpower is made, as against the building of conventional houses.

My investigation shows that the Government has need of better than 800,000 units, averaging 1,000 square feet per unit.

Here is some pertinent information about Lustron houses that I know will interest you all. During the course of his remarks recently, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] placed a letter in the RECORD from General Shepherd, former commanding general at Quantico, now in command of the Marines in Korea. In it, the general gave lavish praise of the 60 Lustron houses that had been erected at Quantico. They had been constructed at a saving to the taxpayers of the Nation of some $6,000 per unit.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard it said over and over again that housing is our No. 1 priority. That means housing both in the United States and on bases outside continental United States. Without adequate housing we cannot expect to do very much in our defense efforts.

Are you honorable gentlemen aware that the Federal Government is at present paying $39 per square foot for housing, outside continental United States? Lustron will erect their houses in Alaska and other out-of-country bases of the United States for $25 per square foot. A mere saving of some $14,000 a unit.

A Lustron house is one of the finest labor-saving structures this country has ever known. The Lustron house is prefabricated, made up in sections, and shipped to their destinations ready for erection. Any man who can handle a screw driver or wrench can erect a Lustron house.

If the Government will reactivate the Lustron Corporation, they can start production of a minimum of 100 houses every 24 hours. These are the very type of houses the military wants so urgently. Houses that may be used over and over again. And should it ever become necessary to dispose of surplus property as we do after every war, the Lustron house has both real and potential surplus value. I know of many instances where it has been necessary for the Government to dispose of conventional houses at virtual give-away prices.

A Lustron house will not deteriorate. It does not have to be painted, and there is practically no upkeep. And should it ever become necessary to dispose of these houses, they can be stored indefinitely and maintained for future needs.

I should like to make an interesting point of comparison at this time. I would like to compare a Lustron house with a can of beer.

The annual consumption of steel used in construction of Lustron houses, at the rate of 100 units per day, 365 days a year, is 300,000 tons. While the annual consumption of steel used by the beer industry in beer cans is 285,000 tons. This figure excludes the amount of tin used annually in these cans.

Reactivation of the Lustron plant will enable the taxpayers of the Nation to recover the $37,500,000 already loaned to the corporation. Not to mention a saving to the Government of from $6,000 to $14,000 per unit for each house constructed. Lustron could save the Federal Government annually better than $500,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Tennessee, has indicated that there was skulduggery and strange maneuvering involved in the attempted foreclosure of the loan to the Lustron Corp., and in view of the evasiveness and run-around I have been getting in trying to collate this information, I am convinced there is entirely too much covering up.

Why should the Navy wreck a plant that can be of such immediate aid to our defense production? The only use the Navy would make of the entire plant is to sell the machinery for salvage and use the bare walls as an assembly plant for airplane frames.

According to the record, Lustron has 23 acres of buildings occupying 200 acres of ground. There is ample space to build an assembly plant for the airplane factory without destroying Lustron. It is my understanding that the Government has been building some warehouses similar to the type of building required for an assembly plant for $3.50 a square foot. Further, I am told the airplane factory needs approximately 1,000,000 square feet for an assembly plant. In other words, construction of a new plant would cost the taxpayers no more than $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. But certain unscrupulous persons in the Government propose to destroy $15,500,000 worth of machinery and salvage the entire Lustron project at a total of $32,500,000 in order to expend another few million dollars to use the Lustron plant as an assembly plant. This is criminal.

The type of Government officials who will advocate such expenditures are men who should be removed from office. Our Government leaders must be men of sound judgment, of ability, of stature, with vision, a desire to cooperate, and a realization of the necessity for action. Unless we can be assured of this type of leadership, I fear that the huge appropriations this Congress has already made, and the additional appropriations that will be made in the years to come, will avail us just about as much as hair under the barber chair which is swept away each night.

Mr. Speaker, I think this Congress should demand that our Government officials discontinue their wrangling and get on with the business on hand. I propose to go into the matter of the Lustron corporation with some of the highest authorities in this Government, and, if for any reason some of our high-minded bureaucrats are permitted to junk such a magnificent plant, I, personally, will carry the message to the far corners of our country and demand that the taxpayers exact their pound of bureaucratic flesh.

These are perilous times. There is need for action. I hope that the Members of this illustrious body will become interested in this matter and join with us in reactivating Lustron Corp.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed grateful to the gentleman for bringing out the facts about the housing necessity of the Armed Forces. On January 12 I made a speech on the floor of this House stating that there was skulduggery in the RFC and that I would at a future date name names and places, and also bring out the facts about the closing down of the Lustron Corp., and refer also to Kaiser-Frazer and some others, the facts of which should be brought out.

On last Saturday, I believe it was, a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency put out an interim report in connection with its investigation of the RFC for the past 2 years. This report, when I made the speech last week, I asked the Members of the House to get when it came out on January 31.

I hold in my hand a confidential subcommittee print which will be released day after tomorrow, according to my understanding, in reference to this matter, and I hope each Member will get one of these reports because it bears out exactly what I said on January 12 in reference to the skulduggery, the almost criminal action of certain high officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the skulduggery of Young, Jacobs, and any other number of people to whom I referred on the floor last week.

It is also interesting to note what the gentleman from Ohio said about the photostatic copies he has from the armed services, and it is interesting to me particularly to note that it is the Navy, according to General Harrison, that wants this plant and that they want only the four walls. He says it is absolutely necessary that they have these four walls even though there are $15,500,000 of machinery in there which is good for nothing except the building of Lustron prefabricated houses. He said this is absolutely necessary even though it would cost over $15,000,000 to tear down the plant, resulting in the further loss of $15,500,000 of machinery, plus the fact it will take 12 to 14 months to clear it out and put it into operation.

General Harrison, who is president of I. T. & T., told me at a meeting I had with him that his company had just completed a warehouse for $2.50 a square foot; yet he wants to rid the taxpayers of this $15,500,000 worth of equipment, he wants to destroy this Lustron plant, because the Navy wants it, so he says.

I called Captain Reynolds of the United States Navy and he says they are in dire need of this plant. I also talked with some people at Columbus, Ohio, some of the underlings out there, not the top men, because they said they had orders from Washington to keep quiet. One of their highest-ranking officials told me: "I cannot discuss Lustron with you, because I have orders from Washington not to talk about it."

I talked with some of the other people and they say: "We do not want the Lustron plant destroyed, we need their houses. We could have a plant of four walls completed in shorter time and it would cost the taxpayers less money if some of the people down in Washington would let us go ahead and build an assembly plant."

They tell us it is the Navy that wants to bring about this wholesale destruction. Mr. Speaker, it is amusing to me to note some of the photostatic copies of communications I have from departments here in Washington.

Here is a photostatic copy of a speed letter from the Chief of Naval Operations to the Chief of Naval Personnel dated August 21, 1950—the latter part of 1950—which in part says:

Request continental naval activities be directed advise personnel ordered Pacific area not to bring or have dependents come to San Francisco area unless private arrangements in advance have been made for housing. Present housing shortage for Naval personnel is critical and is of increasing seriousness. The foregoing does not apply to hotel accommodations as there is no shortage at present.

That is from the Chief of Naval Operations to the Bureau of Personnel here in Washington, D. C. Yet it is strange that the Navy itself, according to General Harrison, wants to take this plant over and do away with housing that the Navy is so direly in need of.

Here is another letter from the commandant of the Eleventh Naval District:

A representative of your office has requested that I forward to you a statement on the housing situation in the San Diego area insofar as naval personnel are concerned.

The housing situation in the San Diego area is critical, both in private housing and in Navy and Federal housing. Motel rates are gradually increasing and housekeeping rooms for couples are very scarce. My housing office has over 500 applications for this last type of accommodation. Medium priced private rentals are rapidly decreasing while the listing of rentals in the $100 price per month bracket is increasing.

The Navy has 745 Homoka housing units in this area. There are over 200 applicants waiting for vacancies in these units. The Navy has 3,492 units in permanent housing projects in this area. There are approximately 300 shore based personnel awaiting assignment to these units. In an attempt to make space available in the permanent housing projects, 300 eviction notices have been served to tenants who have completed 3 years tenancy as of August 1, 1950. In many instances, extensions have been granted where tenants were found to be building or buying homes. Most of these extensions are to be terminated on February 1, 1951.

The shortage for housing for families of personnel at sea (in aircraft squadrons and ships) is extremely critical. There are over 1,000 applications on file for two-bedroom units in Federal projects for which these people are eligible. In an attempt to alleviate the situation for sea personnel with large families, the hardship cases in this group are being assigned to Homoja housing. There are many instances of personnel with two preschool age children being housed in one bedroom Federal units. Vacancies in the Federal housing projects are very, very scarce. It is believed that this is due to the increased labor and employment in local defense concerns as well as civil service personnel in Government activities.

Here is another letter: Headquarters, Ninth Naval District, Great Lakes, Ill., from the commandant to the Chief of Naval Personnel:

Forest Park, Ill., area. Military personnel assigned to the activity, married civilian personnel transferred from other stations, and married civilian personnel who must reside in the general area of the plant for reasons of economy are compelled to pay exorbitant rentals if they are successful in locating apartments, houses or housekeeping rooms in the general geographical proximity of the plant. A sampling of the rentals assessed reflects that 1-room unfurnished kitchenettes, when available, are rented for $62.50 monthly, a 4-room furnished house is available in nearby Maywood for $200 monthly, a 5-room unfurnished dwelling in Oak Park can be rented for $175 monthly, four four-room unfurnished flats will be available in River Forest on December 1, 1950, for $125 monthly, housekeeping rooms are sometimes available but the rentals range from $12 to $16 weekly and single rooms alone rent for $9 to $14 weekly.

Realtors who handle rentals in the Forest Park, Maywood, Berwyn, Cicero and Oak Park communities, all near the plant, mutually term conditions with respect to availability of rental units as poor with no foreseeable prospects of relief. There is no public housing in the area and there is none proposed at this time.

A reasonably accurate barometer of area housing conditions is the number and nature of inquiries received by the employee counselor, this activity. Efforts to alleviate the problem, by making counseling service available to military and civilian personnel, have met with little success. This is due to the total absence of listings for rental units for families. Some of the plant's 1,400 civilian personnel have purchased dwellings in the vicinity. In contrast, however, the housing plight of others has frequently had direct effect upon the station's personnel requirements. A notable example occurred recently when an employee transferred to NOP Forest Park from the Central Torpedo Office, Newport, R. I., was compelled to return to Newport after the transfer had been consummated, due to his inability to find housing for himself and family.

There is no other rental housing, public or private, available in the immediate area of Crane, Ind., and housing conditions in the Bloomington, Bedford, Bloomfield, Washington areas (20–35 miles from NAD, Crane), are critical.

Great Lakes, Ill., area: The housing situation is now critical. There are long waiting lists for all Navy and other Government-controlled housing. Naval personnel concerned should be strongly advised against transporting their families 'nto the area prior to making definite housing arrangement, unless they are prepared to pay in excess of $75 per month for rent. Civilian rentals are available in very limited number in small communities 10 to 20 miles from the Naval Training Center. Motel and trailer camp accommodations are very limited in number.

Omaha, Nebr., area: There is an acute shortage of housing of any description. Rental property is particularly scarce. Rents are exorbitant. Children are not welcome.

Any person with dependents in the Naval Service, officer or man ordered to this area for duty and for whom public quarters on this Reserve Center are not available will have extreme difficulty in locating a place to live suitable or otherwise.

St. Louis, Mo., area: No Navy or Government-controlled housing is available in this area. There is an acute shortage of private rental units and rents for furnished apartments are from $100 to $150 per month.

It is virtually impossible to rent an apartment, either furnished or unfurnished, for a short-term period.

Denver, Colo., area: In the Denver area housing is critical. It is extremely difficult to find homes to rent and those that are available usually rent for $125 per month and up. Small unfurnished apartments, when one can be found, may be rented from $75 and up. There are numerous motels in this area where two rooms with bath and kitchen may be obtained during the winter months from about $100 per month and during the summer for $50 per week and up. In general, hotel rooms are exceedingly scarce and are remote from the station.

Olathe, Kans., area: The housing conditions for the local Olathe, Kans., area are regarded as poor and immediate housing is not available. There are housing possibilities in the smaller towns 20 to 30 miles distant from NAS, Olathe.

Housing in the Kansas City area is regarded as critical, unless personnel are prepared to pay $90 to $100 per month for rent. Desirable housing for rent under the above figures is extremely hard to find.

Naval personnel concerned are advised not to transport dependents into the Olathe, Kans.-Kansas City area prior to making definite housing arrangements.

Indianapolis, Ind., area: The housing situation is not good and rental housing is not within the means of the average naval or civilian person.

Reopening of Army installations in the area is making the situation worse.

Here is another photostatic letter from the commandant, Eighth Naval District, New Orleans, to the Chief of Naval Personnel:

1. The housing situation in New Orleans is still somewhat critical, and civilian housing is quite expensive.

2. Enlisted personnel with children will have a varying period of delay, 1 to 4 weeks, depending upon their needs, before assignment in the Bienville homes (low rent) housing naval housing project. These apartments are unfurnished except for stove and refrigerator.

3. Officers and enlisted personnel without children are not assigned quarters in Bienville homes at present.

4. Civilian furnished housing is available at rates of $50 up for one-bedroom apartments, and $90 up for two-bedroom houses. Unfurnished civilian housing is very scarce.

5. Hotel accommodations are practically impossible, except by very early reservation, and then limited to a maximum of 5 days. Auto courts are available at $5 up per day.

6. Families should not be brought to the New Orleans area until housing has been secured unless sufficient personal funds are available to cover the waiting period.

Yet the Navy still wants this for an assembly plant.

Here is the headquarters Eighth Naval District, saying the same thing, that housing is critical.

Headquarters Thirteenth Naval District, Seattle, Wash., the same thing.

Fifth Naval District, commandant to the Chief of Naval Personnel: Housing is critical.

Commandant, Third Naval District to the Bureau of Naval Personnel: Housing situations are critical.

All the way through, Mr. Speaker, you find the same thing. I could quote from every naval district in the United States, with the exception of two, and they all say that defense and servicemen housing is critical, and they are pleading and begging for housing. Why should the Navy, according to General Harrison, want to destroy a plant that could produce 100 houses a day, houses that we are in dire need of, at a minimum cost, when the commandants of the naval districts insist that they are in dire need of housing and that the housing situation is very critical?

This morning I called Mr. Foley down at the Housing Administration and asked him if the Navy had requested any housing. He said, "No." I said, "Is it your expectation that they will?" He said, "Yes." He said, "The housing that we are in dire need of is for 6,000 families." That is where the new hydrogen plant is being erected. They are in need of houses for 3,000 families at Paducah, Ky., for the Atomic Energy Commission. He said, "We need them fast." Yet my friends, to erect a plant where we could produce 100 houses a day at $6,000 a unit savings to the taxpayers seems criminal to me, because if we could get these houses at Savannah and the houses at Paducah in nothing flat, then we could go ahead with our atomic-energy program at a fast pace, which we need to do. The economy and savings in Lustron houses has been proven at Quantico. They had three bids on houses down there, and the Navy could not buy most of the houses because they cost too much. They wanted $13,000 for them. We did not appropriate enough money for them to buy those 68 houses at $13,000 a unit. So, the Navy put in another call for bids. Lustron houses were sent down there for $7,200, which saved the taxpayers of this country $6,000 on each one of those houses.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman says that Lustron houses were sent down there for $7,200 per unit. What did it cost to get those constructed per unit?

Mr. SUTTON. Of course, I have not gone into what it would actually cost to get them constructed. Does the gentleman mean to manufacture them or construct them? Seven thousand two hundred dollars was the price at Quantico put up.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean Lustron would erect the houses for $7,200?

Mr. SUTTON. Erect the houses for $7,200 a unit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A turnkey job?

Mr. SUTTON. A turnkey job. It saved the taxpayers $6,000 a unit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the situation in that locality so that organized labor would permit Lustron to do so?

Mr. SUTTON. I believe you will find organized labor is behind Lustron 100 percent, because I have telegrams from all over Ohio and all over this country admiring the stand I took on January 12 when I condemned the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for trying to close down this plant. Manpower is a shortage as well as housing right now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS] referred, if I am not mistaken, to the saving that could be effectuated by shipping Lustron production to the Alaska bases, as an illustration.

Mr. SUTTON. I believe the gentleman will find that there are two of them in Alaska now. The house the Government has been buying to put in Alaska was costing $39 a square foot, according to their own figures, and the Lustron house costs $25, which was a saving of $14 a square foot in Alaska, erected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A friend of mine who constructs fabricated dwelling quarters spent $75,000 of his own funds to try to break the combine in Alaska. He could put in completed two-bedroom dwelling units for around $11,000, as against about $45,000 that we are paying for two-bedroom dwelling units there at Anchorage and Fairbanks. After he had sunk the $75,000 and had put in three or four units, he found himself cold-bloodedly up against the rules and regulations of the Federal Housing Administration and organized labor in Alaska, and he has had to withdraw from the field, although he is in position to continue to make those shipments provided he can get the support of the Federal Government and organized labor in letting him install those units at the two bases at Anchorage and Fairbanks.

There is a combination up there that prevents him from doing so by reason of the fact that there is so much gravy in the $45,000, $55,000, and $75,000 homes that are being built there. So I personally do not believe, after watching this thing for a number of years and having been up in the Territory and held hearings all over the Territory, that if Lustron were equipped with a billion dollars of capital it could necessarily break the combine in Alaska and get these low-priced units up there.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I might say to the gentleman that he perhaps knows more about the situation in Alaska than any other Member of the House. I certainly think he knows what he is talking about. On the other hand, may I say that the Government needs a lot of houses in Alaska. It seems to me that if the Government cannot buy houses where it wants to, if it cannot get houses at a price that will save almost 50 percent to the taxpayers in taking the houses up there and erecting them, then the whole situation needs extensive looking into.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman 100 percent in that observation. That is the reason I am trying to make this little contribution here.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can see no reason or sense to this high cost in Alaska, except that the Federal Government agencies have let those combinations in restraint of trade proceed.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. That might be a good place for the Committee on Armed Services to begin an investigation. As I recall, we gave them authority to do that, just last Friday. In trying to check on these procurement agencies, I think the Armed Services Committee has a very fertile field to work in. I believe there is plenty of work ahead for them to do, from the little bit of looking into it I have done, not only in the construction field but in procurement generally.

Mr. SUTTON. May I say to my distinguished friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] that his aims are the same as mine, in that if we can get houses into Alaska, not for $42,000 or $45,000 but for $25,000 or even $10,000, I am interested in saving the overburdened taxpayers that money.

The case I had brought to my attention was through my investigation of the RFC before the talk I made on the floor of the House on January 12. When I got into the investigation of the RFC I got into Lustron. I thought an injustice had been done there in the closing down of that factory by certain people who wanted to take over Lustron for their own measly lust of gold, including some of the directors of RFC that I mentioned before—Mr. Dunham, for example. If we can save the taxpayers $1,400,000 a day in producing houses for national defense to go to Alaska, regardless of what company it is, I am wholeheartedly in favor of it. If we can clean out a Government agency, whether it is Democratic or Republican—and I being a Democrat it is hard to condemn my own administration—where skulduggery exists, I believe the taxpayers should not be robbed, and we should not let that skulduggery go on. That is why I took the floor to help in cleaning out the RFC. I made the talk on the basis that the taxpayers want it because it is a $2,000,000,000 corporation of the Federal Government, and at the same time we would get these houses which are so badly needed for our defense and get them as cheaply as we can and as fast as possible, as well as getting the best for the least expense, for the armed services.

That is my sole purpose in this matter. I am sure the gentleman from Ohio has the same intention, and I am positive that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has the same idea in mind.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. May I say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not know anything about the background of the RFC dealings with Lustron. As I said earlier in my speech the $37,500,000 that the RFC loaned to Lustron is water over the dam. They received it, and whether the money should have been loaned or whether it should not have been loaned is beside the point now. Now the point is, as I see it, that there is at least $15,500,000 worth of expensive, almost brand-new equipment out there which cannot be used for anything except to build this particular type of house. The question now comes up, are we going to go ahead and lose $37,500,000 and write that money off the books and, as the Navy has been quoted in the press as saying, send bulldozers in and just bulldoze that machinery out of there and destroy it so that the value of the machinery is absolutely destroyed, except for what it is worth as junk, or are we going to use the machinery for something that we need? As I see it two wrongs do not make a right, and if it was wrong to lend them the money in the beginning, that is neither here nor there. The point, I reiterate, is are we going to destroy this $15,500,000 worth of machinery which cannot be used for any other purpose when we so badly need housing at Army bases and all over the country, at our atomic energy plants, and so forth? I have personally gone to some of these Army camps to observe the situation at first hand. I tell you it is no wonder that the morale of some of these troops at some of these camps is very low when they see their families coming down there to exist in the kind of places that they are living in around these camps, because the Government has not met its obligations and has not provided quarters for them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Yes, I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It stands to reason that American genius can produce prefabricated houses at low-unit cost if it can produce automobiles and flying machines and railroad cars and what-not. Here is the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House holding hearings now on the very far-reaching so-called defense housing bill with apparently every intention of going out and spending literally hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of acquiring low-unit cost dwellings for our people at those places where defense bases are to be built, that is, for the workers, the structural workers, or the permanent residents of the base; and for permanent homes throughout the country. I agree with the gentleman; I think it is getting awfully close to treason against our people to throw out fifteen or twenty millions of dollars of newly designed and recently built up-to-date equipment when there is so much need for its use. There just is not any sense to that kind of performance. I do not care what the argument on the other side of the question might be. It takes time, labor, and precious material to build these wonderful machines. That machinery should not be destroyed. As the gentleman says, it is not a question now whether the loans were good loans or bad loans. That is beside the point. The question is how you are going to get low-cost housing for the benefit of the fellow who buys it or for the benefit of the taxpayer if it is used in a public manner. Why not use the equipment that was built for that purpose?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. In my opinion he is 100 percent right. The only argument I have heard from General Harrison against reactivating this plant is that the plant went bankrupt. The General may be a good businessman. I do not know. I understand he has been president of the I. T. & T. for some time. It so happens that my father and I have owned some stock in that corporation for perhaps the past 20 years. And the only thing I have ever gotten from them so far is a bunch of explanations as to why they have not paid any dividends. So I do not think he should be throwing any rocks at a corporation simply because it went bankrupt. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] hit the nail on the head when they said that the essential thing is that this $15,500,000 worth of expensive, hard-to-get, hard-to-manufacture machinery ought not to be junked.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The gentleman ought to know that last year we built in this country 1,500,000 housing units. Now this department of Government has fixed it up so that we will not be able to build half a million this year. You are right about the need for more houses, but if we have the Federal Government making it so that no one can build a house, what good will it do to fix up Lustron or anybody else?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. The gentleman raises a point that I would like to answer. After all is said and done, if we do not get so wrapped up in our daily tasks and the requests of our constituents, we are the ones who can do something about it. That is why I am trying to bring it out on the floor today.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SUTTON. The gentleman mentioned General Harrison. I was talking with him the other day on this subject. I went to the White House, and I was sent from the White House to see the genial and capable Administrator of the Office of Defense Mobilization, Charles E. Wilson, and from there I was sent to General Harrison. Last Saturday at 10 o'clock I was in General Harrison's office talking to him about this matter. In our conversation I brought out the fact which the gentleman brought out this afternoon, because he told me that they used 385,000 tons of steel for beer cans, excluding tin. I knew it took only 300,000 tons of steel to make 100 houses per day of prefabricated houses. When General Harrison told me that he was recommending that Lustron be turned over to the Navy, I said, "Which is more important, 385,000 tons of steel for beer cans or 300,000 tons of steel for housing?" I wish you could have seen the expression on his face. He blew up. He said, "Beer is essential for the morale of the American people." I ask you Members of this Congress which is more essential for these boys in the service, a beer can or a house.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. If anyone cares to go out here to the rack in the Speaker's lobby and get yesterday's paper—I just came back from Ohio about 12:15, and I had with me the Cleveland Plain Dealer. There is a quarter page of ads of companies in Cleveland that are offering steel, asking for inquiries about steel. Some of them list the amounts of steel, the sizes and shapes and the strips that they have on hand. I thought there was a shortage of steel. In fact, I was amazed when I read that yesterday. I do not know whether this is gray-market steel or European steel or what kind of steel it is, but anyone knows when there is open traffic going on in steel, they advertise in the papers, the big Sunday metropolitan papers like the Cleveland Plain Dealer; these dealers are not covering up the fact that they have steel.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. That is a question I was about to ask. Is this black-market steel? and what is the price of it? You can buy steel in Chicago today at 24 cents a pound if you want to pay for it.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. I think he has a point. I think perhaps some of these regulators downtown ought to be doing a little more regulating along that line instead of the kind of regulating they are doing. I am getting a little tired of it all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was going to address an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON], but I see he has been called from the floor. However, he made a remark to the effect that private home construction is limited to about half the units built last year. I think that limitation—and this is what I wanted to verify—I think that limitation is based on the amount of material that is allocated for the use of the private citizen who wishes to build. That does not mean to say within the concepts of the military program there is not a lot of material which can be used for building dwelling units. That is the point I want to clear up, but my friend has been called off the floor.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is exactly right, and, of course, I think too many of us take for granted that the military is so sacrosanct that their conclusions and opinions are not to be questioned, but it so happens that I have been around the world a bit since the last war. I have seen literally thousands of planes sitting all over the world being destroyed by the elements. I am not in position to say that the Navy should not have so many planes or that it should have so many, but I think we ought to look into the matter carefully before we give them authority to purchase 50,000 planes or any other great number of planes when we find thousands of planes sitting out in the waste places rusting out. I have seen them in Egypt, for instance, as far as the eye could reach; there they were. I was told by people who should know that some of them had never been in the air except to be flown from the United States to that point. I think the whole problem is that some of these people downtown seem to me to be rushing into the thing pell mell and without enough thought.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SUTTON. I wish to state to the gentleman from Ohio that before they carry out the decision made by General Harrison on wrecking this plant, which to me is criminal, notwithstanding the fact the decision was made by a general of the United States Army, the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency is going out to Columbus next Monday and Tuesday to investigate, because they think something smells pretty bad.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I am glad to hear that the Senate is to make an investigation. I think it would be a good thing if some committee of the House were to go out there and take a look at this situation also.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This has nothing to do with the sale or disposition of the Lustron Co., but the gentleman may recall that the RFC refused a loan to the Waltham Watch Co., a loan which would have kept that plant in operation and enabled it to fill Government orders for precision instruments which are so vitally needed in our national defense, and also to prevent a great industry from being killed.

Mr. SUTTON. The trouble is they did not have Merle Young on their side or Rex Jacobs.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. What the gentlewoman from Massachusetts states is true. The thing I am interested in at this point is not trying to dig up all the past errors of the RFC; I am just interested in trying to investigate and prevent the destruction of $15,500,000 worth of machinery that the taxpayers paid for that is sitting there in Columbus idle now; another arm of this bureaucracy proposes to destroy it. One arm of the bureaucracy created it, another now wishes to destroy it.

I know that the Congress and the individual Members of the Congress do not have time to check every one of these stupendous projects which are being undertaken, but I think when one is brought to our attention that we might do something about it and it might make an example and might, to use a cliche, put the fear of God into the hearts of some of the bureaucrats downtown, and make them think twice before they get to issuing these mandatory orders: "Do this; do that" without any regard to the amount of money involved or the people who will have to pay for it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It all fits into the same picture. The Waltham Watch Co. is now back in operation making precision instruments, but only after having wasted a lot of precious time. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein excerpts from Report No. 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, an excerpt from the January 2, 1951, daily statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, quotations from the February 4, 1951, issue of the Washington Sunday Star, and perhaps two or three other quotations I may wish to include.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, when General Eisenhower made his report to the Members of the House last Thursday, among other things he said:

> The very problems involved in the very expression "defense of the freeworld" are so vast and so complex that no man could hope in a lifetime of study and reflection to solve them all. He can certainly not be sure of the accuracy of his conclusions.
> The next assumption I would like to make is that we are concerned not only with the protection of our territories, of our rights, of our privileges, but we are also concerned with the defense of a way of life. Our own way of life has certain factors that must persist if that way of life itself is to persist, for example, the freedom of the individual, his political freedom, his freedom of worship, and that he will have an economy based upon free enterprise. In other words, our system must remain solvent, as we attempt a solution of this great problem of security. Else we have lost the battle from within that we are trying to win from without.
> Now, military defense is made up of many things. The things that defend or that act for it on the field of battle are many and varied and as complex as the Nation itself. The fighting forces are but the cutting edge of a very great machine. The inspiration and the power which we find in the hearts of citizens and all of the various mechanisms that are necessary are represented in our investment capacity, our economic processes, and so on, so that when we talk about defending the free world, we are not merely talking about the divisions and groups and battleships and planes. We are talking about what is in our hearts, what we understand with our heads, and what we are going to do as a body.
> As I said a moment ago, military strength is made up of various things, of which the fighting forces are merely the cutting edge. One of the greatest factors in this whole thing is morale, and, ladies and gentlemen, almost the rest of my talk will be made up, directly or indirectly, in discussions of this question of morale; because morale involves understanding, it involves heart, it involves courage, fortitude, basic purpose.

MUST ACCEPT DISADVANTAGE

> We must accept, as we must always accept, the disadvantage, militarily, internationally, that goes with peaceful intent and defensive purpose only. Any aggressor picks a day on which he intends to strike, and he builds everything to that point. We have to devise a scheme that we can support if necessary over the next 20 years, 30 years, whatever may be the time necessary, as long as the threat, the announced threat of aggression remains in the world, and that means since we must be ready at any time, one of the important times is today, and from there on.

FINANCING BIG CONSIDERATION

> I believe that properly adjusted to this purpose of ours, the purpose of peace and security, is our ability to carry it forward without insolvency for year after year. I believe that within those limits we must now go to the production of equipment exactly as if we were preparing for an emergency and war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am very much impressed with the general's repeated reference to the question of solvency and insolvency. Undoubtedly, the general has some big question in his mind as to how this undertaking is to be financed and whether or not we can do the job of financing and still retain an economy based upon free enterprise.

Mr. Speaker, when we entered World War I we faced a Federal debt of less than $1,500,000,000. When we entered World War II this debt was about $49,000,000,000 and now as we begin the operations under what might be termed World War III we have a Federal debt of about $257,000,000,000. These are very fundamental facts in the light of what the general has reported to us.

INSURED BANK HOLDINGS OF FEDERAL SECURITY

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation report No. 33, page 9, shows that insured banks on June 30, 1950, held $72,553,872,000 of the United States Government obligations, direct and guaranteed. That is a fundamental fact, at this particular hour, we cannot ignore.

TREASURY NONMARKETABLE OBLIGATION

January 2, 1951, the Treasury had outstanding nonmarketable obligations in the form of Treasury savings notes, United States savings bonds series D, E, F, and G, and depositary bonds, and Armed Forces leave bonds and Treasury bonds, investment series, totaling some $68,124,937,281.74. The amount of series E bonds alone outstanding January 2 amounted to $34,546,168,368.23. During the period January to December 20, 1950, the sales of series E bonds by the Treasury amounted to about $3,500,000,000 plus, with cash redemptions of those bonds by the people of $3,800,000,000. In the face of all the selling camapign pressure the people redeemed small savings bonds issues during the year 1950 of about $1,250,000,000 in excess of sales. In the years 1952, 1953, 1954, and 1955 the Treasury will face a super task in refunding maturing series E bonds alone. Here are the figures taken from the January 2, 1951, Treasury statement:

1952	$3,873,457,573.12
1953	5,361,717,550.00
1954	5,923,756,771.66
1955	4,704,723,804.41

And with the years 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959 running from $2,400,000,000 up to $2,800,000,000 annually. Of course there will be many other maturities in the marketable issues which will not be met through payment because the tax dollars will not be there to meet the maturities. This simply means more and more refunding operations faced by the Treasury.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the general referred to "talking about what is in our hearts, what we understand with our heads, and what we are going to do as a body," he must have somewhat had in mind this financing problem and the solvency of our financial system.

On or about the 18th of January last, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder appeared before a group in New York City and made some observations pertaining to the interest rate to govern on refunding operations and such new issues as may be necessary due to the deficit financing of the Treasury. Secretary Snyder certainly left the country to understand the financing would be made within the pattern of a 2½-percent rate, and of course his statements carried the implication there would be no increase (within the near future) in the short-term rates. He likewise announced that the holders of the near maturing series E bonds would be given the opportunity to automatically extend the time of the maturing bond for another 2 years, and this would be equivalent to a 20-year bond at an interest rate of about, say, 2.9 percent per annum.

I understand that the Committee on Ways and Means will have a bill on the floor of the House this week authorizing that transaction.

This is a ridiculously low rate for such a transaction, especially with the buying power of the dollar continually declining. But that is not all, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Snyder, among other things, said:

> In the firm belief, after long consideration, that the 2½-percent long-term rate is fair and equitable to the investor, and that market stability is essential, the Treasury Department has concluded, after a joint conference with President Truman and Chairman McCabe, of the Federal Reserve Board, that the refunding and new money issues will be financed with the pattern of that rate.

At the time I wondered about the absolute accuracy of the Secretary's statement insofar as it involved Chairman McCabe of the so-called independent Federal Reserve Board. For too many years, Mr. Speaker, the good people of this country have been subjected to the suicidal economic or financial war or feud running between Secretary Snyder, and backed by President Truman, and the Board of Governors and the Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve System.

The fight now is in the open. President Truman has really put the silk hat on this contest between the two agencies in sending his now famous letter on this subject to Chairman McCabe of the Board. By reason of what Secretary Snyder said at the New York meeting which misled many to believe the entire Board was in agreement with the Treasury on interest rates on refunding and new issues, plus what the President said in his letter to Chairman McCabe, and in the light of the actual facts, I am forced to the conclusion a deal was made between the President and the Secretary to accomplish what? Simply to so compromise the Board that the interest rates and the supply of credit and money can be dominated by the political office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, on the front page of yesterday's Sunday Star appears this article:

ECCLES ASTONISHED BY TRUMAN STAND ON INTEREST RATE POLICY—DISPUTES ASSUMPTION THAT BOARD SUPPORTS TREASURY POSITION

An apparent attempt by President Truman to smooth over Treasury and Federal Reserve Board differences in the Federal interest rate policy backfired yesterday and at least one Board member threatened to resign.

The dispute became deeper and more bitter when Marriner S. Eccles, a member and former chairman, declared he was astonished by a Presidential letter indicating that the Board sided completely with the Treasury's stand for low interest rates on Government obligations.

He disclosed a record of a White House meeting at which President Truman last Wednesday talked with the Board's Open Market Committee. The President, in a letter to Board Chairman Thomas B. McCabe, said he had assurance that the agency would fully support the Treasury defense financing program, both as to refunding and new issues.

The record stated that the President made no mention of recent differences of opinion with the Treasury. It also contained no direct references to Treasury defense financing programs both as to refunding and new issues.

At the root of the controversy between the Treasury and Board officials are two major questions:

Is the Federal Reserve System, created by Congress in 1913 as an independent agency to control the credit structure being dominated by the administration and the Treasury?

Does the Treasury's so-called easy money policy of low interest rates add to inflation?

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder has defended that policy. He warned recently that an increase of as much as one-half of 1 percent in the average rate of interest on outstanding Treasury obligations would boost debt carrying charges by $1,500,000,000 a year.

DOUGLAS IS FOE OF POLICY

That policy is disputed not only by some Board members but also by some influential Members of Congress, notably Senator DOUGLAS, Democrat, of Illinois, chairman of a joint economic committee group that last year looked into the problem. Senator DOUGLAS reportedly will lead a congressional drive against what he has called the Treasury's devotion to low-interest rates that will ultimately cost the Government and taxpayers far more in higher prices for goods and services.

Mr. Eccles, in disclosing a record of what took place at the White House meeting, explained that the committee, made up of the seven Board members and presidents of Federal Reserve banks in five metropolitan centers, agreed on the record. He added, however, that:

"Any other comment would be superfluous. I am giving you this solely on my own responsibility and without the knowledge of other members of the committee. It is most unfortunate that this vitally important matter of monetary and credit control which Congress has placed in the Federal Reserve System has been raised in a manner which only needlessly adds to the confusion."

M'CABE CONFERS WITH TRUMAN

Following a notation that Chairman McCabe had met with Mr. Truman in the President's office shortly before the meeting with the committee in the Cabinet room, the record continued:

"The President stated that during the past few weeks he had met with many groups in Government because he wanted them to know the seriousness of the present emergency and to ask for their full assistance and cooperation. He stated that the present emergency is the greatest this country has ever faced, including the two World Wars and all the preceding wars.

"The President emphasized that we must combat Communist influence on many fronts. He said one way to do this is to maintain confidence in the Government's credit and in Government securities. He felt that if people lose confidence in Government securities all we hope to gain from our military mobilization, and war if need be, might be jeopardized. He recalled his wartime experience when he bought Liberty bonds out of his soldier's pay. When he returned from France and had to sell his bonds to buy clothes and other civilian things, he got only $80 or a little more for his hundred-dollar bonds and later they were run up to $125. He said he did not want the people who hold our bonds now to have done to them what was done to him.

"He stated that most politicians would not ask for higher taxes prior to election but that he had vetoed a reduction in taxes before election and won anyway. If it had not been for that irresponsible reduction in taxes, he said, the Federal budget would have been in balance all these years. He stated that he wanted to levy all the taxes necessary to pay the cost of the defense effort, which, he felt, would be between one hundred and one hundred and twenty billion dollars over the next few years. He stated that he had just met with the congressional leaders and asked for $16,500,000,000 in taxes and that he expected to get this in two bites—a quick tax bill yielding about ten billion and the other six and a half billion to come after more careful study. He wanted us to understand that he is doing all he can on the tax front to combat inflation.

"The President gave each member of the committee a copy of The Federal Budget in Brief. He expressed the opinion that the budget had been pared to an irreducible minimum. He said that he had participated in the preparation of 16 budgets and felt he was competent to judge and understand them. Maybe something could be cut out, but it would make a hole in the defense effort and that he would not do.

"The President said he felt we had done a good job and wanted us to continue to do a good job in maintaining the financial structure of the country. He further stated that he had had a number of conferences with our chairman but this was his first opportunity to meet and talk with the entire committee. He made no mention of recent differences of opinion with the Treasury."

COMMITTEE WORK PRAISED

"Chairman McCabe thanked the President for receiving us and indicated that we all share his concern for the maintenance of the Government credit. He stated that although the support of the Government bond market was something in the nature of an extra-curricular activity for the Federal Open Market Committee, it had performed this service for the past 9 years or more and had done a very good job. He stated that the committee had always carefully weighed its responsibilities to the Government and to the general economy as well and that these are statutory responsibilities which it could not assign, if it would.

"The President interjected that he was familiar with that, but wanted the committee to continue its good work during the defense period. He emphasized that he was speaking of the defense period only.

"Chairman McCabe referred to the fact that in the last few days the Government bond market had gone up a few thirty-seconds and then had come down a few thirty-seconds, which he considered to be proper market operational technique. The President said he would not undertake to discuss details of that kind, that he was principally concerned with maintaining the confidence of the public in Government securities as one way of presenting a unified front against communism. He did not indicate exactly the details of what he had in mind, but he reiterated that we should do everything possible to maintain confidence in the Government securities market. The Chairman outlined concisely some of the responsibilities with which we were charged, principally to promote stability in the economy by regulating the volume, cost, and availability of money, keeping in mind at all times the best interests of the whole economy. The Chairman turned to the members of the Federal Open Market Committee and said the President could depend on everyone in the group to do what they could to protect the Government credit."

DIFFERENCES EXPECTED

"Chairman McCabe stated that with a group of men such as those composing the Federal Open Market Committee there would, of course, be differences of opinion as to just how the best results could be obtained. The President nodded, indicating that he understood this. The Chairman suggested the following procedure—that we consult frequently with the Secretary of the Treasury, giving him our views at all times and presenting our point of view strongly, and that by every means possible we try to reach an agreement. If this could not be accomplished, he (the Chairman) would like to discuss the matter with the President. The President said this was entirely satisfactory and closed the meeting on the same note as it was opened, namely, that he wanted us to do everything possible to maintain confidence in the credit of the Government and in the Government securities market and to support the President of the United States in achieving this end.

"The Chairman stated at the end of the meeting that he presumed that any statement concerning this meeting would be made by the President. The President said he would have no objection to our making a statement and thought that it might be a good thing. The Chairman then asked him what would be the general nature of the statement, and he said it can be said that we discussed the general emergency situation, the defense effort, budget and taxes, and that he had stressed the need for public confidence in the Government's credit. He said further that he would be talking to the press the next morning and that he would be prepared to answer questions that might be raised. Since the President indicated that he would be discussing it with the press, the Chairman said he felt it would be best for us not to issue any statement to the press at this time. The President did not seem particularly concerned about whether or not a statement was issued. The press conference scheduled for the following morning was canceled because of General Eisenhower's appearance at the Capitol."

TRUMAN LETTER RELEASED

The record concluded with press association accounts of an announcement Thursday by Presidential Press Secretary Joseph H. Short that the Board had pledged its support to the President to maintain the stability of Government securities as long as the emergency lasts. Mr. Short was quoted as saying the announcement was "to quiet those rumors" of differences of opinion between the Treasury and the Board.

The White House late Friday gave out the text of President Truman's letter to Chairman McCabe.

Expressing thanks to the Board and committee for "their expression of full cooperation," the letter stated:

"Your assurance that you would fully support the Treasury defense financing program, both as to refunding and new issues, is of vital importance to me. As I understand it, I have your full assurance that the market on Government securities will be stabilized and maintained at present levels in order to assure the successful financing requirements and to establish in the minds of the people confidence concerning Government credit."

Based on the facts and on what has now appeared in the paper, and on Mr. Eccles' testimony before the Senate committee, I repeat that I think a deal was made between the Secretary of the Treasury and the President. When Mr. Eccles appeared before the Senate committee, among other things, he said this:

People hold an unparalleled amount of liquid assets in the form of bank deposits, Government bonds, equity in insurance policies, building and loan shares, and other forms. Potentialities for inflation are now tremendous. It would be impossible to prevent inflation under these conditions without at least balancing the Federal budget. As inflation proceeds, the desire increases to convert liquid assets into money and then into goods and services.

That is the reason people are running away from the ownership of dollars to the ownership of things, because they do not have confidence in the constant buying power of the dollar, simply because the administration continues to proceed with policies which generate the inflationary forces instead of taking steps which will destroy those forces.

This is what is known as the flight from the dollar. Thus you can have an inflation even if all Federal deficit financing is done outside the banks.

He further said:

The only way to stop access to Federal Reserve funds is by withdrawing Federal Reserve support from the Government securities market and penalizing borrowing by the member banks from the Federal Reserve banks. As long as the Federal Reserve is required to buy Government securities at the will of the market for the purpose of defending a fixed pattern of interest rates established by the Treasury, it must stand ready to create new bank reserves in unlimited amount. This policy makes the entire banking system, through the action of the Federal Reserve System, an engine of inflation.

Nobody knows that any better than Secretary Snyder. I will not say the same of Mr. Truman, because I do not think he knows much more about technical banking, generally speaking, than a lot of high-school boys who have studied the subject some in our high-school system. This whole question is technical and difficult and on it he has not specialized. He leaves the matters largely to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Going a step further, Mr. Allan Sproul, who is one of the top men in the Federal Reserve banking picture, had this to say, and all in reference to the anouncement of the Secretary:

I am afraid that the announced debt management policy would lead us directly or indirectly into too much financing by the banks, if we had to do any substantial amount of deficit financing.

Going further, Mr. Sproul said:

And even in terms of possible refunding of bank-held debt, by sale of long-term obligations to nonbank investors who temporarily find other outlets for funds lacking, it would have shortcomings. It runs the risk of falling short of attracting willing nonbank investors in the first instance, and of creating reluctant holders of Government securities for the longer run. We must have learned from our experience during and following the last war, with respect to market bonds, and more recently since the Korean fighting started, with respect to savings bonds, that these are real risks. If these risks were realized, they would mean that too much of our financing would sooner or later be done with bank credit based on the ready availability of Federal Reserve credit. And when that credit began to express itself in inflationary price advances, we would again find our powers to control the inflationary brew greatly impeded by the needs of a Government security market requiring extended periods of extraordinary support.

Remember I gave you the figures of the bonds held by the banks in excess of $72,000,000,000 last June 30. The job is to keep this new financing out of the bank portfolios. How can you do that? If you want the people to buy them, how can you have the people buy them other than by an interest rate which will cause the people to put their money into Government bonds on a long-term basis, and then protect the buying power of the dollar so that if you buy a 20-year bond today, when it matures and you cash it in you will have the same buying power that you put into the bond at the time you bought it. The gentleman from Texas, as he probably will state later on today, and as he stated before—and this is no criticism of him because these are his views—he is entitled to his views the same as I am entitled to my views—as I say the gentleman from Texas will probably state that his position is that a rate high enough to induce you to buy long-term Government bonds and keep the bonds out of the banks will run up the cost of carrying the debt. Of course it would. But the great Creator of the universe certainly knows that that type of operation would save our people literally billions of dollars which they are now losing by reason of the inflationary forces. As the Government goes out to buy 150 or 200 or 500 billion dollars' worth of goods for defense purposes, it would save the Government of the United States, namely, the taxpayers of this country, additional billions of dollars by preventing the inflationary forces from running against those purchase orders to be placed by the Government. So he who advocates a low interest rate on a great Federal debt simply so that you can stand up and say that the faith and credit of the Government was never so high as it is today as a result of the rigged low-interest rate which the Treasury is now advocating and thus forcing the issues into the bank portfolios instead of into the hands of the people—I say that he who advocates such a philosophy is advocating a fallacy and that time that has passed and time yet to come will prove it to be a fallacy, because it is literally unsound to go upon such a theory, when you are in a country such as ours with a private enterprise system, to which General Eisenhower referred. Upon what basis can you advocate soundly a philosophy which says to the citizen, "Here, you buy Government bonds. You put in $1,000 today that will buy us $1,000 worth of goods and 15 or 20 years from now I will hand you back $1,000 that will only buy $400 worth of goods." That citizen has lost the interest on his money. He has lost $600, as you and I have lost on these bonds that we bought in 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941; some of which bonds have matured, and others are about to mature. We have lost on that investment. The President made a statement to the 10 members of the open market committee at the White House the other day. He called them in and discussed this very subject, at which time he said nothing to those 10 men about approving this 2½-percent rate; but in a letter which he sent out, it leaves the inference before the people of the country to the effect that they okayed that rate, and he sends this letter over there to Chairman McCabe in such a manner as to tie him into the agreement when the Board of Governors and the open market committee made no such agreement insofar as I can ascertain from those who deal with this subject from day to day and who generally are well informed on what transpires in such close dealing.

Personally I think that is sheer intellectual dishonesty which should not be practiced at a time when we are expecting our people to carry a $269,000,000,000 debt and put $60,000,000,000 into the tax box on the theory that that is going to prevent inflation by balancing the budget, when you know as well as we all know anything that the inflationary forces can continue to run after the budget is balanced, and through the sales of these refunding issues to the portfolios of the commercial banks instead of to our people. Too much of the debt structure of $256,000,000,000 is in short term paper, and too much held by banks. It should be shifted from banks to the people themselves and the way to do this is increase the interest rate and stabilize the dollar.

For 5 or 6 years I sat on the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives and argued with Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau against this very type of debt structure which he built under the previous administration on the ground that was the easy way to do it and of course he and his chief, Mr. Roosevelt, was all the time inflating prices and running down the buying power of the savings of the people and making the citizens feel they were growing rich by reason of the increased supply of money and cheap credit.

Mr. Speaker, the President took occasion to point out to the Open Market Committee his experience upon his return from World War I and how he sold bonds at $80 which cost him $100 and went on to say in substance that he did not want people who hold bonds now have done to them what was done to him. Well. Is President Truman so uninformed on what his inflationary policy has done to our people? If you hold any savings bonds which you purchased in 1937 or 1938 or 1939 or 1940 and all of which have matured, just how much could you buy with your returned investment plus the interest thereon—yes, I say plus the interest—as compared to what you could buy with just your investment at the time you bought those bonds? This is the hard cold fact Mr. Truman and Mr. Snyder face. This attitude and knowledge of the people of what has happened, what they have felt, what they have experienced, is real. They know that as they collect on a savings bond today which has matured and which they purchased about 10 years ago that what they have lost due to inflation is about 150 percent of what Mr. Truman is griping about and what he lost on his transaction. I repeat that Mr. Truman's philosophy on this inflation and interest rate question is fallacious and destructive to our people.

There are those who would have profits cut and taxable income reduced and at a time the President calls for more than $60,000,000,000 for the tax box on an annual basis. If we are to pay these bills there must be income—big income—that can be taxed: Make no mistake about that. But unless Mr. Truman and Mr. Snyder can stabilize the buying power of the dollar and stop their inflationary forces they will have more trouble than at present. Let the full light of truth on this matter of high finance come to our people if you want them to purchase tens of billions of dollars of Federal securities annually and carry a debt aggregating from two hundred and fifty-six to three hundred billion dollars or more. If the 20- to 30-year program of General Eisenhower is to be consummated, let me say, Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary for someone to do things other than make sales talks to the people. Some bad policies will have to be changed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BECKWORTH). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, before delivering the address I have prepared on another subject, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] one question in respect to the speech he just delivered, which I admit is extremely important and informative.

As I understand it, the gentleman believes the interest rates on these bond issues should be in sufficient amount so that the people of the country will want to buy them as an investment; in other words, make them sufficiently attractive so that the people will invest in Government bonds as they would any other securities and reduce spending to that extent, rather than have the banks to invest so much of their funds in them. Is that right?

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I make myself perfectly clear. A low interest rate, short-term policy, has been followed by previous Secretaries of the Treasury, and both Presidents in the White House, which substantially drove the Federal debt into the portfolios of the banks. That was almost equivalent to sheer printing-press money. About the only difference was the psychological influence on the people, because as those bonds went into the bank they expanded the supply of money and provided the inflationary force.

Now, here we are coming around to the maturing of nonmarketable securities. The buying power of the dollar, through inflation, has substantially decreased, and citizen after citizen who holds a bond that matures gets his money, and instead of going back into the bond market, as evidenced by what happened last year, says, "Well, I am going to take this money and go and buy some goods and services, because if I buy another bond, it will drop another 20 or 30 percent in value."

Now, why does the bank take it? The bank is willing to take it on the low interest rate, and thus you engineer more inflation. My position is to pay a rate of interest sufficiently high to the citizen so that he will buy these long-term bonds—not short-term bonds—hold them to maturity, and thus keep them out of the banks and thus destroy the inflationary force, and put the dollar on a stabilized buying basis. I am willing to pay my share of the taxes incident to that increased burden of carrying the public debt by reason of the higher rate of interest, and I will wager dollars to doughnuts you can get 75,000,000 other people in the United States to do the same thing if they understand what is really going on right now.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his views.

REPORT OF HON. LINDSAY C. WARREN, COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress have recently received a letter from the Comptroller General, Hon. Lindsay C. Warren, who outlined the savings which have been accomplished by the General Accounting Office in its internal operations since April 1946.

It is a rare thing, indeed, for Members of Congress to receive letters from the heads of Government departments which demonstrate actual achievements in the field of Government economy and reducing nonessential Federal expenditures.

I wish to take this opportunity to call attention to Comptroller General Warren's excellent record and compliment him on his activities, not only as head of the important General Accounting Office, but also as an able and conscientious administrator.

We need in our Government more officials of the high caliber and conscientious devotion to duty such as the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren.

I have reason to believe that Mr. Warren's letter was too conservative in taking credit for savings and reductions of nonessential Federal spending. I know personally of many instances in which the General Accounting Office has brought about great reductions in Government spending and has saved our Government hundreds of millions of dollars.

During the Eighty-first Congress, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee called upon the General Accounting Office to assist in an investigation of mismanagement and maladministration of the Army Finance Center, St. Louis, Mo. In addition to uncovering a multitude of discrepancies and examples of maladministration, the General Accounting Office is recovering Federal funds improperly spent by the Army Finance Center at the rate of over $100,000 a month. The way of a Government administrator who seeks to save Federal funds is not easy. The Department of the Army fought vigorously the activities of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee as well as the General Accounting Office in our mutual endeavor to improve the operations of the Army Finance Center.

Upon other occasions the General Accounting Office, under authority of section 206 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, has cooperated with the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the Appropriations Committees and the Committees on Expenditures in Executive Agencies, to secure a more efficient and more economically conducted Government operation.

During the Eightieth Congress when I had the honor of being Chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee I discussed with Comptroller General Warren the possibility of conducting studies of various operations in the postal service to determine whether such services could be conducted more efficiently with a reduction in the large postal deficit. The General Accounting Office cooperated with our Committee and made an excellent study of the post offices at Philadelphia and Los Angeles. Upon the basis of these studies, the Hoover Commission formulated many of its recommendations which have been carried out by the Congress and the Post Office Department.

Mr. Speaker, if I had more time I would cite hundreds of examples wherein the General Accounting Office, under the able leadership of Hon. Lindsay Warren, has produced a substantial savings in Federal funds in almost every department and agency in the Government. The only criticism I have heard of the Comptroller General has been by uninformed and ill-advised persons who are motivated by a selfish or personal desire for the continuation of some nonessential Federal expenditures. The Comptroller General is assisted by a most capable staff who are loyal to the Comptroller General and to the policies and principles for which he stands.

In reducing the staff of the General Accounting Office from 14,904 in April, 1946, to 7,063 employees in January, 1951, I trust the Comptroller General has not been handicapped in the performance of his important duties and responsibilities. I sincerely hope that the General Accounting Office will be able to carry on its excellent and constructive work which is so important during this period when Government expenditures have reached a new peacetime high.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act, the Comptroller General has a function which is of great importance today. He is authorized to conduct investigations into the manner in which Government expenditures are being made and to report to the Congress with respect to these matters. I earnestly hope that the Comptroller General will continue to exercise his responsibility in this field as he has in the past and that the Congress will appropriate him sufficient funds to carry out this important activity.

In his letter to the Members of Congress, Comptroller General Warren made the following observation:

> It is essential to our economic survival not only that the national defense be strengthened, but that it be done as effectively and economically as possible. On this score, the GAO bids fair to make a real contribution. We will not only audit defense spending, but will also concentrate to seek out excesses, waste, and extravagances in the defense program. At the same time, we will continue to keep a watchful eye on civilian spending to ferret out those extravagances and frills which our country should not and cannot now endure.

I am certain the great majority of the American people will support Mr. Warren in his efforts to bring about savings and reductions of nonessential Federal spending. The heads of all agencies in our Government ought to scrutinize the situation with respect to their particular activities and make sure that expenditures be made on the basis of absolute need and that manpower be utilized in such manner as to bring about the highest efficiency and the most productivity possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD TRYING TO FORCE AN INCREASE OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], for whom I have a very high regard. I have known the gentleman from Michigan for a long time. I have always had a high regard for him. He is one of the most studious Members of this body. I do not know of any Member of this House, since I have been here 22 years, who has worked harder than FRED CRAWFORD has worked. I will be a witness for him any time if he were ever to need one, and I am sure he never will, as to his honesty, sincerity of purpose, and his desire at all times to do something in the interest of our country.

I am not going to take direct issue with him on all of the things he said, because in his talk he did not make his views sufficiently clear to me and on one or more I agree with him.

One thing in particular that I have in mind is about interest rates to individuals. He makes a very fine argument in favor of an interest rate that will cause the individual to invest his money in Government bonds, although the interest rate is higher than our going rate at this time. Unfortunately for that argument, though, we do not need to increase our rates to get individuals to buy our bonds; they are buying all that we issue; so that is not needed. The question as I see it is between the Federal Reserve and the Treasury through interest rates that will be paid to banks.

The interest rates that have been compelled the last year or two by the Federal Reserve Board which, of course, dominates the Open Markets Committee because the Board constitutes 7 members of the 12 on the Open Markets Committee—the interest rates have increased from three-eighths percent for short-term securities to 1.375 percent; these interest rates have increased over 300 percent. To individuals? No; to banks. So the policy of the Federal Reserve Board has been to make it more profitable to those institutions that do not need and are not entitled to that extra profit at this time on Government securities. Of all the times in history, the banks of our country today are enjoying the greatest prosperity they have ever enjoyed. It has not been long since I have been a Member of this House when the banks were paying four and five hundred million dollars a year interest on demand deposits. We passed in this body what was known as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and required a small assessment from the banks for that guaranty up to $5,000 for each depositor or customer.

The banks said: "We need a saving somewhere in order to pay that money," which would cost them about $100,000,000 a year, although it finally reached about $130,000,000 a year. In conference a little phrase was written into the law which made it illegal, if you please, unlawful—the kind of regimentation the people like if it benefits them—for the banks to pay interest on demand deposits. That saved them hundreds of millions a year and they would be paying out today, were it not for that law, a billion dollars a year. We put it in the law. I believe the gentleman from Michigan will agree with me on that. All right; we permit them to withhold that interest from the demand depositors to pay for the guaranty of their deposits up to $5,000. Now they have paid about $125,000,000 a year that way to the FDIC, but the banks have been saved a billion dollars a year; and last session we made it easier for them to put up that money. They have in the past been given a back log of Government credit of $3,000,000,000 upon which they could always rely, and reduced their assessments. So we have been pretty good to the banks; they do not need this now, not at all. But during the last year we have arbitrarily—that is the Federal Reserve Board—has arbitrarily forced up interest rates from three-eighths of 1 percent to 1.375 percent on short-term paper, or more than 300 percent. An attempt is now being made to increase the 2½ percent rate. Does the demand come from the people? No. Who does it come from? It comes from the banks including the Federal Reserve banks.

The Government is good to the banks in another way. Let us assume a groceryman who has 7 cans of peas up there on his shelf. If he had to buy only 1 of the 7 cans and when he made a nickel profit on that can, that nickel would be on the investment he made. Take the other 7 cans that Uncle Sam had bought for him, and in which he had no investment at all; he makes a nickel apiece on all those, the groceryman would be in a pretty good condition. That is exactly what the banks do. They make a loan of $1 that they actually own; then they extend the credit of the Nation on $6 more. That is Uncle Sam's credit. That is your credit and mine that they are using. That is a mortgage upon the homes of the people of this country, on business and our incomes. The Federal Reserve System uses that absolutely free.

During the last few years the Federal Reserve Board has maneuvered itself into a position of what the members consider, I am sure, to be a position of great security. When the Federal Reserve Act was passed and became law on December 23, 1913, it provided that somebody had to be on there to represent the people—the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury—but when our national debt was low, when nobody was looking, so to speak, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency were taken off. We now have seven members left, none of whom are responsible to the people directly. They are certainly not elected by the people and they are certainly not responsible to anyone who is elected by the people. They are separate and distinct from any other agency of the Government. They consider themselves independent and their arrogance in this particular case demonstrates to me they are ready to assert their independence which they have gotten in amendments to the law that came through a phrase here and a sentence there when nobody was looking. So I think it is about time to bring the whole thing out into the open. I think we ought to have a fair and a complete investigation of the Federal Reserve System. Let us go behind that iron curtain.

A great deal has been said about the General Accounting Office, but the General Accounting Office has never audited their books. What will their books contain? They will show the use and possibly the abuse of Government credit.

The money that we have today, the only money upon which we rely for business, that keeps us from resorting to barter, is in the form of Federal Reserve notes. That is your money. What does a Federal Reserve note say? A Federal Reserve note does not say that the Federal Reserve bank that issues it will pay to the bearer upon demand so much money. It does not say that the Federal Reserve System will pay it or that the Federal Reserve Board will guarantee the money. The Federal Reserve money, and the only actual expanding money we have today, says that the United States Government will pay to bearer upon demand $20 or whatever the amount happens to be. The Government promises to pay it.

Who issues it? Why, the privately owned Federal Reserve banking system. Did you think we would come to that in this country? Who else can issue money? Can the Treasury issue money? Not a penny—not a dime. Can the Comptroller of the Currency issue money? Not a penny—not a dime. The issuance of money is confined strictly and solely to the Federal Reserve System. It is a blank mortgage upon all of the property of all of the people and upon their income and everything they make. And they issue them at the Federal Reserve banks free of charge. They pay the cost of printing, it is claimed, and possibly they do, which, of course, is too insignificant to mention, about 30 cents per $1,000.

All right. Now, these Federal Reserve banks in using that Government credit free make a lot of money. It goes into the funds of the banks. We used to have a law that 90 percent of those profits would go into the United States Treasury for the use of the Government's credit free. While Members of the Congress were not looking and without much, if any debate in either chamber, the House or the Senate, that also was repealed. There is no law now upon the statute books compelling them to pay their excess profits into the Treasury. Wise men, as they are, and knowing how vulnerable they must be, they have discreetly decided that they should pay approximately 90 percent into the Treasury anyway, which they have done the last 2 years. But, there is no law compelling them to do it. And, before they do it, what do they deduct? You know, the deducts always come in for their share. Sometimes the deducts get more than anybody else gets. So, before they make this calculation as to the net profit they have certain expenses they can charge. No one supervises or audits these expenses. That is before you get down to the net profits. So, here we have what a critic could call a politburo, in our financial system, or a Kremlin, in charge of our financial system, that is using our Government credit as they want to use it. They are not audited by the General Accounting Office; no report on them. Of course a report to Congress usually is made, but you know how they are made rather general.

INVESTIGATIONS NEEDED

So, I think it is time for a congressional committee to go into this great Federal reserve system and see what makes it tick in the way and manner it is ticking today, which I think is against the public interest.

President Truman, yes, as Commander in Chief, asked the members of the Federal Reserve Board and the open markets committee, including, of course these five presidents of the Federal Reserve banks, to come to see him. Why? To help win the war, in the interest of national defense. What did he ask them to do? "During this defense period, gentlemen, I hope you help me keep the Government credit stabilized." Here is what he said, "The President would like to depend on everyone as a group to do what you can to protect the Government's credit." Is that asking too much of them? That is all the President asked. And, they promised it as they should. Then the President's secretary authorized this statement: "Washington, AP. The Federal Reserve Board has pledged the support to President Truman to maintain the stability of Government securities as long as the emergency lasts." They did. Do they dispute that they did? I am sure not one of them will refuse to go along in a case like that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the purpose of that was to stabilize the price of Government bonds in the market which has been going on since December 31, 1941, and Mr. Eccles himself, as Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, assured a stable market in Government bonds in a public statement he made at that time, to prevent bonds going down to 82, like they did after World War I, and the holder forced to sell them. We know what happened then. They were purchased by certain interests, and they sold them as high as $115 to $125 some time later.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Truman had personal experience with that. He was in World War I. He bought bonds, just as we did, and deductions were made from our pay each month to pay for those bonds. When the boys came back in 1918 and 1919 after the war, some of them were compelled to sell the bonds for as low as $80, and Mr. Truman did himself. They were Government bonds, bonds of the United States, that were worth 100 cents on the dollar. The people who bought them used the Government's credit to hold them until they could get $125 for them.

I knew of isolated cases back in remote sections of the country where these swindlers would go out and buy the bonds for as low as 74 cents on the dollar, using the Government's credit to buy those bonds and swindling the veterans out of them.

Mr. Truman wants to stop that. I want to stop it. When the financing bill was before the Committee on Ways and Means in 1941, I appeared before that committee and pleaded with them, "Whatever you do, gentlemen, as members of this great Committee on Ways and Means, do not let a situation like that occur in this country again. It is scandalous, it is disgraceful."

I have not looked it up, but I think you will find in the reports that we were promised that the American people would never again be forced to go through such swindles as that and through such scandalous situations. This is an attempt by the Federal Reserve Board, whether intended or not, to restore the power to swindlers to do more racketeering like that on the American people.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do not hold any brief for the banks, but suppose the Government asks for the floating of a loan of say a billion dollars within the rather near future, at a low-interest rate, as the gentleman advocates, even lower than the last interest rate; how does the gentleman propose to float that loan?

Mr. PATMAN. We will not have any trouble floating it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. How would you do it?

Mr. PATMAN. Just as we have always done it. We are doing it every day. The people in the country today have confidence in their Government. They have more reason to have confidence in their Government than they ever had before. More people own their homes, own their farms, have good jobs, have automobiles, and are enjoying more of the comforts and even the luxuries of life than ever before in history. They have reason to have confidence in their Government that gave them these things.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But who would buy the bonds?

Mr. PATMAN. The individuals and the banks and the insurance companies. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that we should not sell the bonds to the banks. That is just like creating money on the books of the banks. They are not out 1 penny for those bonds. It is creating money, it is inflationary. The gentleman from Michigan is exactly correct. It should not be permitted. But this increased interest rate deal is not restricted to individuals. The banks will be the principal beneficiaries, and they are not entitled to it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. We read in the newspapers that the individuals are selling bonds presently and that they have been reinvesting their money in other securities and other investments.

Mr. PATMAN. That is right. The Federal Reserve Board's action will shake the confidence of the people, and anything is likely to happen. If the Federal Reserve Board does not get in line and obligate itself to help win this war, just like the President and Congress and everybody else, you are likely to shake the people's confidence more, and more people are liable to sell bonds. This thing is confidence-shaking. The Federal Reserve Board should certainly be ashamed of itself to take issue with the President of the United States in a national emergency like this, and at a time when we are trying to stabilize prices, to fix prices on everything, commodities, products, salaries, and wages. They want to be exempt and they want to increase the interest rate another 50 percent or more.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for four additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it was in the President's statement to the open-market committee when they met there at the White House the other day where he said something about his war experience and the fact that after returning from the service he sold bonds as low as 80 cents on the dollar as if that was a considerable burden to him. I think the gentleman from Texas will agree with me that the facts are that the good people of this country who purchased savings bonds in the late thirties, which bonds have matured in the last 2 or 3 years, and especially during the last year lost in the buying power of the dollars invested in those bonds anywhere from 150 percent to 200 percent as compared to the losses which the President refers to having suffered through having to sell bonds at $80 instead of at par. There are two sides to this question and the President might as well admit it because the inflationary forces are destroying the buying power of all the savings of all the people of the United States, whether he likes it or not.

Mr. PATMAN. I join the gentleman in expressing apprehension that any increase in prices, wages, interest rates, and so forth is heading towards inflation. I invited attention to the fact that we are paying half a billion dollars more this year in interest because the Federal Reserve Board compelled the increase in interest rates on short-term securities. Where are we going to get that money from? It would be obtained through deficit financing. Is that helping to fight inflation? No. That is pouring oil on the fire of inflation—that is what it is doing. If you were to permit the Federal Reserve to win this fight, and increase the interest obligation of the Nation by at least $2,000,000,000 more by next year, will that be fighting inflation? Of course not. That is all inflationary. We do not have the money to pay it. It will result in deficit financing again, which will be doubly inflationary.

In conclusion, let me say I read a statement the other day which was very interesting to me. It was made at Beaumont, Tex., on January 10, by Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors. He said the Federal Government did not have the political guts to tax the people enough to pay for the present emergency. Who did he mean when he said, "the Federal Government"? He meant us. He meant the Congress. That is who he meant. I hope we prove Mr. Wilson to be wrong. I am going to vote for the tax bills that are necessary to balance this budget, if they are presented to us. I will vote for taxes that I would never vote for before—taxes that I have always opposed. But I will vote for them if it is necessary to do so. I am not going to hide behind some little insignificant something in the budget and say, "You ought to cut that out, and I am not going to vote for taxes because you will not cut that item out." We have a challenge here today. Now is the time when we should compel the Federal Reserve System, if they do not do it so that we can help win this war and quit giving out these statements against the President who is trying to protect the people. It is time for them to stop it. It is time to balance the budget, and not have any more deficit financing if it can be helped.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

MANAGEMENT OF THE FEDERAL DEBT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the very few occasions during my 23 years as a Member of this body that I have ever asked for the privilege of addressing the House under a special order.

In view of the importance of the matter discussed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] with respect to the superindependent body that is accountable to nobody, I am trying to find out what they are independent of; playing such an important part in the life of the people of our country that they claim complete independence from everybody—this creature of something, but responsible to nobody—in view of the importance of this subject, I feel constrained to make some remarks today.

I would like to talk today about a subject which is of direct personal interest to every citizen of our country. It has to do with the management of the Federal debt of this country. There are a great many people who feel that this subject is one which can only be understood by financiers or by specialists in monetary management. A decision relating to the management of the public debt, they feel, can have little bearing on their own personal lives or on their own personal finances.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The public debt is owned by every one of us, whether we actually have in our possession a savings bond, or whether we own Government bonds indirectly—such as the depositors in commercial banks or in mutual savings banks, or as the policyholders in insurance companies. Moreover, the payment of the interest on the public debt affects every one of us. Interest on the public debt this fiscal year will represent more than 10 percent of the total expenditures of the Federal Government. It will be more than twice as large as the entire projected deficit of the Federal Government for this fiscal year.

It is clear that every person in this room, every taxpayer, and every American citizen is affected by decisions which have to do with interest payments on the public debt. That is why I should like to take a few minutes today to bring to the attention of the people of our country an extremely important announcement recently made with respect to such payments.

The announcement to which I am referring relates to the rate of interest on the long-term securities of the Federal Government. The present return on such securities is 2½ percent per year. The Secretary of the Treasury, as chief fiscal officer of the Government, has recently announced that 2½ percent will continue to be the maximum rate paid on Federal securities throughout the period of national crisis in which we now find ourselves.

As the Members of the Congress are well aware, the Secretary of the Treasury since this Nation was founded has been charged by law with full responsibility for the management of the Nation's finances. The Congress has further provided that every issue of Federal securities with a maturity of more than 1 year must be approved by the President of the United States. But no part of the Secretary's responsibilities can be delegated. That is why it is both important and necessary that only the Secretary of the Treasury formulate and announce financial policies which are appropriate for the Federal Government.

The 2½ percent rate now paid on long-term Government securities is not a new rate. It has been in effect for more than 10 years. It was an integral part of our financial system during a period when we financed the most costly war in our history and then made a most rapid and successful return to peacetime business at a high level of activity. During this momentous decade in our history, the 2½ percent rate paid on long-term securities has been the most important single factor in the financial policies adopted by private business throughout the entire country. It is the most important factor in the financial markets where the obligations of private business are bought and sold. It is a key factor in the rates charged by public utilities. It is a key factor in insurance operations. It is a major consideration in the operation of practically all of the Nation's financial institutions. Most of these institutions, it may be noted, have shaped their policies and built their business around that rate. And their business has been better in the past 10 years than ever before.

Most life-insurance companies, for example, have brought the guaranteed interest provisions of their policies into alinement with the 2½ percent rate which they receive for the investment funds which they put into a long-term Federal securities. Today, a very large proportion of the new life insurance premiums received by insurance companies are on policies written at interest rates of 2½ percent or less. It is clear that this rate has been satisfactory both to the insurance companies and to their customers, since there is $100,000,000,000 more life insurance in force now than there was 10 years ago.

Mutual savings banks have had the same satisfactory experience. The interest which they pay on funds of their depositors is closely related to the interest they receive on their large investments in Federal securities. But the mutual savings banks have not suffered—their deposits are twice as large as before World War II.

It is evident that the 2½-percent rate has not interfered with a tremendous expansion in these financial institutions. And it has been sufficient to make their operations highly profitable. After investing very substantially in Government securities based on the 2½-percent rate, earnings of banks and life-insurance companies are double those of 10 years ago. In addition, financial institutions of all types are enjoying the best earning position in their entire history.

Our country has never been more prosperous than during the recent postwar period. Our individual citizens, who saved during the war years in order to build up financial backlogs and in order to buy houses, automobiles, household equipment, and so on when war restrictions were over, have never been in a better financial position than they are right now. Yet the funds available for investment in our economy during the past decade, whether of private individuals, financial institutions, or business concerns, have received a rate of return closely tied to the 2½-percent rate paid on long-term Federal securities.

The securities of the United States Government make up one-half of all the debt obligations of the country, public and private. As long as they constitute such a significant portion of the debt of the country, the rate paid on long-term Federal securities will be the controlling factor in the rate of return on investment funds in this country. For that reason, any change in this rate is of overwhelming importance not only to our financial institutions and to individuals who hold large portions of their assets in Federal securities, but to every citizen in the country. That is why the announcement on the part of the Treasury that the 2½-percent rate will be continued and will not be raised is of such extreme significance. That is why the demand for a higher rate—which has been particularly insistent in some sectors of the financial community—must be examined and analyzed for what it is worth.

The first fact which should be made crystal clear in the minds of every taxpayer is that the present interest charge on the public debt amounts to almost $6,000,000,000. A rise of ½ of 1 percent in the average rate of interest would add $1,250,000,000 to the budget expenditures of the Federal Government. Let me repeat that figure—$1,250,000,000.

Right now, interest on the public debt has to be paid at the rate of $16,000,000 every day of the year. It has to be paid at the rate of over $600,000 every hour of the day. To pay the added cost brought about by a one-half of 1 percent rise in the average rate of interest, there would have to be an increase in the Federal income taxes paid by individual taxpayers, or, instead, the burden would be shifted to business corporations. If, on the other hand, we did not increase taxes to pay for the added interest charge on the debt, this cost under present budget conditions would have to be paid for by deficit financing, thereby increasing inflationary pressures.

Yet the very people who are clamoring for higher interest rates also want to balance the budget by forcing cuts in nondefense expenditures. Higher interest costs on the public debt would turn the budget in just the opposite direction. They would increase nondefense expenditures. They would increase the deficit. They would increase the need for higher taxes at a time when every dollar of added tax money is needed to pay for the defense requirements of this Nation.

Since this is true, we need to ask what the real driving force is behind this demand that the Government pay more for the money it borrows from its citizens.

Those who want a greater interest return on Federal securities say that slightly higher rates will cause more individuals and more institutions with available funds to invest in the securities of their Government. I simply do not believe that this argument can hold water. The people of this country, whether individual citizens, presidents of financial institutions, members of boards of directors, investment managers, or those who in some other way are concerned with investment funds—do not, I am certain, need the inducement of an added levy on the taxpayers of the Nation to invest their funds in the securities of their Government. Investment in Federal securities is already well recompensed. It has already proven highly profitable.

Federal Reserve officials have stated that the purpose of raising interest rates is to combat inflationary pressures by restraining credit expansion. Credit expansion must be restrained, but this cannot be done by small increases in interest rates—either short-term or long-term. Such increases are not effective in combating inflationary pressures. Moreover, in my view, the use of such ineffective measures is extremely dangerous, because they give the country a false sense of security. People believe that the fight against inflation is being won in a painless way. This cannot be done.

The fight against inflation is a hard fight. It is a fight which cannot be won by a theoretical approach that has no practical basis of successful operation behind it. It is a fight which cannot be won by talk and propaganda—by saying that small increases in interest rates will keep prices down. Those who advocate this course of action do not prove their case.

Those persons who are answerable for running the fiscal affairs of the Government of the United States have tremendous responsibilities. The stakes are so large and the risk so great that we cannot try experiments. We must let the cold light of careful analysis shine on the problem and use tools in the fight against inflation that we know have a real opportunity of winning the battle.

The rapid credit expansion that this country is experiencing can be controlled. We have effective measures for this purpose. But events have shown that small increases in interest rates do not cut down the urge of businessmen to borrow. They do not stop credit expansion. The situation in recent months is a case in point. Starting in August, the Federal Reserve, through open-market operations, caused yields on Government securities to rise. It carried on an extensive propaganda campaign to lead people to believe that these small increases in interest rates would, by themselves, deter businessmen from borrowing. The record makes clear what happened. In nearly every week since August 18, for example, loans of weekly reporting member banks have risen. The total loan increase of these banks in the past 5 months has amounted to over $4,000,000,000. This, it seems to me, should have been no surprise. Businessmen know that a fraction of 1 percent is too little to matter when it comes to borrowing money for carrying inventories, plant construction, and the like.

Years ago, we had more extreme examples. In 1919 and 1920, rates on short-term Treasury issues were run up sharply. They reached nearly 6 percent, and the rate on call money went as high as 30 percent. In 1929, the rates on short-term Treasury issues were run up to above 5 percent, and the call money rate went to 20 percent. All of you are familiar with the market crashes which followed.

It seems to be clear that increases in interest rates large enough to result in effective discouragement of loans would represent a crude application of economic laws that is out of harmony with proper economic policy. It would be on a par with driving civilian users of essential defense materials—such as steel, aluminum, copper, zinc—out of the market by means of excessive price rises. This is a course of action which in any area of our economic life is not only unjust in its effects, but is extremely dangerous to the healthy functioning of the economy.

In my view, the demand that the Government pay the investors more money for their funds at the expense of taxpayers is in reality a cloak for an effort on the part of certain sectors of the financial community to use the national emergency for selfish advantage. I believe that such is the real force and the real motivation of the pressure being exerted on the Government for higher rates now. It is no more and no less than an attempt on the part of a few to profit at the expense of many. That is why I have used this occasion to throw some additional light on a current issue of such great import to every one of us—an issue which needs only to be clearly viewed to be appreciated in its true proportions.

The Treasury has stated that its policy is to maintain stability in the Government-bond market. I agree with that policy. The great number of financial people agree with that policy. The announcement has been made that the 2½-percent rate will be maintained, and that such financing as is required will be done within the framework of that rate.

This program is essential in order to keep a high level of confidence in Government securities—confidence that has been built up over a long period of years. It is essential in order to keep the millions of investors who have been brought into the Government-security market so laboriously during the past decade.

We have an army of bondholders. We need them now. We do not want to make the mistake of chasing them away as we did after World War I, when Liberty bonds were allowed to drop to 82. As you well know, it has taken years of financial planning plus tremendous quantities of promotion and aggressive selling to bring nonbank buyers of Government securities—particularly individuals and small corporations—back into the Government-security market. We cannot waste this effort.

The fiscal policy of the Treasury recognizes these facts. That is why it calls for stability in the Government-bond market built around the 2½-percent rate on long-term bonds. I agree with such a program. I feel that it is tremendously important. The credit of the United States Government is the foundation on which the financial strength of our Nation is built.

We must keep this foundation strong. We have the ability and the resources to do so. And I am certain that we have the will to do so. A debt-management policy which succeeds in maintaining stability and confidence in the credit of the United States Government is essential to our national survival.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Did the gentleman say why the President refused to impose price and wage controls until so many months elapsed, after the Congress gave him authority to do so?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will discuss that on some other occasion. Why did Congress refuse? Did the gentleman vote to permit the gamblers to continue gambling on the commodity market? Did the gentleman vote to permit them to do that?

Mr. GROSS. I certainly did not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Was the gentleman in favor of exempting farmers on the question of the 100-percent parity? Those were avenues, wide-open avenues. Did the gentleman vote to permit gambling in food in the commodity futures market? Did he vote for that?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well now, my question is just as irrelevant, I will admit, to the subject we are discussing today, as the gentleman's question to me.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GROSS. Yes, I voted to stop profiteering in the market, and if the gentleman will go back to the RECORD he will find that I am one of the few when I made the statement in the RECORD on that subject.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman voted to permit the Government to control speculation on the commodity market.

Mr. GROSS. He certainly did. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. McCORMACK. But a great majority of the Members of the House did not. I voted the same way the gentleman did.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement on economics, and I am always interested in hearing him on any subject. But, I would like to know if the gentleman is making an explanation or apology for the situation that now exists, for the reason that what he has recited up to now has been in the control of the party that he is the majority leader of in this House, and all of the situation that we are under concerning the Treasury Department and the bond situation is the responsibility of his party. Now, what is this, an explanation or an apology that he is giving to the Congress?

Mr. McCORMACK. How wise a question my very sweet friend from California asked. It is neither an explanation nor an apology.

Mr. McDONOUGH. What is it?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is a statement. Of course, the gentleman may not be able to distinguish between a statement, an explanation, and an apology. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] took issue with the position of the President and the Treasury on this particular matter. Then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] stated his views. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is now stating his views. The gentleman is talking about an apology. Does the gentleman desire to have American bonds go down to 82?

Mr. McDONOUGH. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the gentleman and I are in agreement. The gentleman is very frank, as he always is when he is asked a direct question.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. The gentleman has made out my case from his angle, so I will yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Not by the answer to that question. It is not so simple as that.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is all this whole thing was for—to stabilize the price of bonds during the emergency.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman will admit that this whole debate that has come onto the floor of the House today originated in a dispute between Mr. Marriner Eccles and the President just within the last 36 hours.

Mr. McCORMACK. No.

Mr. McDONOUGH. It came from that source.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would not say Mr. Eccles.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The problem we are facing now and the debate we are having now is the result of a misunderstanding on the fiscal policy of the United States in the administration itself.

Mr. McCORMACK. No.

Mr. McDONOUGH. There is no party question here. I am not speaking as a Republican to a Democrat, except to say that this responsibility is on the Democratic Party.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman occasionally reaches an honest but rash conclusion. The gentleman knows that the Federal Reserve Board is not subject, under the law, to the slightest direction from the President of the United States. If anything, it is more responsible to Congress. Any report it makes is supposed to be made to Congress, as I recall. Is that correct?

Mr. McDONOUGH. That is true.

Mr. McCORMACK. The members of this Board are appointed, and, once they are appointed, they are for all practical purposes accountable to nobody, yet they have the financial destiny of the people of this country under their control. They exercise their judgment honestly. I am not going to make the slightest intimation conveyed that they are not sincere. They are fine men. But it is a tremendous power to vest in anyone. I would not want it. I do not know why they want it.

Some years ago the Secretary of the Treasury was a member and had a voice on that Board, and the Congress took it away. That was the voice of the public. We have a voice in the stock exchanges, not the commodity exchanges but the stock exchanges. We do not have a public voice on the Federal Reserve Board. The gentleman knows that. Within the realm of the Federal Reserve System a question may arise and within the realm of the Treasury a question may arise, and these questions may be related to one another. The Federal Reserve Board says it is in favor of higher interest rates on long-term securities. The Secretary of the Treasury says "No," in substance. There is an impasse. The most logical thing in the world is that they should then sit in with the President of the United States, the one who should consider it, no matter who that President might be. That would be true if a matter arose 20 years from now and there was a President there who was elected as a Republican. He would be the President, though.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I think our majority leader is to be commended for taking the floor which, as he indicated, is seldom, to speak under a special order to call to the attention of the House this matter with which so few of us are thoroughly familiar. I feel a careful analysis of what the gentleman has said will show that what he has said is completely free of any political implication. I think as Democrats we have the courage to stand on our feet and criticize any organization within this Democratic administration. Personally I feel that the majority leader and the gentleman from Texas who spoke a moment ago are to be commended for taking the floor today and opening up this subject in order that the Members of the Congress may be more acutely aware of the problems involved.

Mr. McCORMACK. And may I state that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], also is to be commended for calling these problems to our attention in the same way.

Mr. DEANE. I hope the majority leader and other Members of the House will follow it up to the end that this matter is thoroughly understood by all Members of the Congress and to serve notice to the Federal Reserve System and any other agency of the Government that the Congress is studying this very carefully and that decisions which are made should be made in the interest of the American people.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope that the members of the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury and all others interested will dispassionately consider not only this question but any other questions that arise. It seems as if we are going to have a sharp legislative fight on it. I hope we do not. They can control the situation by sitting around the table as men respecting each other's views, no matter how much they may differ with each other, and not impugning each other's motives. I make that suggestion and I hope that they will approach this problem in that way rather than having the question brought up here during this emergency, in a legislative battle, so that the questions involved will be obscured and involved in intense debate on the floor of the House which we know will envelop it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I said in my remarks that the Federal Reserve Board originally had as members of that board the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency. Eventually they were taken off the board. I desire to read the original Federal Reserve Act on that very point:

SEC. 10. A Federal Reserve Board is hereby created which shall consist of seven members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall be members ex officio, and five members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

So you see at that time out of the seven members two were selected by someone responsible directly to the people—by the President of the United States. Those two members were the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency. By changing that over a period of years just a little now and then, now we have a board of seven men. The Secretary of the Treasury is not on the Board, and the Comptroller of the Currency is not on the Board. There are seven independent members selected for 14 years. They are under no obligation to the Executive or to the executive branch. They are an independent body and they are asserting their independence in a way which is costly to the people of the United States.

Mr. McCORMACK. With reference to that point, I believe they are unwise in creating the question, or so-called question of independence. We have gone along now for 10 years with market operations on the part of the Government so that the price has been established. Certainly it seems to me during the emergency the policy which was in operation during World War II and in the postwar years to date might well be followed. One of the worst things which I think could happen and which would have the effect of impairing the morale of our people would be to have Government bonds dropping again to as low as 90, or 85 or 82, as a result of open-market operations. And then to have people—again I do not mean to say they did it deliberately, but again to have people who are financially able to buy them up and hold them over a long period of time, as they did after World War I, in some cases disposing of them at $125. I think this question should not be aggravated. The members of the Federal Reserve Board ought to realize the significance of world conditions and they ought to sit around the table with the Secretary of the Treasury and thrash these questions out instead of having the question brought in to the legislative body with an intensity of feeling which will appeal to the emotions of our people and the effect of which would be to divide our people on this false issue of independence of the Federal Reserve Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post of February 3.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RABAUT, for an indefinite period, due to a death in the family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1951, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the guiding wisdom in the life of men and of nations, we pray that we may be endowed daily with understanding and insight to discern and interpret rightly the eternal will of God.

May the assurance of Thy continuing grace and favor inspire us to search diligently and faithfully for the right solution to all our national and international problems.

Give us a more vivid sense of our social responsibility. May we be loyal partners with men everywhere in the difficult task of establishing the kingdom of brotherhood upon the earth.

Encourage us to carry on heroically and hopefully in the glorious adventure of bringing in the day of peace and good will.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 82. An act to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941;

S. 101. An act to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949; and

S. 658. An act to further amend the Communications Act of 1934.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 52)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on

Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the tenth report of the Economic Cooperation Administration created by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948 (Public Law 472, 80th Cong.), approved April 3, 1948.

The report covers activities under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 (title I of Public Law 472) as amended, as well as the programs of economic aid to China and the general area of China under the China Area Aid Act (title II of Public Law 535, 81st Cong.), and to the Republic of Korea under the provisions of the Foreign Aid Appropriation Act of 1949 (Public Law 793, 80th Cong.) and Public Laws 430, 447, and 535, Eighty-first Congress.

There is included in the appendix a summary of the status of the United States foreign relief program (Public Law 84, 80th Cong.) and the United States foreign aid program (Public Law 389, 80th Cong.).

This report covers the quarter ended September 30, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1951.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AUTOMATIC EXTENSION OF SERIES E SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2268) to authorize the payment of interest on series E savings bonds retained after maturity, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker; I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2268, with Mr. ENGLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, H. R. 2268, would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to allow owners of series E savings bonds the option of retaining such bonds after the maturity date and earning interest upon the maturity values for not more than 10 years. As explained by the Secretary of the Treasury, any bond which is not turned in for cash or for reinvestment at its original maturity date will automatically be extended until such time as the owner presents it for redemption. The extended bond would bear interest on the original maturity value at the rate of 2½ percent for the first 7½ years and interest thereafter at a rate sufficient to amount to an overall return for the 10-year extension period of 2.9 percent, compounded semiannually.

There are now nearly $35,000,000,000 of E bonds outstanding. Starting in May of this year the series E bonds bought during the war years will begin to mature, and $1,100,000,000 worth will mature in 1951 alone.

Since many people now holding series E bonds doubtless will want to continue their investment in United States savings bonds of some kind, the enactment of the pending bill would enable them to do this without the inconvenience to them and the expense to the Government of exchanging their present bonds for new bonds.

It must be emphasized that nothing in the pending bill would interfere with the right of the bondholder to present his series E savings bond for cash either at maturity or at any time after the date of original maturity.

In his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday on the tax program of the administration, Secretary Snyder emphasized the following:

> Taxes and savings must go hand in hand. Although much depends upon a strong tax program, taxes cannot do the job alone. Every effort must be made to preserve confidence in the future purchasing power of savings in order to discourage the spending of accumulated savings and to stimulate new savings.

The enactment of legislation to make it possible and convenient for bondholders to retain their present investment in series E savings bonds would be in accord with this announced policy.

An essential feature of the bill prescribes the rule for tax treatment of interest on series E savings bonds held after maturity. Under the provisions of section 2 of the bill such bondholders may elect to treat such interest as income as it accrues rather than report it as income in the year of redemption or final maturity. This option is similar in terms with that now accorded under existing law with respect to interest accrued on such bonds prior to the date of maturity.

Mr. Chairman, the bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means and should be promptly enacted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means this question? These series E bonds mature, as I understand, carrying an interest rate of about 2.9 percent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. When held to maturity, yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, suppose I take a series E bond that is now matured and proceed under the provisions of this bill to carry it, say, another 10 years, but I wish to cash that series E bond in, say, a year from now. At the time I cash it in, do I draw 2.9 percent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. As I understand, the rate would be 2.5 percent for the first 7½ years, then the rate for the next 2½ years would be sufficient to amount to 2.9 percent compounded semiannually for the entire 10-year extension.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I hold the bond from date of issue, we will say 10 years ago, up to date, to where it brings me 2.9 percent, how can the Treasury justify in asking me to continue at a less rate than 2.9 percent?

Mr. DOUGHTON. They do not ask you to. It is your own option. You can cash the bond any time you desire. That is your choice.

Mr. CRAWFORD. From a sheer standpoint of equity and ordinary common sense, there is a question in my mind, Why does not the Treasury, in order to induce me to continue with the obligation, allow me 2.9 percent from here on? I have carried it during the 10-year period up to this point. I am not criticizing; I am just analyzing it. I think it is just good business to do it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know what reason the Treasury had for that. But as I understand, if you purchase a series E bond, you get a much lower rate of interest than that if you cash it during the first few years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is good, common sense at the beginning, but here I have carried a bond for 10 years. I have gone through the low-interest period and up to which I am now earning 2.9, and I voluntarily say to the Government, "Now, I would like to carry it another 10 years. Will you give me 2.9 from now on?" I think at that point it is good ordinary horse sense for the Government to say, "Sure, we will give you 2.9 from now on, because you have gone along with us through the years."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, probably it is to the interest of the Government. I do not know the reason the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that; but he lives with that question the year around. I am confident that, if he believes they should pay a higher rate of interest for the later years of the extension period, that is the proper procedure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I agree with that, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, it is the same principle, that is applied to new series E bonds. On the series E bonds you do not get any interest at all for the first year. You pay $75 for a $100 maturity-value bond. If you cash it before the end of the year, why you just get $75, but after that you receive a progressively higher rate of interest.

Under this bill, if a series E bond is returned after maturity, and you cash it at the end of 7½ years, the rate of interest on the original maturity value is 2.5 percent, but if you hold it for the full 10 years then you get 2.9 percent compounded semiannually. So it is the policy of the Government that the longer you hold the bond under the terms of the contract, the more interest you are paid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Treasury is letting the commercial banks outsmart them in this way. I can go to a commercial bank and say, "Here, I will let you have my money on a deposit certificate for 5 years," and I get 2½ percent. I have some of those papers.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I compliment the gentleman. He has the advantage of most of us.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can step forward and extend that another 5 years, but if I do not hold it 5 years I do not get my 2½ percent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The principle of this bill is to pay 2½ percent for the first 7½ years of the extension and an over-all 10-year rate of 2.9 percent compounded semiannually.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I extend it from 5 years onward, I get my 2.5 percent from the date of the extension. I think the Treasury is making a mistake in not allowing 2.9 percent from the maturity date on.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman can offer such an amendment if he thinks it proper.

We had hearings. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before our committee and explained the bill in full. Our committee was impressed with the proposal of the Secretary of the Treasury, and we reported the bill unanimously. It was hoped that it would receive the same consideration by the House that it received by our committee.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Can the gentleman tell us what the difference in cost to the Treasury will be as between the method of the committee and the method proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], the 2.9 percent interest annually, just extended?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There would be a slight difference in the interest paid, since not all bondholders would retain these bonds for the full 10 years. There would be a slight disadvantage to the Treasury. The bondholders would get a little more in the early years of the extension period and the Treasury would pay somewhat more.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will yield, the Treasury faces this situation. If I cash my bond and go buy a new bond, the Treasury has to pay the expense of engraving, and then some bank out here in the country that issues thousands of these bonds in the service of the Treasury to payrollees and others will get a fee, for there is a fee paid to the banks for writing those bonds. We turn them out by the thousands because so many are cashed every day. Fourtenths of 1 percent is involved, the difference between 2.5 and 2.9. Fourtenths of 1 percent is so small when it comes to the actual cost of financing that I think it is just chicken feed so far as the cost of financing is concerned. But if it induces 30,000,000 holders of savings bonds E, for instance, to continue with the Treasury, you have a free flow of finance running, you have no issuance of new bonds, you have no writing of new bonds, no fee paid on the issuance of new bonds, and so on down the line.

I would love very much to see the chairman of the committee take the position that you will be paid 2.9 percent if you will continue with the Treasury. I think you will save us money in the long run.

Mr. FULTON. I believe the gentleman's method is cheaper, but is there any estimate as to the difference in the cost?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The holder of the bond can at any time cash his bond. If it is to his interest to cash it before the end of 7½ years, or to hold it for 10 years, he can do either. The Government has to do whichever he says. The Government does not have any option about that. If he presents it the next day after maturity, the Government must pay.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the distingushed gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee.

Mr. COMBS. The Secretary of the Treasury in his testimony yesterday stated that any increase in bond interest made with respect to one issue would extend in the natural course and operation of things to the entire bonded debt of the United States, and that an increase of even one-half of 1 percent, to go to the question raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in interest rates will increase the burden to the American taxpayers $1,250,000,000 a year. The pending bill does create a premium, in answer to what the gentleman from Michigan says, of about $33 per thousand over a period of 10 years as an inducement to the present E-bond holders to continue holding their bonds. Now, if you made it 2.9 percent for the full 10-year period, as has been suggested, you would enormously increase the total cost to the American taxpayer—I do not have the time to figure it out now. The $33 premium is believed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understood him yesterday, to be a sufficient inducement to cause present holders of these bonds to hold them in preference to selling them and buying new issues. I think that is the whole question which we have to watch as we finance the enormous debt of this Nation against increased interest rates because the debt is so large, a slight increase means an enormous increase in taxes which we will be called upon to vote for in order to pay that increased debt.

Mr. DOUGHTON. These bonds will begin to mature in May of this year. In 1951 I understand they will mature to the amount of $1,100,000,000, and this bill gives the bondholders an opportunity, at their election, to keep their investment with the Government. It just automatically takes care of the situation without the necessity of cashing his bond and going to the trouble of purchasing a new bond. This saves the Treasury and the Government the expense of issuing bonds. It seems to me that it is a practical proposition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would agree with my friend the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, and the Treasury—if he has quoted the Treasury correctly—if those remarks were related only to marketable issues. The series E bonds, the savings bonds, are not marketable issues. I cannot put them in the market and sell them; I must take them to the Treasury. I cannot sell the series E bonds in market. It is not a marketable issue. Therefore the Treasury can raise the interest on that without disturbing the market in marketable issues. There is no question about that in the field of finance. If they raise the interest rate on one marketable issue, it does disturb the market price on other marketable issues. I think the gentleman from Texas has probably overlooked that particular point.

In yesterday's RECORD in my presentation I showed the maturities for the years 1952, 1953, 1954, and 1955 on page 1004 of the RECORD. These maturities run from $3,800,000,000, $5,300,000,000, $5,900,000,000, $4,700,000,000; then in 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959, they run from $2,400,000,000 to $2,800,000,000 per annum. This is no little job the Treasury has in financing in replacing these series E bonds and other savings bonds. I think they ought to put the 2.9 rate on those bonds and facilitate their financing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill H. R. 2268 has been very thoroughly explained on the floor already. There are a few points that I wish to make.

There are approximately $35,000,000,000 of E bonds outstanding, as the chairman has stated, and $1,100,000,000 will mature in 1951. There is one point that interests me very much. If they were to go to the banks to take up those bonds that are maturing, you will probably multiply the money in circulation by about 10 to 1. I cannot imagine anything that would be more inflationary than that, to multiply this $1,100,000,000 by 10. You would have about $11,000,000,000 added to your circulation. So, I think it is well for us to seriously consider the merits of this bill.

Beginning in May of this year the series E bonds bought during the war years will start to mature. During 1951 maturities will mount to $1,100,000,000. The purpose of H. R. 2268 is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to give the holders of E bonds an opportunity to retain their bonds after the date of maturity with an automatic interest-bearing extension. It is believed that a substantial number of persons holding E bonds will desire to continue their investment in these E bonds and the enactment of this legislation will make it possible for them to do so after the date of maturity of their bonds.

I want to point out that there is no obligation imposed by this bill on the holder of an E bond to retain his E bond after it matures. This legislation simply gives the holder an election to continue to hold the bond. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in executive session and outlined the Treasury proposal for handling these maturing series E bonds. Under the Treasury plan the bondholder would be given three choices, as follows:

First. Accepting cash, according to the original terms of the contract;

Second. Continuing to hold the present bond and earn interest on the maturity value without any action on his part; or Third. Exchanging his bond for a current income savings bond of series G in authorized denominations.

Under option 1 the owner of any series E bond may receive, if he wishes, full cash payment for his bond at maturity. This is, as stated, in accordance with the original terms of his contract. The Treasury proposals with respect to maturing bonds would not abrogate in any way this right of the investor. Nor would the bondholder's choice of options 2 or 3 preclude the subsequent cashing of his bond.

There is no question that the savings bond program has played an important part in encouraging savings and to a considerable degree helped in curtailing inflation. The same basic reasons for the initiation of the savings bond program exists today and the money saved in today's emergency period will help to achieve a stable economy when the present emergency is over.

There is one point which I think should be brought to the attention of holders of E bonds, particularly those who elect to hold their bonds after maturity. This has to do with the payment of income taxes on the interest. Under existing law holders of E bonds have the choice of either including the accrued interest of the bonds annually or of including the full amount when the bond matures. The bill H. R. 2268 provides that if a taxpayer elects to hold his investment in savings bonds, interest on the bond will not be taxable in the year of original maturity, but the entire amount of interest on the investment will be taxable at redemption or final maturity, whichever is earlier. In other words, if a taxpayer does not elect to pay a tax each year on the accrued interest, waits until the date of maturity and then elects to hold the bond, the amount of interest subject to tax at the end of the additional 10-year extension period will be considerable. I hope that in its program of encouraging E-bond holders to retain their E bonds the Treasury Department will encourage people to report the accrued interest for tax purposes annually. If people are encouraged to do this, the amount paid upon redemption or maturity of the bond will not be reduced by taxes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. In other words, the option still remains in the taxpayer on this extended time, just exactly the same as it exists today?

Mr. REED of New York. That is right.

Mr. KEATING. He can either pay his tax annually during the extended time, or pay it all at the end?

Mr. REED of New York. That is right. One of the dangers is that people of small holdings of E bonds will not take advantage of paying their interest each year. They will come to a year when these E bonds finally mature and the interest on them has accumulated, then of course it will throw many of the bondholders into a higher bracket. They will have lost perhaps much of the increment they thought they had gained.

Mr. KEATING. Also from the point of view of the Treasury it is desirable to have the taxpayers paying in full.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I quite agree that the Secretary of the Treasury should include that as part of his publicity.

Mr. REED of New York. I think it is important that the taxpayer should be notified.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this bill. I, too, want to commend the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Snyder, for his stand with the Federal Reserve Board. A number of Members of the House are in favor of the Brannan plan for farmers because it will help the farmers, and the farmers need it. It will also help the country, and they believe the country needs it. The Federal Reserve Board and the Open Market Committee are trying to force the Brannan plan for the banks.

I am against the Brannan plan for the banks because the banks do not need it. There is no reason why we should continue to subsidize the banks. The question of interest rates on Government securities that this bill is really intended to do something about is a major problem. Back at the beginning of the First World War, when our national debt was very low, probably one or two billion dollars, it did not mean very much in our fiscal policy. At the beginning of the Second World War, when it was about $46,000,000,000, it still did not mean too much as a major policy in our fiscal affairs. But here in—I will not say the third world war, but in a third national war emergency—when our national debt is in excess of $250,000,000,000, interest rates on Government bonds becomes a major problem. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS] suggested a while ago, every time the interest rate on Government bonds is raised one-half of 1 percent it means that the taxpayers of this country will have to dig down and fork over $1,250,000,000 a year in order to pay that excess interest of one-half of 1 percent.

The Federal Reserve banking system through the Federal Reserve Board and the Open Market Committee are trying to force higher interest rates in this country. It will mean a lot to the legislation this Congress has in mind and to the taxpayers in particular. I think we should commend the Secretary of the Treasury for the stand that he has taken. Certainly, one who is opposed to the Brannan plan for the farmers, cannot consistently support the Brannan plan for the banks, and I hope that the Treasury wins in its contest with the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very practical matter in which practically everybody is interested. If you will bear with me I should like to explain it if I can by illustration.

In this proposed legislation we are dealing with the refunding of the E bonds, the maturity of which starts on the 1st of May. Let us take the E bond and let us see how these bonds were put out when they were first issued. Those of you who own them will understand what I shall try to say. Here is the situation: if you bought a $100 E bond 10 years ago you paid $75 for it when you purchased it. You naturally expected to get interest on that bond and the interest is stipulated in the bond just how much it would be. If the bond were cashed in a short time after its issue, say 6 months or so, you would get no interest, but if you would carry the bond along for the full 10 years, the interest rate is graduated upward until you eventually receive 2.9 percent interest on the amount that you had paid in. You will have $100. In other words, the bond will mature into $100.

Mr. Chairman, here is what the Government is confronted with. On the 1st of May next a lot of people, who in the aggregate own millions of dollars worth of these E bonds, are going to do something with those bonds. Will they demand cash for them or will they be willing to permit this money to stay with the Government? If you want your money on your bond you can get $100 for it. The Government will live up to its contract, and will cash the bond when you present it for redemption. If you wish to leave the bond with the Government, the Government will continue to pay interest on the bond. You do not have to communicate with the Government if you want to leave the situation as it is, but it would be far better if you did contact the Government, letting the Government know that you expect to carry the bond on through for an additional period. If you decide to keep your money with the Government you will start with a principal of $100. You can get that $100 at any time you want it and they will pay you 2½ percent interest on this $100, up to 7½ years. Then at that time if you want to continue on to 10 years they will increase the rate until the interest will be on an average 2.9 on the $100 clear through to the 10-year maturity.

It is a very sensible program, in my opinion. The Government is anxious to have you leave the money with the Government, for if most of the holders of these bonds decide not to cash the bonds the Treasury will be relieved of the trouble and expense of selling an additional issue of bonds. In this way the Government does not throw itself open to any wild speculation of any kind. The Government does not compel you to take the money. The Government simply says: "You can have it if you want it." What is more fair than that?

Should my constituents inquire of me about this matter, here is the way I expect to answer them. I shall say to them: Here, you have paid $75. You now have $100. Your $100 will increase at the rate of 2½ percent for 10 years if you want to keep the bond clear through that time. Any time you want to cash it in you can do so, and get a fair return.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman states that these bonds are due on May 1. At that time, if they have been held for 10 years, they have appreciated in value 25 percent because of the interest rate, as a practical proposition.

Mr. JENKINS. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If a man does not cash his bond in at that time, is he required to report as income for tax purposes the 25-percent appreciation for the year 1951?

Mr. JENKINS. I understand not until he cashes the bonds.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman stated that these bonds have appreciated in value. Have they actually appreciated in value? That is, in terms of net purchasing power.

Mr. JENKINS. No; I am sorry to say that these bonds are like any other kind of an investment; they are affected by the difference in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. The question just asked by the gentleman from Iowa was along the line of a question I was going to ask. The gentleman said that he would tell his constituents if they had a bond they paid $75 for 10 years ago, it is worth $100 now, and they can hold it another 10 years and it will be worth $133. If they should ask the gentleman what they could buy 10 years from now for that amount of money what would the gentleman tell them?

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, my answer would probably be, Who knows? You have $75 that you paid for that bond. You could probably have bought a finer suit of clothes with the $75 at the time you bought the bond than you can get now with the $100 that the bond will be redeemed for. Of course, we are not solving the problem of the high cost of living in this discussion about cashing or continuing to hold these E bonds.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. And the debtor on this bond has it within its power to determine the value of money?

Mr. JENKINS. I am afraid that we are getting into something foreign to the issue here.

Mr. GROSS. When the Secretary of the Treasury was before the committee did the committee get any assurance from the Secretary of the Treasury that they would not further debase and debauch the currency of this country?

Mr. JENKINS. No. The Secretary discussed only the matter of cashing or carrying these E bonds. Anybody who has a $100 E bond now, and it matures, can get $100 for it. That was his contract with the Government. He can get that $100. That is the contract he made 10 years ago. If he wants to take it, let him take it up now, or he can permit it to run along for another 10 years and get interest for it at the rate of 2.9 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I think this proposal is fair and reasonable, for it gives the bondholder the right to cash his bond or to permit the Government to have the use of his money at the fair rate of 2.9 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, I have risen at this time not to oppose the bill before us but to express sorrow that this bill should come before us before the vitally important relationship between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board has been settled. I think perhaps the most important matter that the Committee on Banking and Currency could take up this year is a clarification of the respective positions of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve in connection with monetary rates and the very inflationary activity now being carried on by the Secretary of the Treasury. I think it is little realized that in supporting Government bonds, with their cheap interest rates, the Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve has bought literally billions of these bonds and has placed the cash with which it purchased those bonds into general circulation. That cash then became a part of our general demand deposits in the banks and the basis for further credit.

If you take a look at the story from the pre-Korean week to the present, you will find that it is not Government spending that has been responsible for the inflationary crisis in this country. More than any other single thing it has been the cheap money policy of the Government which has allowed an expansion of bank loans to the extent of about $10,000,000,000. And the curious thing about that study is that it will show that the price inflation has followed in percentage points almost exactly the same amount as the inflation in our currency and credit.

One of the great dangers in connection with the extension of the life of series E bonds is that if the holders of that series hang onto them there will be a continuing depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar. Those who bought those bonds 10 years ago will find that the dollars that they get back in May, when the first bonds mature, will be worth approximately 60 cents in purchasing power of what they were worth at that time. What they may be worth in purchasing power 10 years from now depends entirely on what is done to stop the ruinous inflation now encouraged by the Treasury's cheap money policy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is why I think it is so very important that the Treasury go just as far as it can to induce me and you and the other bondholders to hold the series E bonds, or any other bond, instead of cashing it and taking that cash and going into the market place and bidding against each other for these disappearing goods, and I do not believe the Treasurer has used sound judgment. I think he is entirely off the beam, in the parlance of the street, because of this inflationary force that is running. I concur in what the gentleman has said.

Mr. HERTER. I fully agree with the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in my remarks a statement by a group of the leading economists of this country entitled "The Failure of the Present Monetary Policy."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERTER. The article reads as follows:

THE FAILURE OF THE PRESENT MONETARY POLICY

Our purpose in preparing this statement is to show that the present monetary policy of the Federal Reserve is highly inflationary, that the monetary actions of the Federal Reserve since Korea have permitted the marked price rise which has already occurred, and that the Federal Reserve, presumably under the influence of the Treasury, is pursuing an ill-conceived policy that will interfere with effective mobilization of our economic strength even though taxes are increased enough to keep the Federal budget in balance.

Prices are rising at an alarming rate. This rise is widely attributed to the armament effort, to the efforts of business firms as they get ready for military contracts, and to speculative purchases by businessmen and consumers in anticipation of further price rises. This explanation neglects the critical role being played by a misconceived monetary policy in permitting these armament and private efforts to produce a price rise. As a result of the monetary failure, the Government is now committed to drastic measures in its attempt to control prices and wages which do not strike at the root causes of inflation and which impair the general efficiency of the economy and, also, affect adversely the armament effort.

Actually the production of armament is as yet a mere trickle. The recent price rises cannot, therefore, be attributed to expenditures on these. Neither can they be attributed to other expenditures by the Federal Government. During the second 6 months of 1950, the Federal Government took in substantially more than it paid out. The Federal budget was, therefore, if anything, a deflationary rather than an inflationary force during this period. True, as armament expenditures rise, this situation will change unless new taxes are levied to meet the increased expenditures. Such additional taxes should be levied. But the recent price rises cannot be attributed to failure by Congress to enact adequate taxes. On the contrary, the willingness of Congress to impose new taxes has been the brightest spot in our economic policy during the last 6 months.

The expectation has been that there would be substantial armament expenditures in the future, that a wide variety of goods would be unavailable, and that there would occur future rises in prices. The expectation has given a strong incentive to businesses and individuals to buy now. The repeated threats by Government of wage and price ceilings have further promoted price rises by serving notice on any groups that can exercise control over prices or wages to increase them before it is too late. But neither force could have produced a price rise together with full employment and a high level of output unless businesses and individuals had been able to get funds with which to finance additional purchases. Anticipations of future price rises could have been prevented from producing a price rise by a vigorous monetary policy designed to make credit tight, to prevent an increase in the quantity of money, or, if necessary, to decrease the quantity of money in order to offset a rise in the rate of use of money.

Instead of following such a policy, our monetary authorities have done nearly the reverse. They have provided additional reserves to the banking system, thereby making it possible for banks to extend both their loans and their deposits at an extraordinarily rapid rate. The loans have provided the financial means for speculative purchases; the deposits have provided the circulating medium for the larger money volume of transactions. The consequences are written clearly and dramatically in the statistical record since Korea. From May 31 to the end of 1950, bank loans rose by nearly $10,000,000,000, or nearly 20 percent. Adjusted demand deposits, the most active component of the money supply, rose by over $7,000,000,000, or over 8 percent. Currency outside banks rose only slightly, by about $500,000,000, so that the total circulating medium rose by 7 percent. This increase in the money supply was made possible primarily by Federal Reserve purchases of Government securities. Federal Reserve holding of Government securities rose by almost $3,500,000,000, or 20 percent. Almost half of this increase was offset by a gold outflow, but nearly $2,000,000,000 was added to member bank reserve balances by the security purchases and other Federal Reserve operations. The resultant 12-percent increase in reserves was more than eough to support the 8-percent increase in demand deposits so that excess reserves were actually more than twice as large at the end of 1950 as they had been 7 months earlier.

With a rise of over 8 percent in demand deposits, it is little wonder that personal income rose about 10 percent, wholesale prices about 11 percent, cost of living by nearly 6 percent. It is no accident that these figures are so nearly of the same magnitude. This is about as clear a case of purely monetary inflation as one can find.

These are admittedly highly technical matters, which is one of the main reasons why, as professional economists, we feel it incumbent on us to call them to the attention of the public. They clearly are technical matters of the gravest importance. The price rise of the last 6 months could almost certainly have been largely or wholly avoided by effective monetary action. Indeed, prices would probably today be little above their level in May if the Federal Reserve System had kept its holdings of Government securities unchanged instead of adding to them by $3,500,000,000.

The Federal Reserve System has had ample legal power to prevent the recent inflation. Its Board of Governors are an able and public-spirited body of men. Their failure to stop the inflation can be charged neither to impotence nor to ignorance nor to malice. Why then have they failed to use the means at their disposal?

The failure to tighten bank reserves since Korea is a consistent part of the financial history of the last decade. One cost of effective use of monetary measures to stem inflation is a rise in the interest rate on the Government debt. The major weapon available to the Federal Reserve System is control over its holdings of Government securities. Sales of securities produce a flow of money into the Federal Reserve System and out of currency in circulation and out of bank reserves. This action reduces the availability of credit to the public. This weapon has not been used effectively throughout the last 10 years because the Treasury and the Federal Reserve System between them have been unwilling to let one particular price, the interest yield on Government bonds, rise more than fractionally. They have preferred to hold this one price down even at the cost of facilitating a rise in all other prices. It is long past time that this short-sighted policy was abandoned.

These remarks are clearly of more than historical interest. The problems we have been facing during the last 6 months are unfortunately likely to plague us for a long time. A sound economic policy for this period should rest on two pillars: Monetary policy and fiscal policy. It should use monetary policy to prevent the civilian sphere from adding fuel to inflation; it should use fiscal policy to offset the inflationary pressure of Government spending. The need for fiscal policy, specifically, heavier taxation to match heavier expenditures, is fortunately by now widely recognized. The need for, or even the possibility of, using monetary policy is hardly recognized at all. Nor can we accept the dictum of the Council of Economic Advisers that "because of the needs of debt management, * * * general credit policy cannot be expected to be a major anti-inflationary instrument during the coming period of intensive mobilization." The prices at which the citizens of this country can buy goods and services are much more important than the price at which the Government can borrow money.

The so-called needs of debt management have been magnified out of all proportion to their actual importance in economic policy. A determined policy to stop inflation will have numerous consequences, one of the least important of which would be a rise in the interest rate on Government debt, a rise that would probably be moderate. But even from the narrow point of view of debt management, the policy being followed by the Treasury is, to say the least, short-sighted. The nearly $35,000,000,000 of series E bonds outstanding can be redeemed at the will of their holders. Further price rises that continue to reduce the real value of these bonds are almost certain to produce sooner or later a flood of redemptions of outstanding bonds, to say nothing about the effect of further price rises on the willingness of the public to purchase additional savings bonds. This outcome would raise far greater difficulties for debt management than a rise in interest rates.

Monetary measures to keep down the supply of money have the great advantage that they operate impersonally and generally, affecting all alike. They do not interfere with the details of day-to-day operation, require no great administrative staff to enforce them, do not interfere with, but rather add to, the incentives to produce efficiently and economically. By preventing an expansion of credit, they assure that credit obtained to finance armament production is at the expense of credit for other purposes instead of in addition to such credit. In this way, they make the financial operations consistent with the physical operations. The physical resources for armament production must largely be obtained by diversion from other uses; they can more easily be so obtained if the financial resources are diverted as well.

Monetary policy cannot serve two masters at once. It cannot at one and the same time buttress a strong fiscal policy in preventing inflation and be dominated by the present misconceived cheap money policy of the Treasury. The necessity of making a clean-cut choice between these two objectives has been obscured by brave talk and rear-guard actions by the Federal Reserve—the raising of reserve requirements, moral suasion of the banking fraternity, selective controls on installment and stock-market credit, and the like. These are all doomed to failure so long as the Federal Reserve System stands ready to buy unlimited amounts of Government bonds at essentially fixed prices.

Our national security demands a major armament effort. This armament effort is bound to create inflationary pressure. We cannot afford to add to this inflationary pressure by an inflationary monetary policy. The Federal Reserve System should at once announce that it will conduct its operations with an eye single to their effects on the supply of money and credit and on the level of prices. It should at once begin to sell Government securities to whatever amount is necessary to bring about a contraction in the currently swollen credit base. And it should preserve in this policy to the point that the inflation is checked even though one of its incidental effects is a rise in the interest rate on Government securities.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I agree with the observation of the gentleman from Massachusetts regarding the wisdom of the Committee on Banking and Currency's taking a look at this controversy, if it is that. I think there is a tendency sometimes to oversimplify, to look at it as a war between the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, and to feel that it is an irreconcilable conflict. There are conflicts, of course, but just as the gentleman has said, the Treasury is naturally interested in saving as much money as possible on our interest charges. That is a laudable thing.

Mr. HERTER. I should like to make this observation. Many people have said that it is our Government spending which has been responsible for the inflation and the rise in the cost of Government.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. HERTER. Last year on balance the Government of the United States took in $3,500,000,000 more than it paid out. In other words, its own actions were deflationary rather than inflationary. At the same time, due to the monetary policy of the Treasury, the bank loans increased over $10,000,000,000. The percentage almost exactly corresponded with the increase in the cost of living during that period.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Many of us are concerned about the effect on the Federal budget ultimately of the higher charges, resulting from inflation, for the goods we buy as a Government. When steel goes up, and there are extreme charges for other materials, we more than wipe out any savings in interest charges. So I think the gentleman is doing well to focus interest on it.

Mr. HERTER. I completely disagree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], who said that the Treasury is saving $1,200,000,000 by keeping interest rates low, for the resulting inflation in the country as a whole has brought about an increase in the cost of the things the Government has to buy that is many times that amount.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. It is an economic, not a political, issue.

I should like to add, Mr. Chairman, that we first need more information regarding the influence of the Treasury Department debt-service policy on the Nation's fiscal structure. Some time ago the Joint Committee on the Economic Report explored the apparent divergence of views of the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department and prepared a useful document on the subject. A sincere effort was made apparently to reconcile the conflicting views, but the conflicts were viewed finally as a natural result of the different mandates of these agencies.

The Treasury Department quite naturally thinks in terms of a low interest rate on the national debt. If the Department were indifferent to increased costs resulting from a higher interest rate we would doubtless hear criticism of it. There are many factors involved that have to be weighed, and it may be a decision for the Congress to make in the light of inflation threats. I recall, for example, that the Secretary of the Treasury stated once to the Banking Committee that the Treasury Department would be prepared to respond at once to any directives from Congress as to interest rates but that the Department would ask that any such decisions be made in the light of the effect on the budget and other relationships.

This involves highly technical considerations which I am not able to appraise, but I am convinced that much weight must be given to warnings issued by the Federal Reserve Board as to the inflationary effects of maintaining a low interest rate on Government bonds. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that the Banking Committee make an effort at clarification. The committee, being charged with legislation dealing with inflation, would, of course, have jurisdiction over many aspects of the question. Likewise, the Ways and Means Committee, dealing with debt-service problems, would also be concerned with over-all policies. The point I am making, Mr. Chairman, is that this is a continuing problem requiring the alert interest of the Congress. It should never be determined on the basis of personal or political preferences. It is a cold, scientific question involving the highest kind of professional service.

The fight against inflation must continue on all fronts. At some stages in this struggle to prevent ruinous inflation greater insight and courage than we have yet displayed may be required. We must not permit the illusion of a balanced budget based on depreciated dollars to trick us into an easy attitude on this subject. At times the temptation to surrender to the allurements of inflation is very great. It is so easy for everyone to yield when the pressures are applied for higher prices, higher wages, and even higher taxes. There are pitfalls ahead, however, even for those who momentarily profit by the readjustments. And for millions of people who do not participate in the increase, severe injustices will result if there is a soft attitude in the face of this threat.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know the answer to the questions raised this afternoon. What I say is inspired by a fear that we will be less than rigidly moral in our fiscal arrangements, for we must be fair to those who have placed their faith in the soundness of the dollar. The problem cannot be solved by an aye and no vote of approval upon any specific policy of any specific agency of the Government. It is entirely too complicated for that, but we would do the people of the United States a disservice if we permit the impression to be gained that price control and higher taxes alone will solve the problem of inflation. Both are needed, but we could have maximum efficiency in controls and an ideal tax program and still fail if we do not take into account the relationship of bank credit to this over-all effort to maintain the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if the President of the United States has authority to send thousands of our boys to their death on the hills of Korea without an act of Congress, does he have authority to keep open the supply lines in this country? This railroad strike should have been ended a long time ago. Is the grievance of these men greater than the need of supplies for our troops? Is their complaint of more importance than the welfare of our economy? It has gone on day after day and day after day. The President of the United States has played politics with it, afraid to come out and do what he should do. He has ample power. He has authority over the administration of the selective-service law. He has other laws.

As a matter of fact, technically the Government of the United States is running the railroads. Who is the greater, these offenders or the Government itself? Why does he not end this strike? Everyone knows that the reason he has not ended it is that he is playing politics with the strikers.

The tactics resorted to are not new. They were used in the coal strike a year or so ago. In a matter of hours, men who claimed to be ill, when in reality they were striking, could have been brought into court and dealt with for contempt of the order of the court. If this strike does not end, there are going to be more people than the strikers in the contempt of the American people.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe the American people are entitled to a statement by the administration that there is one policy which has been decided upon as the money-rate policy of this Government. The trouble with the present situation is that one executive agency is pulling one way—that is, the Treasury is pulling one way—and the Federal Reserve is pulling the other. Regardless of which is right, whether it is the viewpoint stated by the gentleman from Texas or that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, we the American people are entitled to one policy being set by the Executive.

Coming to the present E-bond-extension bill, I am glad to see that the Congress of the United States is handling the extension of these E bonds by a voluntary method where the E-bond holders have their choice. We in the Congress should look to it to see that by action on the interest rates of specific Government bond issues we are not disrupting the money rates in this country and generally increasing the interest rates on Government bonds. Such action would put an undue burden on many working people, including the white-collar workers of this country, in paying increased debt-service costs in the form of added taxes to meet current interest on the Government bonds.

For the record, I am opposed to drafting into the Army or putting in jail the railroad workers of our country, who are a vital part of the economy of this country. I publicly opposed that policy when the President first proposed it a few years ago, and again I oppose it at this time. I also spoke on this floor against the use of blanket injunctions as the President proposed. We should do everything we can to assist the railroad workers and honest management to get their just grievances settled, and to arrive at collective-bargaining agreements by voluntary methods. Congress cannot put one large segment of this population in our economic life in chains and expect this voluntary democracy of ours to work. I am sorry that yesterday on the floor of the House we should have had the administration's chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor urging that railroad workers should be put in bondage who want certain contract-agreement provisions, some of which are granted without question to most of the other labor groups in the country. One thing that they are asking for, for example, is the 40-hour week. I am sure responsible railroad management does not want its employees coerced by threats of Government force. If there has been delay in coming to an agreement, and if there has been delay in assisting these people to arrive at voluntary agreements for the benefit of the country, then the Executive should step in immediately and try to help them reach voluntary agreements, rather than playing politics with the situation. On the other hand, the Executive should not again try to use the Army as a catch-all. I believe it is unfair to fine men in the Army to have it proposed as a threat or a proposed punishment, and I think it is equally unfair to good railroad workers of this country, who are just as patriotic as the rest of us. We cannot operate our country on the basis of coercion and on the basis of forcing people in industry to do things that they will not do by collective bargaining. Agreement and voluntary action is the basis of our system, and not coercion and force against large groups of the working people in our economy. Might I ask the question: If Congress starts on coercion in one great industry, where do you stop?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe substantially to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

In my opinion, President Truman has added the railroad workers to his collection of political footballs. But that should occasion no surprise for he has made a political football of labor legislation since the early summer of 1949.

Truman has had control of the railroads for many months. When the general chairmen of the brotherhoods refused to ratify the proposal of the National Mediation Board it was then incumbent on Truman to compel both sides, and that certainly included the operators, to sit down immediately at the bargaining table and try again.

It is logical and timely to ask what would have been the Truman attitude and action if the situation were reversed—if the unions had accepted the Mediation Board's proposal and the rail operators had rejected it?

Unquestionably the operators would have come right back to further bargaining. Does anyone think Truman would have initiated contempt proceedings against the operators if they procrastinated?

The public, a vitally interested party to every labor-management dispute which results in a strike, has been injured by this rail tie-up which need never have occurred if Truman, already the directing head through Government seizure, had moved long ago with intelligence, courage, and decision.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT].

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, in the year 1950 the holders of savings bonds in this country suffered a loss in purchasing power amounting to $3,600,000,000 from their holdings of savings bonds. Here are the figures:

1950 loss in purchasing power of United States savings bonds outstanding Dec. 31, 1950, based on U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index

Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index:[1]
1949, Dec. 31	167.5
1950, Dec. 31	178.4
(10.9 increase during 1950, or 6.5 percent.)
United States savings bonds outstanding[2] (in billions)	$56.7
1950 loss in purchasing power of principal (in billions)	$3.6

[1] Department of Labor, Bureau of Statistics.

[2] Economic Report of President, January 1951.

In the face of that loss we are trying to find a way to encourage those bondholders to extend their bonds as they come due in 1951 and thereafter.

Specifically, this bill proposes that maturing E-bondholders voluntarily extend their bonds for a second 10-year period. I am going to offer an amendment at the appropriate time to encourage those bondholders to extend their bonds by giving them protection from additional inflation.

The amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk provides that the principal amount of the bonds when matured shall be adjusted upwards in accordance with the BLS cost-of-living-index change upwards during the next 10-year period.

In other words, the amendment would give the bondholders, the investors who make a contract with the Government of the United States, the same protection during the next 10 years from inflation that the CIO auto workers have been getting for 2½ years or more from the General Motors Corp. on a short-term contract. Certainly, if that kind of a clause is important on a short-term contract, and when a short-term contract of that type has the blessing of the Government, the bondholder who makes a 10-year contract with this Government is entitled to similar protection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield.

Mr. COMBS. Will the gentleman's amendment include a provision tying the bond-interest rate to the cost of living, so that if it goes down you would reduce the interest?

Mr. BUFFETT. This amendment does not attempt to change in any way the interest rates on the bond. It does provide that at the end of 10 years, if there has been no increase in the cost of living, the bond principal would be the original amount specified.

Mr. COMBS. What would be the result if there is a lowering of the cost of living during that period?

Mr. BUFFETT. The result would be that the investor would have made a sound contract.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The net result would be that the bondholder would get the benefit.

Mr. BUFFETT. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no way you could beat the game. If it drops he gets the benefit of the drop in the cost of living. If the cost of living goes up, by reason of the Government paying higher dollar price for the bond, he is protected against the inflationary price.

Mr. BUFFETT. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

In the past 10 years the E bond holder has lost 44 percent of his purchasing power. We want these bonds to be extended. A most important factor to the future of this country on the home front is the public credit of the United States. Now what is happening?

The month of January bears sober testimony on E bond sales. I want to give you the figures from the Treasury statement of January 31.

In January the new savings bonds issued decreased $231,000,000 from the sales in January 1950. The sales of new bonds went down 32 percent. That is a serious decline.

During the same month the redemptions of war bonds went up 20 percent. So that we have this fact: Bond sales going down and redemptions going up. The reason for that is obvious—the people are losing faith in the financial integrity of the Government.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. If we were on a sound currency, with the gold standard, you would not be here presenting this proposition, would you?

Mr. BUFFETT. Certainly not.

The point is that we are asking people to make a contract with the Government for another 10 years to replace a contract which in the last 10 years has lost 44 percent of its value.

The question becomes: Are we going to give those thrifty, humble, trusting citizens, who are the backbone of this country, a deal that has fairness and justice in it, the same protection as the CIO auto workers get, and unions all over this country are insisting on in short-term contracts. Only an escalator clause on these bonds will give the investor that protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] is recognized for 9 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I might say in the beginning it is not my purpose to use 9 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is the gentleman's understanding with reference to the E bonds coming due now in May, that, if they are continued without a reissue, no report has to be made for the purpose of income tax for the year 1951, for the 25 percent that has accrued in value?

Mr. MILLS. Let me see if I understand the gentleman's question. The gentleman means, if this legislation is passed and these bonds are extended for another 10 years, then the interest which has accrued for the first 10 years need not be reported as received in 1951, but may be reported at the end of the additional 10 years provided for in this legislation?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, the gentleman is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. By that time we hope the tax will be lower.

Mr. MILLS. And some of us may not be making as much money either.

The bill before us is quite simple. It has two sections. The first section has been explained by several Members. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to continue to pay interest on series E savings bonds now outstanding for an additional 10 years at rates consistent with the provisions of paragraph 1 of section 22 of the Second Liberty Bond Act. Without that authority, people still might not cash their bonds upon maturity, but they would not receive any additional interest for any time after maturity.

Section 2 of the bill continues to give to the owner and possessor of those series E bonds the option of reporting interest every year as it accrues, or to report the entire amount of the interest when the bond itself is redeemed or upon the date of final maturity.

That is all the bill does.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield

Mr. FORD. May a bondholder pick any particular year and report the accrued income for, we will say, 13 years, and then let it go for the next 7 years?

Mr. MILLS. The bondholder in any taxable year before maturity may elect to report the interest accruing in that year and in all prior years, but once this election has been made, he then must report the interest as it accrues each year. If no election is made, the interest is reported in the taxable year of redemption or maturity.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. A person has a certain option to make, and after he has made the option it continues for the rest of the life of the bond.

Mr. MILLS. In other words, the answer I gave the gentleman from Michigan is correct.

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. If the tax is not paid on the interest each year then you must accrue the total until the bond is cashed or redeemed; you cannot mix the two systems.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it at all necessary for the bondholder who desires to continue with the program to so report to the Treasury?

Mr. MILLS. If he desires to retain his series E bonds after maturity?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. It is not necessary for him to make any report of his election to retain the bond.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is important, because a lot of people will not report. They will be protected, however?

Mr. MILLS. They will be protected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Whether they carry it another 1 year, 3 years, or 10 years?

Mr. MILLS. That is right; the gentleman is correct; they need not report their election to retain the bond after maturity, and they may wait to report the interest for tax purposes until the bond is redeemed, or until the year of final maturity.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. But if this accrued interest goes over a period of years until maturity it may throw the taxpayer into a bracket where he will really suffer quite a substantial loss. Is not that true?

Mr. MILLS. That is entirely true; he could. He, of course, has that election, as the gentleman from New York knows.

A question has been raised about the amount of interest which the Secretary of the Treasury suggested to the Committee on Ways and Means should be paid on these bonds for the additional 10 years. The Ways and Means Committee is relying upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to this interest. He has a group of some 500 people on the payroll, and several thousands or maybe a million volunteer workers throughout the United States who handle these series E bonds for the Treasury. I know it is their thought, after considerable study, that the interest rate over the next 10 years of 2.9 percent, compounded semiannually, is sufficient inducement to cause most of the holders of the some $35,000,000,000 in series E bonds outstanding, to continue to draw interest on them for the next 10 years rather than to cash those bonds in with the Treasury.

The Treasury, of course, may be wrong; it may be necessary before all of these series E bonds are disposed of by continuation or redemption for us further to amend the legislation to provide an additional interest rate over the 2.9 percent contemplated. I do think, though, that we should be impressed with the likelihood that the Secretary may be right; and if he is right and these bonds can be continued at the 2.9 interest rate, we should permit the Secretary to have that opportunity, because if we do raise the interest rate on these bonds materially over that which we contemplate here, then when the F and G bonds begin to mature we will probably be back asking for similar legislation with respect to them; we will have to treat the holders of those bonds as we treat the holders of the E bonds. This is quite an important question, for the $58,000,000,000 of savings bonds outstanding constitute a rather considerable portion of the Federal debt.

Those of us who are interested in economy would desire the interest rate to be not higher than is necessary to induce the holders of these bonds to continue to hold them for the next 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, we realize, I think, full well that if these $35,000,000,000 worth of series E bonds are redeemed in the next few years as they become due, in all probability there will not be a sufficient amount of revenue in the Treasury derived from taxation to redeem these bonds. Additional bonds, in all probability, will have to be issued and sold to somebody in order to get the money to redeem these bonds, if they are not extended for another 10 years.

It appears to me that the redemption of these E bonds now, in a period when we do have a lot of inflation, and the issuance of additional bonds to the Federal Reserve which they will perhaps buy, or other banks will buy, will not help our inflationary situation but will make it worse. There are many compelling reasons, therefore, why the Congress should permit the Secretary of the Treasury this opportunity to endeavor to induce the holders of these series E bonds to continue to draw interest on those bonds for another 10 years. I think we should offer him this opportunity.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It occurs to me that if we delay the cashing of these E bonds for 10 years it will then just give the Treasury an opportunity to sell some new issues of bonds and the situation in the future will be worse than it is now.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman will agree with me that the Treasury will not sell a lot of additional bonds to accumulate cash in the Treasury when there is no purpose for which that cash must be used; in other words, just to build up a big surplus. I doubt that the Treasury would do that and I think that the gentleman will agree with me.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I might agree with the gentleman, but from the budget which has been presented here and the threat of a request for additional large sums for the future it occurs to me there may be new issues.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman ought to be over with our committee where we are trying to raise a large amount by taxation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I hope you do not raise all of the money asked for.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman would rather have the Treasury issue bonds?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; I do not want that, either. I want to cut down on nonessential expenditures.

Mr. MILLS. I join with the gentleman in that hope. I trust we can do it.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill will be adopted by the Committee of the Whole without amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD following those of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b) of section 22 of the Second Liberty Bond Act (31 U. S. C. 757c (b)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b)" and adding the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to provide by regulation that owners of series E savings bonds thereafter maturing may, at their option, retain the matured bonds and earn interest upon the maturity values thereof for not more than 10 years at rates consistent with the provisions of paragraph (1)."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

INVESTMENT IN E BONDS

Mr. Chairman, the point has been made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts a short time ago that a $100 bond purchased 10 years ago for $75 will only buy about $60 worth of goods, commodities, and services at this time according to his statement. It should be pointed out, however, that if the $75 had been retained by the individual instead of investing it in E bonds his $75, according to the same standard, would be worth only $45. So he is certainly much better off in investing his money in the E bonds if the gentleman is correct about the 60-percent figure.

SHOULD NOT INCREASE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Chairman, the question has also arisen as to why we should pay more interest on the Government debt. It has been brought out here that every time we increase the interest rate 1 percent it means an increase of $2,500,000,000 a year in interest charges.

Certainly we should not increase the interest rate unless it is absolutely necessary. Who is demanding an increase?

The people are not demanding an increase; the individual investors are not demanding an increase. They can get investments that will yield 5 percent, 10 percent, or even 20 percent. But, it is a risk and they do not want to run that risk. They would rather let the Government have their money at 2.5 percent and know they can get it any time they want to. They run a risk investing their money in these other enterprises. So, there is no reason why we should pay more than 2.5 percent on long-term paper, and if the Federal Reserve Banking System cooperates, we will not have to pay more. If they do not cooperate and they try to adopt a Brannan plan for the bankers, like they have proposed, by subsidizing the bankers, why then the interest rate will be increased. But, it should not be increased. The main reason for the inflation today, or the principal reason, or a major factor in the increase in inflation, is because of the condition of our budget—engaging in deficit financing. If we are going to have increased interest rates and increase the burden on servicing our national debt, why that increase is inflation, because it will be borrowed money to be added to our deficit. It is sort of a double-barreled inflation we would be engaging in.

BALANCE THE BUDGET

The way to stop inflation is to balance the budget, and I think the budget should be balanced. I would be one humble Member out of 435 who would not adjourn this Congress until we did balance the budget, pass the appropriation bills, pass them quickly, find out where we are, and eliminate every dollar that is not needed. Certainly every dollar of waste or every dollar that is not needed should be eliminated, and then when we find out what we have in the form of a budget, whether we like it or not, say, "We are going to balance the budget and we will vote for taxes to balance the budget." I think we should do that. We have a good opportunity now to render a great public service.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman spoke of the Brannan plan. The worst enemy the cotton farmers ever had in this country was this man Brannan, the Secretary of Agriculture, from Pikes Peak. He would not know a cotton stalk from a cocklebur or a boll weevil from a bumblebee.

Mr. PATMAN. I was discussing only the financial part.

Mr. RANKIN. I represent cotton farmers, and I want to say this to the gentleman——

Mr. PATMAN. I think Secretary Brannan is one of the best friends the farmers ever had.

Mr. RANKIN. The present price of cotton in this country is about 43 cents a pound while in Brazil it is 70 cents a pound. This Brannan plan is destroying the cotton farmers of America. You can see that cotton is at least $125 a bale higher in Brazil than it is in the United States.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not discussing that part.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman ought to.

Mr. PATMAN. I think the Secretary of Agriculture is about the best friend the farmers ever had. Certainly the Brannan plan for the farmers would be justified, because they need it, although it is not in operation now. But a Brannan plan for the bankers is not needed because they do not need it, and should not be invoked.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. While the gentleman is talking about balancing the budget, will he tell us how to do it? I am interested in that.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, Mr. Truman made a proposal yesterday. It is pretty rough, but it seems to me when we vote for these appropriations we should expect to vote for the taxes to pay them. I think the Members of this great body should keep that in mind when we vote for the appropriation bills and should have the courage to turn right around and vote for taxes. They were very hard taxes and we do not like them, but we voted for the appropriations and we should vote for the taxes to cover the appropriations.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then if I understand the gentleman correctly his proposition is that as we vote appropriations we should vote for taxes which will raise a like sum.

Mr. PATMAN. I say that when we vote to appropriate money out of the Treasury we should vote for tax measures that will bring that money back into the Treasury and balance the budget.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. That is what I believe in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas, while he is bragging on Mr. Brannan as being a friend of the farmer, that the farmers cannot agree to that, since he is robbing us of from $100 to $140 a bale on the cotton we sell now, and has been doing so since last fall.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. PATMAN. I think the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, has been a very fine Secretary. He is a good, honest, courageous man, and I think very sincere. Although I do not agree with him on everything—and I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi does not agree with him on everything—he is bound to agree with him on some things.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I agree that he ought to be back on Pike's Peak, and the cotton farmers agree with me from one side of the country to the other. You will hear from them.

Mr. PATMAN. The cotton farmers are getting along pretty well.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what the gentleman thinks.

Mr. PATMAN. They are getting 45 cents a pound for their cotton and $100 a ton for seed. I have never known a time in the history of this country when they got along better. Does the gentleman know such a time?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I certainly do.

Mr. PATMAN. When?

Mr. RANKIN. When they were not mistreated as they are being mistreated by Mr. Brannan today.

Mr. PATMAN. When was that?

Mr. RANKIN. Any time before.

Mr. PATMAN. Do not say "any time," say when.

Mr. RANKIN. The farmer gets less for what he sells than he ever got in history.

Mr. PATMAN. Say when.

Mr. RANKIN. I am talking about all the time.

Mr. PATMAN. Name the time.

Mr. RANKIN. Any time any man robs you that way you will be the sufferer.

Mr. PATMAN. When the gentleman makes charges like that, I think he ought to name the time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman thinks it is a good thing for the farmers to rob them of from $100 to $140 a bale on their cotton?

Mr. PATMAN. I think the farmers should be helped as they are helped today. They are getting along better than they ever did before.

Mr. RANKIN. It helps a man to take money out of his pocket and give it to somebody else?

Mr. PATMAN. There are more farm owners today than ever before. Why? Because of a good farm program. There are more people who own their homes today than ever before in history. That is your answer to communism and socialism. As long as you have home ownership in this country, as long as people own their automobiles or their cattle or even their pigs, they are not going to join some organization where they will have to divide what they have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am utterly surprised at the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. Telegrams are pouring in protesting against this man Brannan's fixing the price of cotton in the United States when he cannot fix it abroad. Last year he did the same thing. He put an embargo on cotton because it was rising toward its normal value. It cost the cotton farmers of my section and Texas and every other State about $100 a bale at a time when we had the worst boll weevil condition we have had in years. I am not guessing at this. I know what I am talking about. Telegrams are pouring in protesting against his fixing the price of cotton.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I say this neither in defense or justification of Mr. Brannan, but Mr. Brannan did not fix the price of cotton.

Mr. RANKIN. Brannan put on the embargo. If the gentleman from Louisiana does not know that, he had better go back and find it out.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. The gentleman from Mississippi knows Mr. Wilson is the price stabilizer.

Mr. RANKIN. He was not in the picture last year.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. If the embargo had not been placed on, you would not have cotton to make uniforms for our soldiers today.

Mr. RANKIN. Why not ask the farmers to commit suicide and be done with it? If the farmers followed that kind of policy, they would commit suicide. They are making more cotton in Brazil than they made 20 years ago. I called up and got the prices, and I found that cotton was 43 cents a pound in the United States, and that means New Orleans and New York, and 71 cents a pound in Brazil. What is the difference? It is $128 a bale. That is what farmers of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, the Carolinas, and every other Southern State are being robbed of today. Yet they propose to carry that program on to literally grind the cotton farmers into the dust.

I will tell the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] what has helped the farmers of this country. It has been rural electrification, for which I am largely responsible. We have electrified the farm homes. We have made it possible for the farmer and his wife and children to live in comfort and to enjoy everything you have in the city except the noise of the city and taxes, traffic jams, and parking meters.

But that does not justify this program of grinding the farmer into the dust by driving the price of cotton down below the cost of production. The farmer is paying for his own electricity.

If cotton had risen to its normal value last year it would have gone to 60 cents or probably 85 cents a pound. Yet today you are going on with an inflation of the currency. It was inflated to the extent of $731,000,000 since the first day of September, up through the month of December. Yet while the currency is being inflated the farmers' prices on cotton are being held down, which keeps them from enjoying that measure of prosperity to which they are entitled, while their boys are being drafted to fight every war throughout the world, and others are being exempted, and some of them going out on strikes.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. ALBERT. Does not the gentleman believe that the embargo put on by the Secretary last summer was put through to keep the price down and not in order to protect the domestic supply of cotton?

Mr. RANKIN. Of course it was not to protect the price of cotton. That situation raised the price of cotton to probably $100 a bale more in Mexico than it was in Texas right across the line. It raised the price of cotton to $100 a bale higher in Brazil, in Chile, in Argentina, and in every other country in South America than it was in the United States.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. What was the price of cotton when this embargo was put on?

Mr. RANKIN. The price of cotton was around 40 cents a pound, and it was justified at from 60 to 85 cents a pound, according to the volume of currency and the prices of everything else at that time.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question, yes.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Did that stop the price of cotton from going up?

Mr. RANKIN. No, but it boomed the price of cotton to $100 a bale higher in Mexico than it was in Louisiana or Mississippi. Cotton went to $100 a bale higher in Brazil than it was in Louisiana, and today it is $125 a bale higher in Brazil than it is in Louisiana.

Does the gentleman understand that?

It is robbing the farmers of Louisiana, Mississippi, and every other cotton State of more than $100 a bale.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Cotton was selling higher on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange last week than in the entire history of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. All right; and it was $128 a bale cheaper than it was in Brazil. I have the record. No. The gentleman does not understand the financial situation or the cotton market.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. The gentleman admits that he is not an authority on Brazil, as the gentleman from Mississippi seems to be.

Mr. RANKIN. I am no authority on money, but I know the price of cotton. I can tell you now that if Brannan carries on this program it will mean grinding the cotton farmers of America into the dust. Today, as I said, I called up and found out that cotton was 70 cents a pound in Brazil and 44 cents a pound in New Orleans. In other words, it is $125 a bale higher in Brazil than it is in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee has under consideration a bill which is designed to protect the solvency of the United States of America and to protect the people who have been patriotic enough to invest their savings and their money in the securities of the United States of America. This bill, I believe, was reported out unanimously by the committee of which I have the privilege to be a member, the Committee on Ways and Means. Until this moment it had not occurred to me that there could possibly be any connection between this bill which serves to protect the people—all the people, the farmers, the housewives, the businessmen, workers, cotton planters, sugar planters, people who work with their hands, people who work as clerks, and everybody—I could not dream that there could possibly be any connection between this bill and the price of cotton in Brazil. But there seems to be such a connection in the mind of the gentleman from Mississippi.

I ask the Members of this body to consider this bill on its merits, without respect to the price of cotton in Brazil. I may say to you that I am not an authority on cotton in Brazil. I do not know anything about it except what I read in the newspapers, and frequently I find that that information is not too accurate. I can say that despite the fact that I have represented a district which is largely urban, I do not know of a single measure which has come here designed to be of benefit to the cotton growers of our great area which I have not supported, and supported wholeheartedly and enthusiastically. Rather than grinding the cotton farmer into the mire and the dirt, the cotton farmers in my area received a higher price this year for their cotton than at any time in the history of the United States of America, and I believe the same thing applied to cottonseed. So if that is grinding them into the mire and the dirt, I say "more grinding."

I hope the Members of this body will not be diverted by a discussion about Mr. Brannan, who had nothing to do with the imposition of this price order which was imposed by Mr. Wilson and not Mr. Brannan, and will not let that red herring influence their judgment on a bill which is designed to help the holders of E bonds.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Since the gentleman has brought forth the "Red herring," which I am used to, I wish to say that I am not opposed to this bill; but I got into this argument with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] about the way our cotton farmers are being mistreated. I am not opposing this bill, but last year our farmers were robbed of $100 a bale on their cotton and they are being robbed today of about $125 a bale.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Of course, the gentleman may be right. I do not know. But the gentleman assumes by his statement that the price of cotton would have come to 85 cents and he assumes that no measures would have been taken before it reached 85 cents. If it had reached 85 cents, it would have been 200 percent higher than at any time in the history of the United States. With all due deference to the gentleman from Mississippi, who I know is a genuine friend of the farmer—he always has been and I am sure always will be—I am not sure that if you put a completely inflated situation on the farmers that you would help our farm economy, because if you inflate farm prices you certainly will have to inflate everything else.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says cotton would not have gone up. It went up in Brazil, it went up in Mexico, it went up in Argentina $100 a bale higher than it was in the United States.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I admitted to the gentleman I was not an authority on Mexico or Argentina or Brazil, or any of these other nations that he knows all about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It is not my intention to get into this cotton fight, but I would like to repeat a little of the history.

Two years ago, before the Ways and Means Committee, we were holding a hearing and I had been studying a report by a professor at McGill University, who had been down to Brazil and made a study of the country, as a prospective producer of cotton. He found there were about a million acres of land that were ideally suited for the raising of cotton. During the New Deal administration king cotton in the United States was on its deathbed. There was great alarm about it. After I made this statement in the committee that probably we would have competition from Brazil, a leading cotton man of the South took me to task out in the hall, and said, "You are not familiar with cotton. Brazil will never furnish any competition to the southern cotton."

Here is what happened: If you will remember, Secretary Clayton, interested in cotton in a large way, when king cotton was on its deathbed, went down to Brazil and opened a school to teach the Brazilian people how to cultivate cotton. He was responsible for the development of cotton in Brazil. You are not only having competition now but you will have devastating competition from Brazil in the future, because they have more new land available for raising cotton than you have in all of the South.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Right at this point let me say to the gentleman from New York that I agree with what he said about Mr. Clayton. Mr. Clayton and I came from the same town, but in 1928 Anderson, Clayton & Co. rigged the cotton market. I forced an investigation, finally got the Senate to put on an investigation. They invited me over to cross-examine Mr. Clayton, and we showed that his company had bought several hundred thousand bales of cotton that did not meet the requirements, and had got it approved by the Government classers, and used it to whip the cotton market down from 22 cents to 14 cents a pound. We sent men up there who investigated it, and cleaned it all out of the Bay Way Terminal, and taken off the market. Cotton went back up to 22 cents a pound; went up $40 a bale before those classers got back to Washington.

Mr. REED of New York. He was responsible for taking vast amounts of cotton machinery from the United States and other North American areas and putting it in Brazil.

Mr. RANKIN. And greatly increased the production of cotton in Brazil.

Mr. GROSS. Is that the same Clayton who was Assistant Secretary of State and Under Secretary of State?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; he is the same one.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I have a question on that.

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Is that the same Mr. Clayton who was championing the trade-agreements program and who helped administer it? And is it the same Mr. Clayton who went to the Geneva Trade Agreements Convention and took 10 Communists with him?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; he is the same man.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat bewildered by the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] who sometimes is considered a financial expert, I would say, to those on the left of the aisle. What he told us today we might well keep in mind. He gave us a formula for balancing the budget. In answer to my question he said in substance that when we voted for appropriations we should then or soon thereafter vote taxes to get a like amount. Well, that is all right; that sounds sensible, does it not? But the gentleman's record since 1935 nowhere tells me that he ever voted against any appropriation bill. I doubt if he ever has. If he had tried to balance the appropriations for which he has voted by new taxes there would not be in the Congress a man who was in the Congress which levied taxes in that sum.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] just ignores the fact, in spite of all his expert knowledge, that the way to balance the budget is to quit spending so much money. I wonder if the gentleman ever heard of that method? The gentleman has voted for practically all the New Deal spending and wasting.

Now he comes along and he tells us why we would have been foolish to have kept $75 in cash instead of buying a $100 bond. He said that if we had kept the $75 in cash instead of buying a bond that $75 would now be worth in purchasing power only $40. What an indictment of the New Deal, the man or woman who worked and saved 75 hard-earned dollars for his old age, now for those $75 can buy but $40 worth of food or merchandise. If you had bought an old cow or a fairly young cow she would have had eight calves in that same length of time and they would have brought you more in purchasing power than you would ever have gotten out of the bonds. Never did I expect to hear a dyed-in-the-wool New Deal supporter like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] confess that this administration had followed a program which had cut the worth of the workingman's $75 to $40. The gentleman's argument is absurd for few there be who bury their dollars as the one servant hid his talent when the master went on a journey.

Then there is one other thing, the gentleman by his statement seems to have created an apparent disunity, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] being in opposition on the cotton situation. I do not think that is a good thing. I am all in favor of unity.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman from Mississippi, pardon me—the TVA gentleman; the gentleman who talks about rural electrification; but let me finish this—I am all for unity. I do not like the idea of those Republicans in the other body who do not want to go along with that gentleman from Connecticut who thinks that Republicans should select their committee members over there in compliance with some Democratic suggestion—that is not the way to get unity, according to their book; you just cannot get along that way. Their idea of unity is for Republicans to accept their every thought, even before they have it. The Democrats have Mr. Dulles, they have Mr. Austin, they have Mr. Dewey and others of these great internationalists and one-worlders; so we cannot criticize our Democratic friends. They even tried within the week did they not to get Mr. Hoover to help solve the problem now existing in India? I do not know—am just asking.

Mr. Chairman, I am going back a little bit to show you how the New Dealers tried to get unity when the WPA was on. If you wanted a job on the WPA the work paid for out of tax money, you had to have the endorsement of your local committee, if you were successful. Here is one:

No. 100. Application for endorsement by Kalamazoo County Democratic Committee.

This was to get a job. The usual questions were asked, then the following:

Did you vote in the primary of September 1932? Democrat? Republican?

Did you vote in the primary of September 1934? Democrat? Republican?

I do not know what that had to do with obtaining a WPA job, but there must have been something to it.

Are you a member of any Democratic organization or club? Where?

Are you a registered voter of what township or ward?

Did you vote in the election of November 1934?

Have you contributed to any Democratic organization in Kalamazoo County? To whom? How much since August 1, 1932?

Are you now occupying the position for which you seek endorsement of the Kalamazoo County Democratic Committee?

Here is the application for rehabilitation funds put out in the 1930's.

Now, listen to this paragraph. You asked for money for rehabilitation, money that the Congress voted, money that some Republicans voted for. Certainly Republican taxpayers helped to contribute to the fund. Here is what they put in:

I agree that at any time prior to the final liquidation of my loan from the Rural Rehabilitation Corporation to do nothing that is in opposition to the AAA program.

What do you think about that?

Today the jobs are given to the New Dealers, preferably someone born abroad—old-line Democrats, Republicans not wanted—except where no one else can do the job.

The papers from which I read, read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, referring to H. R. 2263 now before the Committee, I would like to see this language put in the bill, but in view of the fact it has been unanimously reported by the committee I see no practical way on earth I can get the language in the bill.

Line 11, page 1, after the word "at" insert the language: "a rate of not less than 2.9 per centum per annum" and strike out the language "consistent with the provisions of paragraph (1)."

That, in my opinion, would be one of the greatest sales arguments that you could possibly design to get the people of this country, who hold approximately $34,000,000,000 worth of these series E bonds, to go along with the Treasury and continue to hold those bonds instead of cashing them in, taking that money and going into the market place and bidding against each other, thus raising the prices of things that are for sale.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has referred to the confidence the people have in the Treasury issues because there is no market risk. During the period from January to December 1950 the sale of series E bonds by the Treasury amounted to in round figures $3,500,000,000. The cash redemptions of that same type of bond were $3,800,000,000. So the people of this country have just $300,000,000 less confidence. That is minus the confidence the gentleman from Texas refers to.

The gentleman since yesterday morning has made something like four or five speeches condemning the Federal Reserve bank machinery and operations of this country. Marriner S. Eccles, the ex-Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, is, in my opinion, one of the best authorities the world has ever produced on finance, credit, and banking.

He said just the other day:

> As long as the Federal Reserve is required to buy Government securities at the will of the market for the purpose of defending a fixed pattern of interest rates established by the Treasury, it must stand ready to create new bank reserves in unlimited amount. This policy makes the entire banking system, through the action of the Federal Reserve System, an engine of inflation.

Here is a member of the Board of Governors, ex-Chairman of that Board, pleading with the people of this country to fix it so that the Federal Reserve does not have to do these destructive things that it has been condemned for so vociferously by our friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] in some four or five speeches yesterday afternoon and today. Yet the Treasury of the United States in this bill, and otherwise, fixes an interest-rate pattern that forces the banking machinery of this country to act as an engine of inflation in order to support the ruling made by the Secretary of the Treasury and backed up by Mr. Truman.

In 1952, 1953, 1954, and 1955 the series E bonds will mature in these amounts:

The first year I mentioned, $3,800,000,000.

The next year, $5,300,000,000.

The next year, $5,900,000,000.

The next year, $4,700,000,000.

And for the years 1946, 1957, 1958, and 1959 the maturities will run from $2,400,000,000 to $2,800,000,000 annually.

General Eisenhower, in speaking the other day, said:

> The fighting forces are but the cutting edge of a very great machine. The inspiration and the power for which we find in the heart of citizens and all of the various mechanisms that are necessary are represented in our investment capacity, our economic processes, and so on, so that when we talk about defending the free world, we are not merely talking about the divisions and groups and battleships and planes. We are talking about what is in the hearts, what we understand with our heads, and what we are going to do as a body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. General Eisenhower stood before the Members of this body, and he emphasized time and again that this job had to be done within solvency. He spoke about the free enterprise system, the investment capacity, and the confidence our people have in these Treasury issues.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Yet the general had no reluctance in telling us that we had to ship vast quantities of materials to Europe and more troops to Europe.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true, and he knew that before you did that, you would have to have people at home who were willing to carry these securities issued by the Treasury in their own individual portfolios instead of in the bank portfolios.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. He also said in substance that this Nation should not be the Atlas supporting the world.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct, and we need to give very serious consideration to this problem.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Is inflation contrary to the policy of this administration?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not. It is in conformity with the policies of the administration.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the disturbing thing about this legislation is the breach of faith on the part of the administration in not providing for the same purchasing power of the dollar that you receive today when you cash in these bonds as it was at the time they were purchased. I remember very well how the late President Roosevelt took to the radio, and his then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, and told the people if they would buy these bonds, that they wanted to make them sound, return a sound dollar that would have the same purchasing power that it had at the time the purchase was made.

Our Government has broken faith with the investors in these bonds. Most of them are small people who have relied upon the integrity of the Government that their money would have the same purchasing power when the bonds were cashed in as when they were bought.

I am not opposing this legislation; I will support it. The gentleman from Louisiana a few minutes ago said this was to protect the solvency of the Treasury. We must be in pretty bad shape, if we have to pass legislation to protect the solvency of the Treasury. Maybe we need it, but if we have come to that point, where there is a lack of confidence in the money in this country and in the policies of the Treasury and the Administration, we have reached a new low in American history.

I was rather interested in what the gentleman from Texas had to say about balancing the budget. I have been listening to him ever since he came to Congress. He has been one of the chief advocates of cheap money and printing-press money and deficit financing in the United States. This is the first time I ever heard him mention balancing the budget of this country. I think it is a remarkable achievement on the part of someone to convert him to the philosophy that we need a balanced budget. I hope they will continue their effort, and maybe he will come out for sound money.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I join the gentleman in tribute to the gentleman from Texas for his changed viewpoint. However, the gentleman from Minnesota must remember that the main method of balancing the budget suggested by the gentleman from Texas is by increasing taxes rather than cutting down expenses. In that respect the gentleman now speaking and the gentleman from Minnesota, I feel sure, would be found on the other side of the fence.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We have to collect taxes, but I notice the President's proposal, the first dose that came up here this week, provides for a tremendous increase in the taxes on the middle- and lower-income groups. Most of these people are not getting any benefits from war expenditures. Most of them are living on fixed incomes. Many of them are living on pensions and annuities. Many of them are old people. I do not know how they get along. But the time is rapidly coming, if they pursue this policy, that a large portion of our middle class and lower-income groups will be working at least 6 months out of the year to pay the tax bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman join with other Members in the House in voting against adjournment of Congress until he has voted for sufficient tax measures to balance the budget, after saving every dollar that can be saved in the appropriations?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I certainly will, and I hope the gentleman, who has never heretofore voted for any reduction in Federal expenditures, will join this side of the aisle and vote to cut six or seven billion dollars from the budget on non-essential expenditures. I am glad to join with the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will yield further, I simply want to point out to the gentleman that the same lower income and middle-income people who have been hit hardest and are now being asked to take another wallop with this tax bill are the very people that are hit the hardest by the Government's inflationary policy, which has reduced to about $60 the value of the $100 E bonds in which they have invested, thinking they were making an investment in our Government and thinking that they were going to get more money when they turned in their bonds than when they bought them.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman. There appears to be a determined effort on the part of the present administration to liquidate a large mass of our population that is living on fixed incomes in this country, people who have no means of hedging the little income they get.

Mr. KEATING. Like the gentleman from Minnesota, I shall support this legislation. Prudent management requires that a sound orderly plan be devised to make it possible and reasonably attractive for holders of series E bonds to continue their investment beyond the maturity date.

But we should be careful not to be lulled into a false sense of security, feeling that, having passed this legislation, our financial problems are solved. A campaign will have to be undertaken by the Secretary of the Treasury to convince the people that they should hang on to the E bonds instead of cashing them in, as is their privilege. Confidence in Government securities is even more important in this type of investment, than is the yield, which is relatively modest in any event.

Those who bought a $75 bond 10 years ago upon the representation that they would receive $100 at maturity now realize, to their sorrow, how it was possible for the Government to deprive them of their promised return. They now find that the $75 which they put in 10 years ago, instead of being worth $100 today, as anticipated, is only worth $60.

This is a direct and inevitable result of the profligate spending and "cheap money" fiscal policies of the Administration. Those who now hold these bonds and others who might be induced to purchase them must be convinced that these demonstrably unsound policies will not be continued, if they leave their old money or put their new money into this type of investment. They must be assured that their Government to which they have a right to look for protection will not turn around, after it has their money in its coffers, and deliberately cheapen the value of that money in terms of what it will purchase, thereby depriving them of the rightful increase in value of their investment which it has been represented to them they may expect.

No one of us, of course, wishes to take any step or voice any utterance which will militate against the necessary efforts of the Treasury to sell Government securities. The point is that the success of these efforts rests almost exclusively in the hands of the Administration officials who direct our fiscal and financial policies and also must handle these bond sales. It is entirely up to them and their predecessors in office to determine whether the $100 which a series E bondholder now elects to leave with the Government as an investment will be worth $133 at maturity 10 years hence, as represented to him, or whether he will meet the same fate which befell the investor of 10 years ago and find in 1961 that he can only buy less than $100 worth of goods with the bond which he cashes, rather than having $133 to spend which was promised him.

This is a particularly serious problem because it hits hardest those in the lower and middle income brackets who are accustomed to investing their modest savings in this type of security. Like so many of these fatal Administration policies, the retired workers or those enjoying a small fixed income suffer the worst. They deserve and have a right to expect better treatment from their Government. They should no longer be deceived. Many have already awakened to the injustice perpetrated on them. We in Congress should continue to exert constant and unyielding pressure upon the administration forces to insure a square deal for those who entrust their hard-earned savings to the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Effective with respect to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this act, section 42 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended—

(1) by inserting after "stated intervals" in the first sentence of subsection (b) the following: "or owning an obligation described in paragraph (2) of subsection (d)";

(2) by inserting after "acquisition" in the last sentence of subsection (b) the following: "(or, in the case of an obligation described in paragraph (2) of subsection (d), the date of acquisition of the series E bond involved)"; and

(3) by adding at the end of such section the following new subsection:

"(d) Matured United States saving bonds: In the case of a taxpayer who—

"(1) holds a series E United States savings bond at the date of maturity, and

"(2) pursuant to regulations prescribed under the Second Liberty Bond Act retains his investment in the maturity value of such series E bond in an obligation, other than a current income obligation, which matures not more than 10 years from the date of maturity of such series E bond, the increase in redemption value (to the extent not previously includible in gross income) in excess of the amount paid for such series E bond shall be includible in gross income in the taxable year in which the obligation is finally redeemed or in the taxable year of final maturity, whichever is earlier. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to a corporation, and shall not apply in the case of any taxable year for which the taxpayer's net income is computed upon the basis of the accrual method of accounting or for which an election made by the taxpayer under subsection (b) is applicable."

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUFFETT: Page 3, after line 14, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 3. (a) The amount payable upon redemption of any series E United States savings bond retained for 10 years or more after maturity pursuant to regulations prescribed under section 22 (b) (2) of the Second Liberty Bond Act shall be—

"(1) the amount which would be payable if this section did not apply, or

"(2) the amount referred to in paragraph (1) multiplied by the ratio of (A) the Consumers' Price Index as of January 15 of the tenth calendar year following the calendar year in which the bond matured to (B) the Consumers' Price Index as of January 15 of the calendar year in which the bond matured.

whichever amount is higher.

"(b) The amount payable upon redemption of any series E United States savings bond purchased after December 31, 1950, and held until maturity shall be—

"(1) the amount which would be payable if this section did not apply, or

"(2) the amount referred to in paragraph (1) multiplied by the ratio of (A) the Consumers' Price Index as of January 15 of the calendar year in which the bond matured to (B) the Consumers' Price Index as of January 15 of the calendar year in which the bond was purchased, whichever amount is higher.

"(c) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'Consumers' Price Index' means the Consumers' Price Index for Moderate Income Families in Large Cities, All Items, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"(2) If a ratio must be determined between a Consumers' Price Index in computing which a given base period is used, and another Consumers' Price Index in computing which a different base period is used, one index shall be converted to the same base period as the other."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The bill before us has to do with the retention after maturity of certain bonds, and the payment of interest upon those bonds for a period not to exceed 10 years after the present maturity date. The amendment offered by the gentleman proposes a payment to bondholders which is beyond the concept of interest. As I understood, the gentleman earlier in explaining his amendment referred to it as not taking the place of interest, but providing a payment in addition to interest proposed in section 1. Therefore, the amendment goes beyond the scope of the bill and is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT] on the point of order.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill proposes to encourage the retention of bonds for a second 10-year period. That is the purpose of the bill. The terms of the bill authorize the payment of interest on series E savings bonds retained after maturity and for other purposes. It is to be assumed those other purposes would embrace terms for the extension which would encourage bondholders to extend his bond for that period of years and protect him against inflation which might occur during that period. It seems to me that this is the appropriate bill for such an amendment to be considered, if these bondholders are going to have that protection, and it has to be done at this place or it will not be done.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard further on the point of order, the bill in the two sections amends two different statutes. The first section amends the Second Liberty Bond Act and the second section amends section 42 of the Internal Revenue Code. There is nothing in either the Second Liberty Bond Act or in the Internal Revenue Code which is in keeping with the gentleman's amendment, and there is nothing in the bill to which the amendment itself is germane.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the Committee deals not only with payment of future interest due but also with the payment of the principal on these bonds. It provides for the payment of the principal at future times. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT] likewise deals with the repayment of the principal on the bonds.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], it is true that the bill does provide for the payment of principal and interest at a future date, but it does not provide for an additional premium of some sort based upon the cost of living.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ENGLE). The gentleman from Arkansas has well stated the point, in the opinion of the Chair. The fundamental purpose of the amendment must be germane to the fundamental purpose of the bill. In this instance the bill deals with interest on Government bonds, but the proposed amendment is so broad that it would change the basic obligation of the Federal Government on the principal of the bonds. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that a point of order has been raised against this amendment. This legislation gives to the Congress of the United States its first opportunity to give the holders of savings bonds a square deal, to prevent in the future the raw deal that they have received in the last 10 years from their ownership of savings bonds.

A few moments ago the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] told you how important it was that the people of the country retain confidence in the credit of the United States. He told you how important it was that sales of these bonds be continued at a high rate. But now we find in the consideration of this bill that an amendment is ruled out of order that would give these bondholders some protection against inflation during the next 10 years, an inflation that has robbed them of 44 percent of their principal during the last 10 years.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, would have operated to restore the faith of the people in United States obligations.

It would have operated to accelerate the sale of war bonds and to discourage the redemption of war bonds.

It would have operated to make plain to the people and to the Congress the imperative importance of sound Federal financing.

The amendment would have given this Congress a chance to show the same fidelity to trusting citizens that the heads of labor unions demonstrate when they insist on an escalator clause in union contracts.

As a practical matter, this Government can go on fooling uninformed people and selling them a deteriorating investment but—day by day—and I testify from 25 years' experience in the investment business—day by day more of these folks are finding out the inherent unsoundness of holding a deteriorating obligation, a fixed-income obligation in a period of inflation.

Unless this Congress comes to grips with this problem that knowledge will grow and expand, until most of those who own Government bonds, and who become familiar with inflation, will have turned them in and put their money in some other form of investment.

The humble, trusting citizens of this country, by and large, are the holders of these war bonds. They are being sold down the river financially, so long as inflation continues and their bonds remain payable in a fixed amount. Every man sitting in this Chamber knows that. Every man sitting in this Chamber knows that in the last 10 years there has been a substantial deterioration in the purchasing power of that dollar. I say this Congress should do something about this situation, and this is the place and time to do it.

We should play square with the bondholders who have placed their future financial independence in the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I agree with everything the gentleman has said about the depreciation of bonds and, in general, the awakening of the American people to some of the difficulties they are going to be concerned with in the purchase of bonds. But is it not true that what the gentleman charges as far as Government bonds are concerned applies equally to any other bonds which the purchaser might buy?

Mr. BUFFETT. The gentleman from Wisconsin is correct insofar as any fixed interest obligation is concerned. However, these obligations are our specific responsibility.

This deterioration is a financial debacle without parallel in this country since the Revolutionary War and the repudiation of the continental currency.

This deliberate inflation is so shocking that an able economist, Dr. Paul Poirot, characterized it in this strong language:

> No government anywhere in the world at any time ever perpetrated upon its citizenry a greater fraud than is practiced in the United States of America today. (The Pension Idea, by Dr. Paul Poirot.)

Has he overdrawn the picture? The 44 percent depreciation in savings bonds, life insurance, and war bonds in 10 years is a loss that comes to more than $26,000,000,000.

Here is the picture of the enormity of the loss suffered the last 10 years by those who have been saving dollars.

At the end of 1940, United States savings bonds, savings bank deposits, and life insurance assets amounted to $61,200,000,000. At that same 1940 date the cost of living, measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, was at 100.2.

Now let us look at those savings at the end of 1950. The Bureau of Labor Statistics cost of living index was at 178.4, against 100.2 in 1940.

The buying power of those 1940 savings had been reduced 44 percent. The real loss to the holders of those 1940 savings was over $26,800,000,000.

Even more strikingly I can express the deterioration in one sentence: The deterioration in savings bonds last year of three and one-half billions was a billion and a half more than the total of all losses from bank failures from 1921 through 1933.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, if American taxpayers generally understood the real meaning of the administration's tax proposals, as conveyed to the committees of Congress, I believe there would be an immediate uproar in behalf of drastic cuts in nonessential Government spending which neither Congress nor the President could ignore.

Even more so would this be the case if taxpayers should compare Federal taxes nowadays with those of only 10 years ago. The comparison shows the alarming extent to which Federal administrations over the past 18 years have gobbled up the substance of the people.

A statistical analysis, which came to my attention through my esteemed colleague, NOAH MASON, of Illinois, shows that in 1940 only about 4,000,000 individuals were paying personal income taxes, which were limited to comparatively high incomes. Today we have 52,000,000 people making personal income-tax returns.

In 1940, a married couple with no children enjoyed an income-tax exemption of $2,500, while today the same couple have exemption of only $1,200.

In 1940 the tax rate in the lowest income bracket on which taxes were imposed was only 4 percent, while today it is 20 percent. In 1940, the highest corporate income-tax rate was 19 percent, and today it is 47 percent.

In 1940, Uncle Sam collected a total of about $4,000,000,000 in all personal income, corporation, and excise taxes. Today he collects $55,000,000,000 from these three sources.

Thus there are 13 times as many people on the Federal income-tax rolls as there were in 1940. Uncle Sam is taking away five times as much of their personal incomes as he did in 1940. He has nearly tripled corporate tax rates, until now he takes away nearly a half of all corporation incomes.

A few weeks ago the expiring Eighty-first Congress added a corporate excess-profits tax, amounting to 75 percent of corporate earnings, above certain predetermined earnings totals.

Since corporations cannot survive unless they pass taxes along to consumers in the form of higher prices, those high corporate taxes, and the additional excess-profits taxes, in the end are paid by the same people who pay personal income taxes.

Needless to say, corporation officials and stockholders are also consumers, and pay their full share of the corporate taxes, because they pay the same prices as everyone else for the things they buy.

The President now has advised Congress that in his opinion personal income-tax payers must bear the heaviest part of the burden imposed by his proposal to raise an additional $16,500,000,000 in Government income. Lower- and middle-income earners would pay nearly all of the increase, because those in the high-income brackets receive only about 8 percent of total incomes received in the Nation each year.

It has been estimated that it will be necessary to boost the tax rate on lower and middle incomes from 20 to 24 percent, in order to raise only $10,000,000,000, proposed by the President as a first installment of the $16,500,000,000 increase he says eventually will be required.

The Congress should bear it in mind that Senator HARRY F. BYRD, of Virginia, has proposed specific measures for cutting nonessential Government spending next year by something more than $9,000,000,000 from the $72,500,000,000 budget submitted by the President.

If the present Congress fails to take the advice of Senator BYRD, to insist that nonessential spending be cut by at least $9,000,000,000, and if the 4 percent is added to personal income-tax rates, the result may tend to destroy our free-enterprise system, and in the end our individual liberties, under a socialistic form of government.

A Federal income-tax rate of 24 percent would take nearly a quarter of everyone's annual income. A quarter of a year is 3 months. So it would figure out that the 24-percent income-tax rate would have everyone working at least 2½ months a year, just to pay Federal income taxes alone, to say nothing of State and local taxes, and indirect payment of corporate taxes.

If these latter direct- and indirect-tax payments should be added, it appears that the total tax burden for each individual would approach 50 percent of earned income, and everyone would work a full half of each year, just to pay taxes, before lending a hand toward the support of himself and his family.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, it looks to me as though the Republicans ate nothing but rooster yesterday the way they are crowing today.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ENGLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2268) to authorize the payment of interest on series E savings bonds retained after maturity, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE WILDCAT RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, yesterday several Members announced they had introduced legislation designed to put an end to the paralyzing wildcat strike of some railroad employees.

Information that we have today indicates that many of these strikers are returning to work, probably in response to the very fine plea made to them by Mobilization Director Charles Wilson.

The tendency in the past in instances such as we are going through has been to forget all about the proposed legislation when these people go back to work, then when another emergency comes along and there is another wildcat strike, we are right back where we started.

I think that we should be careful in the type of legislation we enact, making sure that no basic rights of individuals are eliminated. However, always in an emergency, all of us have had to submit to the suspension of certain privileges for the good of the country as a whole. We must be in a position to protect and implement in every way possible our boys in Korea. If they retarded our defense effort as much as has been done by these strikes, they would be court-martialed. We here at home are certainly no better than they are. Even if all these people go back to work today, irreparable damage has already been done our defense effort. But for future reference, remember, it is too late to lock the barn after the horse has been stolen. I therefore cannot urge too strongly that the Members who have introduced this corrective legislation push it through regardless of the outcome of the present strike. I offer my assistance to them in every way possible.

AMENDING SECTION 313 (b) OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2192) to amend section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 be amended to read as follows:

"(b) Substitution for draw-back purposes: If imported duty-paid sugar; nonferrous metal; or containing nonferrous metal; flaxseed and linseed, and flaxseed and linseed oil, and duty-free or domestic merchandise of the same kind and quality are used in the manufacture or production of articles within a period not to exceed 1 year from the receipt of such imported merchandise by the manufacturer or producer of such articles, there shall be allowed upon the exportation of any such articles, notwithstanding the fact that none of the imported merchandise may actually have been used in the manufacture or production of the exported articles, an amount of draw-back equal to that which would have been allowable had the sugar; nonferrous metal; ore containing nonferrous metal; flaxseed and linseed, and flaxseed and linseed oil, used therein been imported; but the total amount of draw-back allowed upon the exportation of such articles, together with the total amount of draw-back allowed in respect of such imported merchandise, under any other provision of law, shall not exceed 99 per centum of the duty paid on such imported merchandise."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS: Page 1, line 6, strike out "or" and insert "ore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FREE IMPORTATION OF GIFTS FROM MEMBERS OF THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2141) to make permanent the existing temporary privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of December 5, 1942, entitled "An act to accord free entry to bona fide gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad," as amended (U. S. C., 1946 edition, Supp. III, title 50 App., sec. 847), is hereby amended by striking out "and before July 1, 1951."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "and before July 1, 1951" and insert in lieu thereof: "July 1, 1951, and inserting in lieu thereof July 1, 1953."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend for 2 years the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to address the House for 5 minutes today following any special orders heretofore entered.

RENT INCREASES IN OAK RIDGE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial from the Oak Ridger of January 25, 1951.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, the Atomic Energy Commission, on January 23, 1951, announced rental increases for all Oak Ridge family housing and dormitories effective August 1 which average approximately 28 percent, based upon the theory that this increase is justified in order to put rents in Oak Ridge on a level with those in surrounding areas, presumably referring to the nearby municipalities of Clinton and Knoxville, Tenn., 6 and 25 miles distant, respectively. It seems to me that this doctrine of comparability has no more application to Oak Ridge than would Professor Einstein's theory of relativity; perhaps, less.

This doctrine of comparability is ably discussed in an editorial which appeared in the Oak Ridger on January 25, 1951:

THAT TERM "COMPARABILITY"

You've heard of places being described as incomparable. We think that term describes Oak Ridge, too.

Recent announcements seem to indicate that Congress and the AEC want more rents for Oak Ridge houses after August 1. We view the changes with mixed feelings. We'll devote future editorials to the inflationary and home ownership aspects of the rent boost.

Today we'd like to concentrate our fire on the word comparable, or comparability as it is used by Government officials in describing why rents here will be raised to the same level as the surrounding area.

On the surface the rent raises are supposed to have been done in the interests of comparability. That's a word we're tired of hearing. Comparability be hanged. You can't compare this community with any other, anywhere.

And to compare Oak Ridge housing with that in Knoxville or Clinton is absurd for several reasons. First, we'd like to see the yardstick Tredwell and Goldstein used. Did it allow for drafts? Was there a notch for mildew? Did the lack of cellar count for anything? There's a lot of clarification needed about the T and G yardstick.

We think Messrs. Tredwell and Goldstein would not have recommended such a sizable boost had they been living in one of our cemestos or flattops during a recent cold spell.

Secondly, the rents paid in other cities of this size might have some bearing, but Knoxville is a metropolitan area of 250,000 and Clinton has about a tenth of Oak Ridge's population. And the size of a town has a definite effect on its rent structure.

Nevertheless, AEC officials say comparability is the term congressional committees use when they state what they want Oak Ridge rents to be. O. K. if comparability is the byword, let's inform Congress and the AEC that it can apply to a lot of other things beside rents. And should apply to a lot of others before it is applied to the rent picture.

We feel it entirely just for residents to insist that as local officials make rents comparable with this section other city policies should become comparable, too.

When we pay normal city rents we should have the privilege of choosing our own home. We should not be confined to a certain type of housing because of our job classification or the number of children in the family. We should be able to buy our own fuel—and not have to be satisfied with coal of inferior quality.

Most of all, when we are paying rents the same as those persons with free enterprise landlords, we should have the privilege of saying "nuts" to renting a house and buying one of our own.

When these and other conditions are made comparable then it would be high time for the AEC to talk about comparable rents.

In our minds, the time for such a rent increase has not arrived.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that 32,000 persons live in Government housing in Oak Ridge. In the summer of 1949 a joint 18 percent increase in rents and utility charges was made. I visited many homes in Oak Ridge during the summer and fall of 1950. These people then felt that their rent was too high.

In my opinion, this rent increase is not justified.

I have discussed the matter with members of the Banking and Currency Committee of this House and when hearings are resumed on rent control I shall appear before that committee and ask that appropriate measures be taken to prevent the currently announced rent increases in Oak Ridge. And at the proper time I shall seek full investigation of this entire subject.

It is anomalous to say that a Federal agency can do a thing which is prohibited to be done by private business and industry without respect to cost factors or return on investment, but upon the so-called basis of comparability.

The residents of Oak Ridge have no voice in their local government, although they vote in Federal, State, and county elections. The entire governmental set-up at Oak Ridge should be studied and revamped by the Congress. This will not hinder or impede the great atomic energy program. On the contrary, in my judgment, it will greatly improve and facilitate this highly important work.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WOOD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

DISCUSSION OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, it seems that in our foreign relations today there is so much that is passing as coin of the realm which is just miserable counterfeit. We have been told in season and out that we are in deadly menace; that some bogeyman of the night is going to get us if we do not watch out. The powers that be have even gone a few steps further; they have identified the goblin as Stalin. Well, they ought to know. They were the first to take his blood-stained hand, red with the blood of his own tortured and murdered countrymen, and claim him as the friend of America, another great Democrat—good old Joe. After his adoption by the past administration, the bogeyman was fed and made strong by the gift of 14 billions of our dollars which Communists claim to despise, thousands of tons of food and materials which we shall shortly need, and hundreds of war planes and other war matériel of all sorts, which we are now afraid he will use against us and which we could have used so effectively ourselves in the recent disturbance in Korea.

They donated the continent of Asia to him; and the rape of South Korea and the downright murder of our innocent and ill-trained GI's in Korea were all implicit in the sordid sell-outs of this country at Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam.

There may have been some excuses for the late Chief Executive being taken in by Stalin and Hiss at these meetings. Outside of being a foxy local politician, it was never my idea that he was a particularly astute man; and during the last meeting with Stalin, in spite of the statements of crooked and time-serving doctors to the contrary, he was actually a dying man. Only a very young doctor or a fool could have been mistaken in the death mask he wore for a face.

With the present Chief Executive, the case should have been different. Being from Missouri, he should have been a good mule trader, and I understand he is actually a good poker player. As such, he should have known that good old Uncle Joe held a royal flush against his pair of deuces. But he has presented other evidences of being a poor Missourian. A good poker player loses gracefully.

Knowing that the gift of Manchuria and North Korea to good old Uncle Joe would be an irresistible invitation for Stalin to take South Korea into his sphere of influence; and particularly so after the Chief Executive's duly authorized spokesman, Dean Acheson, had so plainly stated to the world that we should not defend South Korea, in case of aggression.

Just what would you expect Stalin to do? Under those conditions, could he have been expected to leave South Korea to develop into a hated capitalist state or that it should be taken in and educated into the better way of communism?

A good poker player would have stood pat and let Stalin take South Korea at least until we were prepared to take care of such a campaign properly if that is what we decided to do after mature deliberation, being in a position to fully count the cost of our interference.

And so here we now have America more or less betrayed by the men who were sworn to protect it. Even if we should give them the benefit of the doubt, though I know of no particular reason why we should, inasmuch as they had taken their oath to protect the flag and integrity of the United States. Let us assume they were glamored, mistaken, or just plain dumb, when they signed and sealed the future security of the United States over to Stalin. Even if that were the case, when the fatal consequences of that mistake are now so evident to us, it is still no reason why they should persist in their obduracy, nor why they should still follow a course which may yet wreck America, the land they have so solemnly sworn to defend and protect.

We hear a good deal of a mandate to be world saviors; in fact practically every speaker and every newspaper article refers to the existence of such a mandate. We constantly hear that we are the divinely appointed people to lead all other nations into freedom and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, where do we find anywhere in history or tradition that we have at any time received such a mandate? There is nothing in the whole scope of American history which even suggests the existence of such a thing. No one has ever had such a revelation. It just seems to be one of those peculiar things which, when the time seems ripe for its emergence from limbo, seems to spring fully armed into action for good or evil, depending upon the nature of the mandate. There was one other nation in history which claimed to have such a mandate to be fruitful and to replenish the earth and become the eventual owners thereof. History does not as yet record any more startling fulfillment of that mandate than will probably be attained by that which we have claimed.

This whole country, and particularly my constituents, are asking when and from whence did this mandate come to the United States to become the new Messiah and lawgiver to lead the world.

Mr. Speaker, in my youth, I used to read Martin Chuzzlewit, by Charles Dickens. In that work is portrayed what was supposed to be a typical American of those days—a cheap braggart, and all in all a most objectionable individual. At that, I am not too sure he was more ignorant and reprehensible than the insufferable coots who claim to be the prophets of the brave new world.

Mr. Speaker, can it be that our President, our Secretary of State, our Secretary of Defense, and General Eisenhower, and others, are so ignorant of the great big heart of America that they do not realize that what America is hoping for, praying for, and striving for is just one little word of five letters as applied to our relations with other countries. What is that word? Just "truth."

America wants no more secret meetings at Tehran, Yalta, Potsdam, Brussels, or Washington. Eisenhower's message meant little or nothing to us. We care little about his secret report to the Chief Executive for, after all, he is merely just one man. Congress is composed of the duly elected representatives of the sovereign people of the United States. We are the people. We are the country. We are the United States. Congress is the last hope of America.

Just when and where did the Congress of this United States become less reliable than Alger Hiss or Judith Coplon? Just when and by whom was this Congress committed to salvage the results of following the mistaken advice of Owen Lattimore, the trusted servant of this present Government, when he recommended that we should let Nationalist China and South Korea fall to the Communists without giving the appearance that we had pushed them?

We live in the midst of rumors of war, turmoil, drafting of 18-year-olds, transplantation of Government facilities out of bombing distance from Washington, price controls, a ruinous increase of taxes of every known variety, and some which were never heard of before; increase of expensive armament, rumors of bigger and better bombs, and so on ad libitum—and for why?

Mr. Speaker, I pause to ask the question in all truth and fairness. Where is the war with which we are threatened? True, we have the miserable fiasco in Korea into which we were pushed by our unnatural stepchild, the United Nations. I know all about that. But outside of that, who is threatening us? Who ever said they are going to attack us? Perhaps the Chief Executive has some inside information from "good old Joe" that he is going to attack us at some set time or at least sometime. If he has, it is just another of those secret things to which my constituents object most strenuously.

The truth is, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that no one has said they had any designs on our territorial integrity or our free American institutions. I am not a pacifist. I hate Russia and communism. If I loathe this sort of thing outside the United States, how should you think I would regard the vast spurious jingoism which is at present passing for the coin of the realm in America? America is not at war. There is no immediate present reason why she should be. Our stepchild, the United Nations, is at war. It has created for us precisely the peril which it was supposed to prevent. But we are doing 100 percent of the paying and 90 percent of the fighting and dying.

Then why are we having this cheap hysteria of immediate deadly peril, this urgency of securing for the party in power fantastic, and to the taxpayers of America, ruinous taxation to collect suicidal levies for the party in power to squander as it has done for the past 18 years?

Mr. Speaker, does one not read? Does one not think? The whole history of this administration has been that of one crisis after another and each has fed into the administration's coffers the billions of dollars necessary to continue the illusion of good times, prosperity, and whoopla, entirely resting upon the insecure foundation of borrowed money. Where is this thing to stop? What are we doing about it? It has been stressed so long by the administration, the public has become like the victim of a recent nightmare, conditioned to accept illusion as reality. And this evil is compounded when we consider the United Nations. It was a dark day for America when we accepted the domination of this brain child of Alger Hiss.

We are approaching the anniversaries of the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln and George Washington. May I ask you to stop dead in your tracks for a moment and contemplate just what those two stalwarts would have thought of our membership in the United Nations? What do you think the reactions of either or both would have been if they were serving as American delegates to that body? Without spending any more time in speculation, you know exactly what George Washington would do about it. But what about Lincoln? He committed his Nation to a most grievous internecine war to preserve the integrity of the Union. He would not recognize the flag of the Confederacy. But after all the Confederate flag was American. The people who fought and died for it were Americans, separated from us mainly by the problem of slavery which would have been settled in 20 years without the war due to the advent of modern machinery.

The United Nations flag is not American. It has no heredity back of it except that of crime, treason, lies, hate, suspicion, and double dealing. It has nothing in it which is American except our money, and it holds little promise of ever being anything but a wilted and blood-stained rag against the glorious history and tradition of our flag of America, our beloved Stars and Stripes.

Who is that body to command General MacArthur to lead our betrayed young men to death in Korea? Who is that body which advises us to arm Western Europe and sends Eisenhower with our billions to further a project in which my constituents have not the slightest interest; nay, indeed, the whole venture enjoys their most active opposition.

Mr. Speaker, one must have truth. America is too great, too grand, too sublime to sacrifice on any altar erected to illusion. To what shall we then cling in these troubled times? We are naturally a happy people here in the United States. The newcomers from elsewhere have been fed, clothed, and sheltered and trained to be good citizens of our beloved country. We have met our "lions by the way" in the spirit of Americanism, fair play, and candor and have solved most of our disturbing problems. I am fully satisfied that we shall once again attain a reasonable stability as we build up the safety of our country here at home, create as powerful an army for our own defense as we can afford, equip it as fully with modern facilities for war making as will suffice to make us as strong as any other nation of our size. After these objectives are attained, if it be determined upon taking the people of the United States into our confidence and being completely truthful that we can afford to do some other things which would advance our security abroad, such as the creation of air bases in Europe, Great Britain, Japan, or the Philippines, we might then equip such bases. We should not use our land forces to any extent against a foreign power.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close upon the same theme as I began.

First. The United States is not at war.

Second. We are no nearer war than we have been for the past 5 years, except for the jingoistic talk too prevalent in the United Nations.

Third. There is no excuse for the levying of such huge taxes as the Chief Executive has proposed. I should recommend however that a good deal better job be done with the funds spent for the rearmament of the United States than was apparent in the past 5 years.

Fourth. That the Chief Executive immediately and forever cease the strident cries of "wolf, wolf" unless a real crisis exists.

Fifth. And that finally as we settle back peacefully into our American way of life once again and proceed to do that which we should never have stopped doing: "Mind our own business."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

DISABLED VETS BARRED FROM WORK ON DEFENSE CONTRACTS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, it is more than a crime against fair employment practices when men who fought for their country are politely informed that they are not wanted when they apply for work in plants that will make sizable profits from Government orders.

I am not referring to the unfortunate few who do not have the training or experience to qualify for any job.

I am speaking for the many who possess skills that are needed, and are on the point of being hired, until the interviewer learns that they have been disabled, even to a minor degree, while in the service of the United States.

For this "weasel" reason alone they are being frozen out of employment at the very moment that the Government, worrying about a forthcoming manpower shortage, is drafting plans to enlist women, cripples, and the aged to meet the stepped-up demand for workers in defense production.

Discrimination against disabled veterans on the basis of disability alone does not make sense.

And it does not square with elemental justice.

Our repeated tributes to them have a hollow ring, if they are not followed up, not by charity or special privilege, but by down-to-earth protection of their employment rights.

These men can produce, and they want to produce.

Having sacrificed so much on the combat line, they know better than others the importance of diligent effort on the assembly line.

In this emergency some employers insist on doing business as usual, without realizing that there is a public need that requires some sacrifices from all. When we draft men to suffer and to die in our defense, the rest of us at home should be prepared to make some adjustments to the new and critical situation that confronts this Nation.

Such employers will contend that they must be careful about the people they hire. Those who are not physically fit may become involved in accidents or aggravate their disabilities, thereby paving the way for claims against the employers. These, in turn, would increase the cost of the employers' insurance.

Suppose for the moment that we accommodate ourselves to this viewpoint.

In order to understand the manufacturers' position, we will forget all about the veteran of 1941 and 1945 and what they gave, without counting the price, to save us and our comfortable lives. We will even close our eyes to the disabled vets from Korea who are trying to start all over again back home, but at a competitive disadvantage.

We will look at the issue I bring to your attention, coldly and calmly, measuring it by the strict rule of dollars and cents.

Employers avoid taking on qualified men, even those who are but 10 percent disabled because of the insurance risk.

And yet many of those same employers will owe their survival to the Government orders now flowing to them. Before the present emergency supply was catching up with demand in many fields of economic activity. Some industries were approaching a leveling off, leading to a decline. There is no reason to believe that Stalin wanted to save them. But as a result of his activity, this Nation is committed to an all-out preparedness program that is giving a shot-in-the-arm to business as a whole, including some lines that were beginning to falter.

This is also a matter of dollars and cents.

Now none of us will regret the fact that profits and employment will hold up well in 1951.

But I, for one, do not wish to see our disabled vets excluded from participation in this constructive effort.

I believe that we should assist industry to overcome its fears, and encourage it to hire such veterans who are otherwise qualified.

In the award of defense contracts, the Government has an opportunity to remove this discrimination by insisting that disabled vets who apply for employment shall not be turned down by reason of their disability alone.

But how to get around the insurance factor?

In part, some of the insurance risks covering, in my opinion, the Government should assume—in part—some of the insurance risks covering physically impaired ex-GI's who are hired by private employers to help on defense orders, and that this obligation should be written into law.

With the liability eased, employers would be only too glad to use the skills of handicapped ex-servicemen and women who can still put in a good day's work for the benefit of themselves, their employers, and their Nation, and for the most effective mobilization of our human resources.

I intend to introduce a bill to incorporate this provision in legislative form.

It is my hope that the administration will lend its support to this measure before the industrial manpower shortage becomes acute.

The Federal Government should lead the way, through the medium of its contracts, to set fair employment standards that will guarantee equal job opportunities for our disabled vets.

Surely their rights to employment on Government work should be second to none.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 82. An act to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in conection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

S. 101. An act to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

S. 653. An act to further amend the Communications Act of 1934; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1951, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1951

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. E. W. Sauer, Fisher Methodist Church, Fisher, Ill., offered the following prayer:

At the very beginning, our Father, of this Lenten season, commemorative of the last days in the life of the One who was redemptive love, we pray for divine wisdom that we may so exercise the privileges of American citizenship that we shall do that which is acceptable unto Thee, remembering always that he best serves his country who best serves his God. This we ask in the name of the One who said, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE ECONOMIC REPORT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 5, Public Law 304, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report the following Members on the part of the House: Messrs. HART, PATMAN, BUCHANAN, BOLLING, WOLCOTT, HERTER, and BOGGS of Delaware.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT OF 1951

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 11]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 347 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Resolution 95 be recommitted to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT OF 1951

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1612.

The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1612, with Mr. WALTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate on the bill has been concluded. The Clerk will now read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951."

SEC. 2. The period during which the President is authorized to enter into foreign-trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and extended, is hereby extended for a further period of 3 years from June 12, 1951.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin: After line 9, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. As soon as practicable, but not more than 90 days after enactment of this act, the President shall take such action as is necessary to withdraw or prevent the application of reduced tariffs or other concessions (including the binding of an article on the free list) contained in any trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into under authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and extended, to imports from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and to imports from any nation or area thereof which the President deems to be dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. As I understood the reading of the amendment, it is not germane to the bill presently before us, H. R. 1612. The purpose of the bill before us, and the sole purpose, is to extend the authority of the President to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements. The gentleman's amendment goes far beyond that purpose, and therefore is not germane to the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us deals with the Trade Agreements Act. One of the purposes of the bill before us certainly, and its major purpose is to extend the authority of the President under the Trade Agreements Act. However, in keeping with that purpose and objective, the Congress has the authority and right to either limit or extend the trade agreements authority of the President. This amendment is directed to that objective. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the principle of germaneness would restrict us in this proceeding today to the single consideration of whether or not the authority of the President is to be extended in the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements. I think it is certainly germane to either restrict or extend the authority of the President under the act. This amendment goes to the scope of the authority granted to the President.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Wisconsin has well stated. The question here today is the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Congress in extending that authority is well within its own rights to adopt restrictions in its grants. As I understand, the gentleman from Wisconsin has offered an amendment inserting a new paragraph in the bill which would restrict trade concessions and free privileges to the U. S. S. R. and other Communist countries, known as the satellite countries. Is that not the fact, may I inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, that is the purpose of the amendment. It would restrict the application of concessions granted under the Trade Agreements Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the amendment is in order. If Congress wants to bar Communist countries from special privileges given to our friendly neighbors it should have that right. We must not forget that to Congress was given the authority to regulate tariffs and it should of course be able to restrict that grant if it so desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to add language to the bill providing, among other things, "that as soon as practicable, but not more than 90 days after the enactment of this act, the President shall take such action as is necessary to withdraw or prevent the application of reduced tariffs, or other concessions contained in any trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into under the authority," and so on.

The bill before the committee at this time provides merely that the period during which the President is authorized to enter into foreign trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and extended, is hereby extended for a further period of 3 years, from June 12, 1951.

The Chair rules that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not germane to the bill under consideration and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard further, the Chair then, I understand, takes the position that Congress has no right to restrict any agreement hereafter to be entered into? Is that the fact?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] is not germane to this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is it not germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the reasons.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am asking the Chairman the question if his ruling is based on the fact that it should not interfere with a treaty that has already been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling is based on the retroactive aspect of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It would be within the jurisdiction if the gentleman's amendment provided that any treaties hereafter made shall not apply to Soviet Russia or its satellites?

The CHAIRMAN. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I wonder if the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] would not withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled.

Are there further amendments?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania: After line 9 insert the following:

"SEC. 3. (a) Before entering into negotiations concerning any proposed foreign-trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the President shall furnish the United States Tariff Commission (hereinafter in this act referred to as the Commission) with a list of all articles imported into the United States to be considered for possible modification of duties and other import restrictions, imposition of additional import restrictions, or continuance of existing customs or excise treatment. Upon receipt of such list the Commission shall make an investigation and report to the President the findings of the Commission with respect to each such article as to (1) the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended in order to carry out the purpose of such section 350 without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles; and (2) if increases in duties or additional import restrictions are required to avoid serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles, the minimum increases in duties or additional import restrictions required. Such report shall be made by the Commission to the President not later than 120 days after the receipt of such list by the Commission. No such foreign-trade agreement shall be entered into until the Commission has made its report to the President or until the expiration of the 120-day period.

"(b) In the course of any investigation pursuant to this section the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings.

"((c) Section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930,' approved June 12, 1934, as amended (19 U. S. C., sec. 1354), is hereby amended by striking out the matter following the semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and before concluding such agreement the President shall request the Tariff Commission to make the investigation and report provided for by section 3 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, and shall seek information and advice with respect to such agreement from the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, and Defense, and from such other sources as he may deem appropriate.'

"SEC. 4. The Commission shall furnish facts, statistics, and other information at its command to officers and employees of the United States preparing for or participating in the negotiation of any foreign-trade agreement; but neither the Commission nor any member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall participate in any manner (except to report findings, as provided in section 3 of this act and to furnish facts, statistics, and other information as required by this section) in the making of decisions with respect to the proposed terms of any foreign-trade agreement or in the negotiation of any such agreement.

"SEC. 5. (a) Within 30 days after any trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, has been entered into which, when effective, will (1) require or make appropriate any modification of duties or other import restrictions, the imposition of additional import restrictions, or the continuance of existing customs or excise treatment, which modification, imposition, or continuance will exceed the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles as found and reported by the Tariff Commission under section 3, or (2) fail to require or make appropriate the minimum increase in duty or additional import restrictions required to avoid such injury, the President shall transmit to Congress a copy of such agreement together with a message accurately identifying the article with respect to which such limits or minimum requirements are not complied with, and stating his reasons for the action taken with respect to such article. If either the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, are not in session at the time of such transmission, such agreement and message shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or both, as the case may be.

"(b) Promptly after the President has transmitted such foreign-trade agreement to Congress the Commission shall deposit with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, a copy of the portions of its report to the President dealing with the articles with respect to which such limits or minimum requirements are not complied with."

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, this is the peril-point amendment. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MILLS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if this is not the so-called peril-point amendment, that has the same purpose as the amendment which the gentleman offered in the Ways and Means Committee earlier?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct. It is the same, with some changes as to dates.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may have five additional minutes in order to explain his amendment, in view of the fact that it has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas for requesting the additional time.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is of far greater importance now than it would have been a few moments ago had the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] been found germane.

This is the so-called peril-point amendment; the danger point. Those words are understood by industry everywhere. Those are words understood by working men everywhere, by those 4,000,000 and more men who lost their jobs about a year ago because of the competition of imports from abroad.

To establish the peril-point principle is the one thing this body can do today to give some assurance to the American workingman that his job will not be traded down the river. This amendment provides a very simple proposition: It is that when the President determines that there shall be further negotiations under the trade agreements, the Tariff Commission, which is an independent body, a fact-finding body created by this Congress, shall make an examination and determine a tariff rate below which serious damage will be done to an American industry if the tariff is cut. That is all it does.

After the Tariff Commission makes that finding it hands it over to the President; it is secret in the hands of the President except as he sees fit to pass the word on to men to whom he delegates authority. They proceed with their negotiations. In the event, and only in the event, that this peril point is disregarded and the tariff is cut below the peril point, then and then only is anything further done. Under that circumstance, when the rate is cut below the warning rate as set by the Tariff Commission, the President of the United States simply writes to the Congress, to us, and says: "I have for the following reasons thought it wise to cut the tariff below the danger point." That is all he does. There is nothing secret about it, no further information regarding the proposed peril points with respect to other items. Certainly that is no burden of any unjust character to place upon the President. Certainly it is the least we can do to assure jobs to our workmen back home.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Do I understand from the gentleman's amendment that in the final analysis it is a matter entirely within the discretion of the President as to whether he shall ask that the peril point be invoked?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The President has no choice. If the tariff rate is cut below the level set by the Tariff Commission as the safe level, and the President approves a tariff cut below that rate, then the President, with respect to that single item, says to the Congress: "I have for the following reasons decided that we should cut the tariff below this safe rate as set by the Tariff Commission."

Mr. COLMER. Then, in order that we may clarify it, there is a finding of fact made by the Tariff Commission.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Correct.

Mr. COLMER. And then it is mandatory upon the President to make the request.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It is mandatory upon the President to make a report to the Congress if he approves a cut of the tariff below that point. But in no way whatever is Mr. Truman or Mr. Acheson or anyone of the negotiators limited; they may cut below that level as found by the Tariff Commission if they see fit to, but if they do, I repeat, they must tell the Congress that they have done so and why they have done so.

Mr. COLMER. Then what does the Congress do?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The Congress then will do just what I am going to tell you now.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FISHER. Was the peril-point provision written into trade-agreement bills in the past?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. No; it would never be written in a trade agreement; it was merely written in the law some time ago.

Mr. FISHER. It was written into one of the extension acts?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Correct.

Mr. FISHER. And it worked very well?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. We say it worked very well within the limits of the time opportunity. The report was made to the President, but it was not included in the bill.

If I may, I wish now to proceed and suggest a couple of things to do. We are in the war effort, we are very seriously at a disadvantage because we do not have certain items, one of which is timepieces, another of which is wool, another of which is chemicals for the manufacture of ammunition and so on, another of which is synthetic rubber, another of which is certain products made in the glassware industry in wartime, and there are a number of others. Minerals are the most important ones in which we are short.

In every one of those industries what any reasonable person will now say is that the peril point has been exceeded and in every one of those strategic industries we are today short at a very time when we need them. Had this peril-point provision been the law, had the President come to us and, speaking about watches, said: "Gentlemen, I have cut the tariff below the peril point," do you think that you, as Members of Congress, would have sat here and allowed the great watch industry to deteriorate by one-third in the past year? What if the companies remaining have made a few dollars profit, where are we today for timepieces, for the very essential bomb detonation fuses and so forth? We need the skilled labor that was available in that industry. Then there is the optical glass industry, which makes range finders we are importing from Japan, Germany, and other countries today. Remember that the one company which makes those in this land was, within the past 3 months, requested by our Government to increase its capacity by 40 times. They cannot do it. There is not the skilled labor here with which to do it. That industry has been almost ruined because we are today permitting shipment into the United States from Germany, from Japan, and from other countries abroad of the instruments that we should be making here.

We are dependent upon ocean transportation in those very critical fields. Those critical fields I have enumerated only include a few hundred thousand employees. They are within the area where the Hisses that may have been in Government, or the Remingtons, if you please, or any one of the dozen others who have at one time or other been in the State Department, and who have been instrumental in the preparation of these trade agreement policies could, if so inclined, have confined their efforts to those strategic areas with the result that today we are in real danger. We are dependent for our national defense upon the importation of those items manufactured in areas abroad, we are dependent upon ocean transportation at the very time we should be safe. We should be making them here. We should be getting our own minerals here.

Put this peril point provision in the bill and in the future that condition will not come to pass because you and you, as Members of Congress, will not sit here and allow that peril point to be exceeded. I ask you to support my amendment.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. What the gentleman says about industries important to our defense is very true. It is significant to note that the Women's Patriotic Congress, held in Washington on January 25 to 27, comprising some 40 patriotic associations, passed a resolution to the effect that the Trade Agreements Act should expire and be not extended.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; that great patriotic organization realized that the entire program should not be passed, but certainly would approve this kind of an amendment. You owe it to the people within your district, you owe it to the people of the country to support my amendment.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman mentioned a moment ago that when the President cuts a tariff to a level that is injurious to American industry, the Tariff Commission is notified and in turn the Congress is notified. When the Congress receives this information, what is it going to do about it?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. When the Congress has the information, as I have stated, you would not stand for cuts below the danger point.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. What happens? What action can we take?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. After the President notifies Congress he has cut the tariff below the danger point, any Congressman with an affected industry in his district will know what to do.

He will put up a yell on behalf of his constituents, the employees, and owners of the industry. The Congress will take notice; the blame can be pinned on the President and State Department where it belongs, and believe me, the industry will be saved by congressional action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, preliminary to examining this amendment in some detail and what it seeks to accomplish, I think it pertinent to go back a few years in the history of this legislation and to the historic friends and enemies of this program.

The reciprocal trade program first went into effect in 1934 under the direction of one of the great leaders for peace in this world, the great Judge Hull, former Secretary of State, and former Member of this body from the State of Tennessee. That program came about after we had seen enacted in the late twenties the Smoot-Hawley tariff which drove off of the seas American commerce and American shipping and reduced our foreign trade to zero, and rather than a program of protection and employment for industry in this Nation, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania now pleads for so eloquently, we experienced the greatest period of depression and unemployment that the Nation had ever known up to that time.

I, of course, do not propose to claim that the reciprocal trade program, operating by itself alone, accomplished these objectives.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Of course, I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts is opposed to this program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Yes; I yield to the gentleman, since I referred to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to tell the gentleman from Louisiana that I am not opposed to the program. I voted for it the last time, but I am in favor of giving American industry and the workers of America an opportunity to flourish, and if the gentleman will accept this amendment, I will be very happy to join with him.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. The gentleman knows that there are two ways to be for a program. You can be for it so that the program can operate or you can emasculate it by amendments which will kill it, and then on the final roll call be for it. But historically the Republican Party has opposed this program. Historically it has been a high-tariff party, and the gentleman who comes here today, who says that he is a friend of this program, for all practical purposes, regardless of how he may dress up his amendment, is presenting to this body the historic high-tariff policy of the Republican Party.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Not at this point.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wanted to tell the gentleman that McKinley was the one who inspired this program.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Now, despite the plea of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the facts are that employment in this Nation at this time is greater than ever and industrial output has reached a level that no one dreamed it might reach in 1934. American industry is stronger, more virile than it has ever been, so that the charge that this program has affected the security of American industry is palpably false on the face of the record.

Let us examine just exactly what this amendment seeks to do, and let me point out to you how it destroys this program if it is adopted. This amendment sets aside, puts over in a compartment by itself, and isolated from the other agencies of the Government, the Tariff Commission of the United States. It says to the other agencies of the Government, "You are deprived of the facilities of the Tariff Commission of the United States."

The gentleman from Pennsylvania a moment ago in support of his amendment made a plea based upon the defense requirements of the United States of America, yet, I say to you that the effect of his amendment is to deprive the executive agencies of the United States of the consultation of the Tariff Commission in the establishment of these agreements. Under existing legislation, not only do we employ the facilities of the Tariff Commission, the experts of the Tariff Commission, the trained personnel of the Tariff Commission, but we employ the facilities of the Department of Defense, the Department of Commmerce, the Department of State, the Department of Labor, the Economic Cooperation Administration, and other agencies of the Government which are capable through the joint committee of formulating policies which affect the over-all welfare of the United States.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Yes; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman must know that the Tariff Commission is a fact-finding body. That is why it was created. It is the one that presumably today tells the President where the danger point is. The only difference is that the President cuts the tariff, if he sees fit, below that danger point and then does not tell the public. All this says is, "Mr. President, you must tell Congress that you have seen fit to cut the tariff below this level," and the American people are entitled to know that.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. In reply to the gentleman I will read a statement, just a paragraph or two, made by Mr. Kline, president of the Farm Bureau Federation of the United States, where he in behalf of the farmers vigorously opposed this amendment. He opposed it then and he opposes it now. This is what he said 2 years ago when the Republicans did put through these crippling amendments:

> These amendments remove the United States Tariff Commission from the list of agencies from which the President must seek information and advice with respect to the negotiation of proposed trade agreements, and the Commission or its representative are specifically prohibited from participating in the negotiations of trade agreements.
> These amendments also require that before trade-agreement negotiations can be conducted, the Commission must conduct separate, independent investigations and reports, and hold separate hearings which duplicate the hearings held by the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

Not only did Mr. Kline say that but the United States Chamber of Commerce said the same thing. The Junior Chamber of Commerce said the same thing. Every friend of this program, to my knowledge, without exception, took the identical position. Mr. Charles Taft, the distinguished brother of a Member of the other body, testified before our committee and made a very strong statement against the so-called peril-point amendment. The amendment is opposed by the civic, by the business, by the commercial organizations of the United States. It is opposed almost unanimously by the press, whether that press be Democratic or Republican in its predilections. It comes here not under the sponsorship of the traditional friends of this program but under the sponsorship of the people who gave this country the highest tariff in its history, and who now seek by indirection, by a procedural device, if you will, again to destroy the program.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my good friend who has just spoken said that those who favor this amendment are enemies of the reciprocal trade-agreements program. Such is not the case at all. I have always supported the reciprocal trade-agreements program. I am for it. I am going to vote for it today, whether or not this amendment is adopted. But I do say that this is a reasonable, a fair, a democratic amendment, and that we ought to adopt it.

I recall when the President last addressed this Congress he said we should put the welfare of the country above partisan politics. We all agree to such a principle. The peril-point and the escape-clause amendments being offered to this bill are very much in the public interest.

The peril-point amendment after all simply gives to industry and labor in this country a wailing wall, so to speak.

It does not in any wise tie the hands of the administration, as alleged. I have sat in this chamber during numerous debates on the various extensions of the reciprocal trade agreements program. I am getting tired of having the personality of our great former Secretary, Mr. Cordell Hull, made an issue in this discussion. We revere his services to the country and he was the father of this program, but that is no reason why there should not be from time to time a reasonably practical amendment to the program. The Congress is being asked here to grant almost plenary power of life and death over American industry and American labor to the Secretary of State. I am not willing to entrust such power to any agency or department of Government. The American people are getting tired of this Congress frittering away its legislative duties and responsibilities. If you Members have been reading your mail lately, you know that we are being castigated because we do not do our duty and because we turn over to the sprawling executive branches of the Government vast responsibility and power over the lives and property of the people.

There are two amendments to this bill which are going to be offered. I want to go on record as being in favor of both of them. One is the peril point amendment and that is an amendment before the fact, if you please, to give industry and labor the right to go down to the Tariff Commission and say, "Here is a level below which we are going to be hurt." In the course of American jurisprudence and American justice has anybody ever been denied such a right—the right of petition, if you please?

The other is the escape clause amendment which is going to be offered by my friend, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] and I understand another by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]. That amendment gives the industries and labor organizations of the country the right to go in after the fact, when these agreements have been working for a while, and say, "Conditions have changed. Business has fallen off. The economic situation has changed, and we are entitled to some relief."

Who is there here who has the temerity to stand in the well of the House and say that American industry, American labor, and the American people are not entitled to both those rights? Have we come to a point in this country where we are willing to deliver to anybody, good, bad, or indifferent, plenary power of life and death over American industry and American labor? I still say we should take care of this country first. I do not think we can do it by high tariffs. Neither do I think we can do it by eliminating all protection and all restrictions which have been set up for the protection of the American standard of living. We all know, and we are proud of the fact that American labor has the highest standard of living of any labor in the entire world. We also know that American labor cannot compete with coolie labor in China and with the labor of many other parts of the world. So we simply say here through the peril-point provision that these people, our people who have contributed to the strength and security of this country, have the right to be heard. Opponents of these amendments say, "Oh, you are taking the Federal Tariff Commission out—you are depriving the committee that negotiates these treaties of the expert advice of the Federal Tariff Commission." There are plenty of other people who can give expert advice. For that matter they can take the assistance even of the commissioners themselves outside of their official role as commissioners, if necessary, and consult with them. That is simply a smoke screen in an effort to defeat amendments which ought to be written into this program.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members of the House exercise good judgment and write into this program American amendments for the benefit of American labor and American industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the time has come for us to be realistic, and first of all to be Americans. How does it happen that we have one of the greatest governments in the world? How does it happen that we have the highest standard of living?

Going back to the beginning of this Government, every government, including Great Britain, was trying to make us just a producer of raw materials. She was going to have the payrolls. She was going to manufacture the goods. This country has always protected its market. It has had to protect its market against the cheap labor abroad. Today, the disparity between wages in this country in industry and those competing industries abroad is so great that it is utterly impossible for us to continue to have the high standard of living which we enjoy.

Already foreign goods are coming into this country in quantities that are disastrous. When I say "disastrous" let me bring you down to earth, if I may, just a moment. There are simply thousands of villages and communities throughout this country that live upon the payroll of an industry. Our communities are built on payrolls. When we export those payrolls abroad we destroy not only the payrolls of that community but we destroy the community itself.

Can you imagine anything that those countries behind the iron curtain and Russia herself would enjoy more than to be able to strike terror into this country by destroying its payrolls?

Who helped frame these low tariffs? Well, Alger Hiss was one of the moving spirits in that, as he was, of course, in relation to the United Nations. Strange thing that they should have the veto power in the United Nations. Strange thing that they would want to lower the tariffs down below a danger point.

When we think of our boys fighting in Korea, probably under worse conditions than an American army ever faced, losing their feet, their hands, their eyes, and many of them losing their lives, fighting 7,000 miles away from home, I wonder what they are going to think when an amendment like this is under consideration and the House opposes it on a technical parliamentary point. I wonder what they are going to think about turning down by a parliamentary move the Byrnes amendment that was offered earlier. All we are trying to do is to stop our enemies from getting the benefit of all the reductions made to 45 free countries. Russia dominates over 800,000,000 people, with all of those countries behind the iron curtain, yet we turn down a proposition of protecting our boys who are fighting over in Korea. Russia and her satellite countries can pour their imports in here and get all the benefits of a low tariff, get dollars with which to buy the tanks and guns and facilities to murder our boys. Think of it. Yet they raise a point of order against our boys—not against us, but they raise a point of order against our boys in Korea being able to defend themselves against Red China and the Russian satellite countries.

I say the time has come to be realistic. Certainly there is no industry in this country that should not be protected against the tariff being lowered below a danger point, the destruction point of that industry. I say, if there is anybody on this floor who wants to fight for the boys, they should at least strive to save this peril point; save our industries. We are going to need production if we do not have inflation.

You may believe that foreign goods are not impinging on our payrolls. What I am reading is local, but it applies to every community in this country.

> Only yesterday, a Washington clothier and haberdasher in an advertisement calling attention to an inventory clearance offered such items as men's fine shirts of imported fabrics, imported hand-blocked wool neckwear, imported sweaters, imported English wool hose, imported men's toilet soap, silk mufflers hand-blocked in England, men's English gabardine topcoats, imported English felt hats, imported Scratch felt hats, made in Italy, imported Shetland sport jackets, tailored sport jackets of imported fabrics, handwoven Shetland tweed sport jackets, imported material cheviot topcoats, Burberry topcoats, made in England, tweed topcoats, hand woven in Scotland, Chester Barrie tweed topcoats, hand-woven in Scotland, imported shoes made by Alan McAfee of London, Saxony woolen coats made by Rodex of London, Rodex Scotch tweed topcoat, and a group of imported single-breasted English raincoats for women.

These advertisements are being carried all over this country. Now, are you going to stop it or are you going to do away with the peril point and let these industries be destroyed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. GAVIN. I want to point out to the gentleman that these industries to which he refers have been producing the money that makes the profits, that pays the taxes into the Federal Government, that makes this whole program in Europe possible. In other words we pumped $40,000,000,000 into Europe in the last 4 years to rehabilitate the industrial life of the European countries. Now they lower the tariff barriers and they flood this country with cheap merchandise that is crucifying the industries that make the whole program possible.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that over in Germany today they are making chemicals just as good as we can here in this country. The gentleman knows also that right now at Torquay they are negotiating away the protection of the American chemical industry. This industry today cannot expand because private capital will not go into it knowing that the same chemicals will come from plants in Germany which have been built under ERP funds.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman. I want to call attention to another thing: The gentleman from Louisiana referred to our export business. Yes; I went into the export business in my first speech. That was the export business that brought about the war in the Pacific and murdered our boys in Pearl Harbor and Japan. We poured $40,000,000,000 since the war in Europe through the ECA and what has happened? Of course we can ship over exports when the money that pays for the exports comes out of this country; and, of course, there is a certain group of our people, the taxpayers, who will pay for the exports, and, of course, the foreign nations will believe in a system of government that gave them gratis the exports. I say again, the time has come to be realistic.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this peril-point amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, there is nothing that could be done that would so jeopardize the trade-agreements program or so cripple its administration as to adopt this amendment.

It has been said here by speakers before me, and especially by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT], that this amendment will create a forum or a wailing wall for American industry. He evidently is not familiar with this program and does not know the method of negotiating a trade agreement at the present time. The very Tariff Commission in whose hands they seek to put the whole proposition sits on the Committee for Reciprocity Information. It is a superb fact-finding commission, and it dominates the Committee for Reciprocity Information. Let me briefly describe what takes place when a trade treaty is in process of negotiation. In the first place they publish a list of those articles that may be negotiated. The public is put on notice that these articles may come up for negotiation with a certain country and if any manufacturer or producer of those articles desires, he may appear before the Committee for Reciprocity Information and give testimony. Now, Mr. GOSSETT, there is your wailing wall, there is your committee. They hold hearings and at these hearings there will be, and always is, a member from the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the Department of National Defense, and lately they have added all of these new agencies like the ECA.

Let me explain to you what recently happened in my own district. We are producing down there an agricultural product that is not produced anywhere else in the United States to any extent. My district produces 95 percent of the American supply of it. They advertised they were going to hold these renegotiation hearings at Torquay, England, and that this article might be brought up and might be negotiated. We immediately appeared before the Committee for Reciprocity Information and the member on that committee from the Tariff Commission particularly questioned me about this product, why it happened to be grown down there, and so forth. I am glad to tell you that they made a report that the tariff rate must not be reduced.

Mr. Chairman, the Tariff Commission not only hears this testimony just as it would under the peril-point proposition, but they sit in at the negotiations, they will have their man to talk in England, and you are now getting the benefit of all the knowledge that the Tariff Commission has on any item.

Let me say further that in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, which has not been repealed, there are more than 5,000 articles or items and each one of these items has many forms and shapes; so you might say there are 20,000 items. How long do you think it will take the Tariff Commission to set up peril points on all of the goods manufactured in this country?

Let me tell you something else. Instead of helping this program, instead of helping to protect the interest of manufacturers in this program, it will so retard the work of the Commission they will never get around to all of them. This program has been in effect since 1934. It has been so successful that every big trade body in this country, including the United States Chamber of Commerce, is in favor of it. Since its inception in 1934 there have been only 20 appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer an argument advanced by the gentleman from Louisiana with reference to the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act passed many years ago. You know, that is almost ancient history, but this is a very vital fact; at no time since that bill was passed has the Democratic majority ever tried to repeal any of it. They have been challenged on this floor dozens and dozens of times to do something about it and quit talking, but they have never done a thing about it. They must really like it.

Let me speak for a few minutes about this peril-point proposition.

On this proposition the words "peril point" are very catchy, and they mean a whole lot. But, there has been a great deal developed in the last 2 or 3 years that makes this peril point still more important.

My good friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP] spoke about what the Tariff Commission does. The Tariff Commission is a high-class commission, appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. It is a continuing commission; it is a nonpartisan commission. I think it has four Democrats on it and three Republicans. It has made a great reputation, but it has not been allowed hardly at all to function since these Hull agreement laws have been passed. What has taken its place? This thing they call the Committee on Reciprocity Information has in effect taken its place. That is a political committee. Now, does anybody want to dispute that with me? I repeat, that committee is purely a political committee. You may say, "Well, one man sits on it from the Tariff Commission." Yes, only one man. He goes there, but listen to me, the practice and the story that we get before our committee is that people have gone down there by the dozens to present their views and they get the brush-off; they do not get anything. It is purely a political committee, and speaking a few days ago I said something about it and I struck what I said out of the record—I said their conduct has been almost disgraceful. Maybe I ought to strike that out of the record because I do not like to say it. It is not a popular committee; it is not functioning properly. It has been an overriding committee. On the other hand, who is there here who wants to say that the Tariff Commission has not done a high-class job? It has.

Now, all we want to do with this peril-point business is this: The law provides that the President can increase or decrease tariff duties within certain limits. Do you know he never has increased the rates but once? I believe that is all; I may be wrong about that, but not more than two or three times has he ever increased any duty for anybody under any circumstances. All of his actions have been reductions. He reduces, he reduces, and continues to reduce. Why? Because the Committee on Reciprocity Information tells him to do that. The President can hardly have time to know these details. That is one of the reasons this Congress set up the Tariff Commission.

Now, all we do have now is two things. We try to take from this Committee on Reciprocity Information some of this power that it has arrogated to itself, and the only way to do that is by publicity, and that is the reason we want this publicity. The President should be compelled to make a report to the Congress. I want to tell you that in this democracy there is a wonderful potency in publicity. Likewise, there is potency in being truthful and honest and aboveboard, and that is all we ask in this amendment for the President to tell the Congress and the world why it is he wants to reduce the tariffs down below the point which will be perilous to some industry and below a rate fixed by the Congress and by the Tariff Commission itself. At present he can do as he pleases without any accountability to anybody, and I tell you that this President or any other President should have that power taken away from him. We went a long way when we gave the President power to fix duties within a limit in the first reciprocal agreement tariff law. The Constitution gives that power to the Congress and not only does it give Congress the power, but it puts upon Congress the duty. We have that responsibility, and we have in the interest of expediency, in times gone by, clear from the days of McKinley, given to the President some rights and some privileges. But these privileges were only to be exercised as an assistance to carrying out the law and were to be exercised only within certain definite limitations. In that way Congress kept the legislative function to itself and gave to the President only a well-limited executive function. But now we come to the place and say, "You have abused that privilege; your committee has exceeded the limits." How do we know? Take the testimony of the watch people, the pottery people, and the glass people, and the fisheries on both oceans, and they will tell you what kind of treatment they get down there before this Committee for Reciprocity Information.

My friends, I say that is in the interest of everybody, that the people be protected by the passage of this amendment, fix certain points below which the duties should not be lowered.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is an unusual role for me to occupy. Ordinarily I have not been opposed to the reciprocal trade agreement program, but I have had some complaint about the administration of it. However, it seems to me this amendment is impotent, unnecessary, ineffective, and would bring no benefits at all to those who are supporting it.

Let me read you the testimony of a man whom you all know, who I think knows as much about tariffs as any man, and who is as much opposed to the reciprocal trade agreements program as any man could be, the distinguished Senator from Nevada, Mr. MALONE. As I read his testimony from page 374 of the hearings, may I say that his position is my position on this amendment:

Mr. MILLS. Senator, were you one of the advocates in the Senate of the so-called peril-point provision? I think I recall that you introduced, with other Senators, a bill along that line back in the Eighieth Congress. Am I not right on that?

Senator MALONE. No. I want to correct you on that. I am not in favor of the peril point. Of course, it would be better than what we have now, but I am not in favor of it because all it would do would be to make the President write us a letter to let us know why he is exceeding the peril-point tariffs.

Mr. MILLS. If you will permit me to interrupt you, actually it has been my opinion all the time that the peril-point provision did not really accomplish the safeguards that its advocates have claimed it would accomplish because it does not prevent anything from occurring. Is not that right?

Senator MALONE. In my opinion, it would be useless, and probably worse, because if we accept the extension of the 1934 Trade Agreements Act with that principle, then we are lost.

I take the same position as the Senator from Nevada. This is an amendment offered only for the purpose of amending something. It has no force and effect and would be of no value to the people who might be led to believe they were getting some benefit under this amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has quoted Senator MALONE. He has not covered the fact, though, that Senator MALONE stated he was 100 percent opposed to the program.

Mr. GRANGER. That is right; he is opposed to it, but he is opposed to it outright, and he is not ready to accept an amendment of this kind by the back door. It would have the effect of destroying the very thing he is for.

There are other reasons why I have changed my mind somewhat on this program. The situation is different than it was a year ago. We are in a world struggle today. Peace is more important now than any other thing to be desired. These trade agreements are interlaced with every country with which we have relations. These relations are already strained to the breaking point with many of them, not only with Russia and the satellite countries but with others. It seems to me that this amendment, instead of encouraging the boys in Korea, would have the opposite effect by giving them the impression that we are doing something to rock the boat and disturb our now serious relations with other countries of the world. I think it is unfortunate that we should do this at this time. Even if I were for amending this trade-agreements program, I would hesitate to do it at this particular time. But this amendment is impossible, as it would hold out only a false hope to one who considered himself to be injured.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the subject before us today known as the Trade Agreements Act, H. R. 1612, vitally affects all Americans—the farmer, the workingman, and the consumer. It will determine whether we go forward to a high standard of living with a higher standard of wages, or blunder into another depression or recession. In my opinion, American trade policies are too vital to the Nation's welfare to trust to the whims of one man no matter how sincere he may be. This authority should be retained by Congress or, at least, Congress should establish certain standards for the guidance of the President so the people, business, labor, and agriculture will know what to expect.

I believe this bill should be amended so we will have a peril point provision which is nothing more than a report made by the Tariff Commission specifying a point which would be perilous to this country to go below in tariff reduction. In other words, the peril point is a stop or, at least, a slow clause which will certainly help protect the American worker, farmer, and industrialist from low wage rate goods imported into the United States from foreign countries. It would prevent glassware, tableware, pottery, Russian furs, Red Chinese dried eggs, and other farm and industrial products from being sold in America much cheaper than they could be produced here simply because they are produced by slave labor. No thinking and patriotic American should object to the inclusion of this amendment which is essential to the preservation of our Nation's economy and our Nation's security.

I also urge that an amendment be included in H. R. 1612 to provide an escape clause. The reason for this is that at the present time many industries whose tariff protection has been seriously reduced are unfairly discriminated against because they are denied the privilege that other industries have of appealing under the escape clause. I contend that all industries should have equal treatment and a chance to have their day in court.

If these two amendments are not incorporated in this bill, certainly the working people and all those who have a stake in the continued prosperity of our Nation should hold the New Deal party strictly responsible for the economic evils and disastrous consequences which will beset our national economy, and be the result of any ill-advised tariff reduction. When the time arrives when factories are closed and millions are out of work, those directly affected should remember who is to blame.

May I reiterate my former statements, Mr. Chairman: When you reduce the tariff on products from other countries, you are allowing products to be brought into this country made by low-income labor, which makes it impossible for the American worker to match. We all believe in reciprocal trade, but let us make sure it is reciprocal, taking into consideration the welfare and living standard of our own people. The Trade Agreements Act is a sell-out by the New Deal party to the free traders of the South. The farmer, the workingman, and the small-business man are pushed aside and their interests are forgotten. We must remember we are furnishing cash to foreign countries to pay the labor for their products so as to be a part in world markets. This bill as written would force us to compete against our own tax money and grant favoritism to our competitors.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am shocked at the position of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER], a member of the committee. For 12 years the gentleman and I and many others have fought together here to rehabilitate the mining industry of America. I have no mines in my district, but I have fought for the sake of our national defense. We have had our quarrels with the Munitions Board. He knows full well what President Truman's position was in signing Public Law 520 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Stock Pile Act, when he opposed very outwardly, but did not veto, the "Buy American" clause in that law. I have on my desk the last annual report of the Munitions Board dated January 23, 1951. We have reached the miserable percentage of 30 percent of the Government's stockpiles, and so far as the mines are concerned, we lost 8,000 of 11,000 gold, silver, copper, lead, and zinc mines between 1935 and 1951. Eight thousand have been closed. We have crossed the peril point so often and so violently I am surprised that any Member from a mining State can stand up in the House of Representatives and defend an action which seeks to eliminate any provision which would inform the American people that we are going below the peril point. I do not know why the mining industry would want us to blindfold ourselves so that we will not know when we are again crossing the peril point. As a matter of fact we have crossed it many, many times and this bill makes us ever more impotent in our national defense efforts.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. I think the gentleman will admit that there was not a single mining man or livestock man or wool grower who appeared before the committee or who even wrote a letter to the committee in opposition to the passage of this bill; is that not true? Not a man appeared before our committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Not this year, but we incorporated by reference the proceedings of the preceding hearings 2 years ago and the gentleman will find plenty of evidence and plenty of testimony in opposition. Those hearings were incorporated by reference, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. Chairman, in the hearings you will find the statement of President Truman opposing the "Buy American" principle on page 295. If you are interested in it I suggest that you read it. You will find there his ideas about "Buy American." You will also find the situation of the wool industry in America very graphically portrayed in this year's hearings on page 164, and you will find the contrasting situation in wool in South Africa on page 165 of the hearings. If you are interested you should read it. If you want to go back a little more in history, go back to the hearings of 1948 and read there Mr. Clayton's testimony and picture the background there of his dash back here from Geneva to induce us to do something about wool. What did we do with wool? We granted Britain a 25 percent reduction in the wool tariff to get Britain lined up with our trade agreement program. What happened? Well, you can find out from the hearings. I will tell you that the population of sheep in America today is at its lowest ebb since the Civil War, and we are more dependent on imports than ever before. You will also find, if you want to look for it, that Australia and New Zealand are selling wool and shipping it into Russia today.

Now let us consider the question of rubber. If you want to find a sickening surrender of our State Department in trading over the safety of our men in Korea, then look at pages 836 and 837 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 31 where I quoted the State Department's excuse for condoning the sale and shipment of rubber from Malaya and Hong Kong to the U. S. S. R. and Red China. Rubber is going there in ever greater quantities. Is it any wonder that raw rubber jumped from 17 cents up to 75 cents? Is it any wonder that wool jumped from $1.99 last June to $4.30? We are bidding frantically against the world while our allies help our enemies. We are bidding against our enemies with our own allies who are the principal sources of supply because we have long since passed peril points so far as our own production of domestically produced strategic and critical materials and our own self-sufficiency is concerned.

Now, let us take this Munitions Board report. I have just received this report today. It is dated January 23. Our Government stockpile stands at 30 percent. Oh, they say they revised the objective. What have they been doing? Taking a nap for 5 years? I wanted to get this objective up 5 years ago. They have been nursing us along with statements of their own self-praise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I say the Munitions Board today have finally jumped out of their rocking chairs with their pants on fire. They tell you now that they have an objective of $8,000,000,000 of strategic and critical materials. They were satisfied less than a year ago with an objective of $4,000,000,000 of Government stockpile.

What is the situation in private industry? We could take the hide off of them too, because they not only gobbled up all the available supply of strategic and critical materials after World War II, and RFC handed over to industry about $12,000,000,000 worth of them; they not only gobbled all that up but they have lowered their reserves to the danger point. There is no adequate private industrial stockpile of strategic and critical materials in this country today.

Now, the Democrats tell us that we are so impotent that we must continue the most-favored-nation clause to our enemies. How can I expect you to join with me in standing up and fighting Great Britain and some of her colonies and telling them what we think of them for insisting on sending rubber and wool and other critical and strategic materials directly into China and directly to the iron-curtain nations? What am I going to write to my boy, who is an infantryman in the fox holes of Korea? Am I going to tell him that Congress is totally impotent; that Congress has to take this lying down? Is that the message you want me to write to my son?

For 12 years I have been trying to build up, rehabilitate, and activate the mining industry of America. I do not have a mine in my district, but I do have a son in Korea. I have tried to build up the wool supply of America, and the result of my effort is that the wool supply is at the danger point. Our sheep population is at the lowest point since the Civil War. Think that over. And then, if you picture an all-out sudden war with Russia, will you tell me how you are going to get those supplies of the 71 strategic and critical materials in here from Australia, New Zealand, and the other countries over those long dangerous sea lanes. Read the record of how many snorkel submarines there are available to stop those shipments. Then, where will you go from there? Get out and shake your bare fist at the enemy and see how far you get.

This is a serious business. I hate to surrender, I hate to place trade over our national defense. That is exactly what you are doing, and that is why I am against this bill as it is now written. I am for reciprocal trade, but unless this amendment and others to be offered here today are adopted there is not an ounce of reciprocity in this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am against extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act at all. The misapplication and abuse to which this principle has been subjected during the past few years by the State Department has rendered even the principle repugnant to me.

I am seriously concerned with the manner in which this law throws all precautions overboard and places the whole American economy at the mercy of the State Department.

As the elected Representatives of the people, we Members of Congress are bound by oath and solemn duty to watch over the welfare of our constituents.

Congress has a grave responsibility to the people of this country to make certain that any delegation of its powers over tariff matters is properly administered, and we cannot, without completely disregarding this responsibility, lightly issue such blanket delegation of power without a check on it. To do so is a surrender by Congress of its watchdog functions to an agency of the Government which is not primarily interested in domestic problems and is not prepared to cope with them.

However, there is one way that Congress can prevent abuse of tariff rates by officials who are too preoccupied with our international problems to be the best judges of problems on the home front. And that is to restore the so-called peril-point amendment to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which the Eighty-first Congress struck out 2 years ago.

Previous legislation concerning the peril-point amendment provides the following procedure with which I am in full accord:

The President shall notify the United States Tariff Commission the commodities for which negotiation for reciprocal reduction of tariff and other trade barriers was intended. Following such notification, the Tariff Commission shall conduct hearings and make an investigation to determine the point to which duties could be reduced without seriously injuring the domestic industry. The Commission shall inform the President of its findings no more than 120 days after the original notification.

The peril point is solely intended to inform the President. It does not restrict him in any way in the granting of concessions. The President is specifically permitted to disregard the peril point and to grant concessions below such a point if he felt that the concessions to be gained from foreign countries, and other circumstances, makes it advisable to do so.

If the President disregards the peril-point recommendations of the Tariff Commission, he must explain to Congress his reasons for doing so.

The peril-point amendment was removed from the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act by the Eighty-first Congress at the express request of the President. I think it is highly proper at this time when the President has asked Congress to extend the act another 3 years to examine his reasons for wishing the legislative check-rein removed.

In negotiating trade agreements, the President acts through the State Department. Thus, it may be assumed that the President's request either emanated from, or had the unqualified approval of the State Department. Let us look into State Department's official explanation of the reasons for the President's desire to eliminate the peril-point procedure.

The following explanation was made by Mr. Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, at hearings conducted by the Ways and Means Committee of the House 2 years ago.

Mr. Thorp declared that such peril points would be set without regard for any national or international considerations, and would disregard benefits to be obtained by other countries, long-term needs of the economy for expanding markets, the necessity of obtaining the best possible use of domestic resources, possible strategic considerations, or the possible repercussions of our action upon the policies of other countries toward us.

He further stated that the peril-point procedure returns to the old protective theory that only the prosperity of an individual industry is affected by a tariff or a quota, and practically makes such narrow protectionism the sole criterion for determining the concessions which may be made by the United States in trade agreements.

Let us analyze Mr. Thorp's statement so that the basic explanation may become more apparent.

Mr. Thorp says in effect that the peril points established by the Tariff Commission do not take into consideration all of the factors which must be considered in making trade concessions. He then concludes that the establishment of these peril points practically makes the prosperity of individual industries the sole criterion for determining the concessions which may be made by the United States in trade agreements.

I grant that in establishing peril points the Tariff Commission primarily is interested in the protection of domestic industries. But Mr. Thorp's conclusion does not necessarily follow. Should the President, and through him the State Department, be bound by the peril points, and were unable to grant concessions below such points when other considerations warranted such action, then Mr. Thorp's conclusion would be correct.

However, that is not the situation. The State Department is not bound by such peril points, and would specifically be permitted to disregard them when other considerations indicate a need for action.

To fully comprehend the dangers inherent in the presently unprotected act as amended of 1948, we must keep in mind the original Trade Agreements Act of 1934.

The Trade Agreements Act of 1934 was for the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States as a means of assisting in the present emergency in restoring the American standard of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment and the economic depression, in increasing the purchasing power of the American public, and in establishing and maintaining a better relationship among the various branches of American agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce.

It must be admitted that times have changed somewhat since 1934.

There is no national economic depression, and, on the surface, at least, there is no evidence that agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce are fighting with one another.

I will go along with Mr. Thorp in his premise that benefits to be obtained by other countries, long-term needs of the economy for expanding markets, are factors which must be taken into consideration in determining what concessions should be granted. However, I feel very strongly that protection of domestic industries is at least one other factor which should be considered.

By elimination of the peril-point procedure, the State Department has virtually said, "We do not want to know the needs of individual industries. We do not want to be told that if we grant a certain concession the effect will be to injure an individual domestic industry. We want to make our decisions without being influenced by any such considerations."

By removing the peril-point amendment, the Eighty-first Congress gave the State Department too much authority to grant trade concessions without any regard to the effect which such trade concessions will have on domestic industry.

I feel that it is the responsibility of this Congress to make certain that adequate consideration is given to all factors; one of the most important of those factors is the effect on domestic industry.

While I am completely sympathetic to the importance of encouraging the importation of foreign merchandise in order that living standards abroad may be improved, as well as to enhance the purchasing power of foreign countries, I do not feel that we should entirely disregard the effect which such importations will have on domestic industries.

Our first responsibility is to the people of this country, and my first responsibility is to the working men and women of my district, and that responsibility cannot be ignored.

In my district are located a number of plants engaged in the manufacture of pottery, chinaware, and glassware. They employ thousands of workers who depend upon this employment for a livelihood. Today, half of them are unemployed. Why?

The answer is that American industry, with all its financial strength, its managerial, technical, and labor skills, cannot compete with foreign goods which are manufactured at slave wages without some tariff protection.

Whenever we ask the State Department for a remedy to correct this condition they stick their heads in the sand of empty words and point vaguely to the escape clause as a palliative. This is a wholly unsatisfactory recourse.

A much sounder procedure would be to gain a better idea beforehand than to await damage that will be difficult to repair. The way to meet this situation is to have a competent agency make adequate investigation before action is taken.

Suppose the Army or Navy proceeded on the theory that it is better to wait until we are defeated in battle before obtaining as full intelligence reports as possible? Certainly, if information is a proper guide to action in all other fields of human endeavor, this also applies to cutting the tariff, unless we assume that the welfare of industry and its employees is of no importance.

Two years ago I proposed an amendment that would deny to Russia, Red China, and the satellite countries the benefits of reduced tariffs in agreements the United States makes with free nations. Many of the Republicans at that time refused to support it. Now I understand my orphan child is being adopted by the Republican Party and will be introduced as their own baby. I will support any amendment that will prevent economic aid being given to the countries behind the iron curtain, regardless who proposes it.

If reciprocal trade is to work effectively, it must be as a two-way street. There is no point in helping others unless they will respond by making some effort to help themselves. Great as our resources are, they are not limitless. If we go on giving and giving and giving we can exhaust ourselves and become absorbed by a world whose general level of economic activity is insufficient.

We cannot raise the world level of prosperity by pulling our own level down.

The only way we can prevent this is to keep our standards high and to make tariff concessions only to those nations which raise their living conditions and only to the degree in which they do so.

The Congress should maintain continuing interest in the manner in which supervision of tariff rates is used or abused. The most effective way of assuring this lies in lodging with the Tariff Commission the power to give authoritative guidance to the State Department on the basis of studies and investigations. With proper liaison between these two agencies, while maintaining the independence of the Commission, we could face with greater confidence the future course of the trade-agreement program.

We should require the Tariff Commission to submit hearings and reports to the Congress. And we should further require that the President report to us directly when he acts contrary to these tariff recommendations. This is our right and our duty.

We are entitled to know the facts. If an American industry is to be jeopardized in order to provide a market for foreign goods, or to provide a foreign market for the goods of other domestic industries, we are entitled to know the considerations which prompted the concessions which bring about such a result. We were elected for the purpose of representing the people who will be affected, and we are the ones who are going to have to explain the reasons why it was necessary to destroy the industries which have provided their livelihood.

It is for these reasons that I am 100 percent for restoring the peril-point amendment to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, in discussing this amendment there are two things which must be considered: First the source of the amendment; and, second, the purpose of the amendment.

As to the source of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, we all know the amendment is offered by one who is an admitted opponent of the reciprocal foreign-trade policy, a devout follower of the Dingley, Fordney - McCumber, Smoot - Hawley, Grundy tariff policy; that is the source of this amendment. I think in my colloquy with my friend from Pennsylvania the other day he admitted that he was opposed to the entire reciprocal trade policy. So much for the source of the amendment.

You have heard something about being wary of Greeks bearing gifts. We might be wary of the purpose of this amendment when we consider its source, namely, one who perhaps loses more hours of sleep studying plans, methods, and ways of crippling and weakening the foreign trade policy than any other man in this chamber today.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to my distinguished colleague, but I want it understood that I do not question my friend's sincerity.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I want to make sure of that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Now I do not yield for a speech, but if I have misrepresented the position of my good friend, a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means, with respect to his position regarding the reciprocal trade policy, then I yield; otherwise I do not. I do not yield for a speech, because I do not have enough time.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether I understand the terms under which the gentleman is willing to yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield only if I have misrepresented the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not unless the gentleman says I have misrepresented him; if I have, yes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman used my name; the gentleman referred to me; does he yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield for a speech. I do not want the gentleman to take up half of my time justifying his position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the gentleman from North Carolina does not yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In my opinion the purpose of this amendment, the sole purpose is not to strengthen and make more effective and workable the foreign trade policy as embodied in the trade agreements law now on the statute books, but to so cripple and weaken it as to destroy its effectiveness. That is my opinion of the purpose of it. Therefore, I think that Members who are in this House who do believe in the reciprocal trade policy worked out, wrought out, and thought out by that eminent statesman, Cordell Hull, had better beware of the amendment offered by an avowed opponent, and supported by those, who if they cannot kill this policy, by frontal attack will try to destroy it by flank movement, by crippling amendments.

My good friend, the distinguished gentleman from New York, the ranking minority member of our committee, has said something about transfer of payrolls abroad. None of us is in favor of that unless we extend payrolls at home to a greater extent than we transfer them abroad. I call my good friend's attention to the fact that our exports of agricultural products are large when compared to our production—these are 1949 figures—we exported 616,000,000 pounds of lard, 23 percent of our production; wheat, 502,000,000 bushels, 38.2 percent of our domestic production; soybean oil, 311,000,000 pounds, 17 percent of our domestic production; milk, 623,000,000 pounds, or 12.7 percent; leaf tobacco, 510,000,000 pounds, or 25.6 percent; raw cotton, 4,748,000 bales, or 32 percent of our domestic production.

Now, what about the interest of those engaged in agriculture—those who produce the domestic surplus of agricultural products? Suppose we lose those markets? You cannot buy unless you sell. This foreign-trade proposition is not a one-way street or a one-way business. We all know that we cannot sell unless we buy.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Of course, we exported those items to which the gentleman referred, but we sent dollars over there first. We gave them dollars first, with which they bought. That is not profitable to our country. They got the dollars and they got the goods.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The Secretary of Agriculture ought to know more about that than the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I am not sure Mr. Brannan does.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This foreign-trade policy favorably affects agriculture as well as industry. The American Farm Bureau Federation and a host of other farm, business, labor, and consumer organizations endorsed this policy as sound, as effective, and as beneficial to them, including the following: The National Farmers Unions, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the United States Council of the International Chamber of Commerce, the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, the American Chamber of Commerce of Cuba, the United States-Cuban Sugar Council, the American Chamber of Commerce of France, the Detroit Board of Commerce, the Tobacco Associates, Inc., the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, the National Cotton Council, the National Council of American Importers, the American Watch Assemblers Association, the National Foreign Trade Council, the American Federation of Labor, the CIO, the United Textile Workers of America, the International Association of Machinists, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the League of Women Voters, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Women's Division of Christian service of the Methodist Church, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Council of Catholic Women, the Catholic Association for International Peace, the Board of Social Missions of the Lutheran Church, the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman referred to Mr. Hull who brought up this idea. Who is the Secretary of State today?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Who is what?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has referred to Mr. Hull as being the great Secretary of State who designed this program.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes, I have; I am proud of it and the gentleman ought to be, too.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Who is Secretary of State today?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows. What is the use of taking up my time by asking that question?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Acheson is the Secretary of State.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We have not only the Secretary of State, but the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, and others engaged in administering this program.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the Secretary of State runs it.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman seems to be greatly disturbed about the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has no greater voice than the head of any other Department or the Trade Agreements Committee.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Well, I am concerned about him.

Mr. DOUGHTON. What has that got to do with this question? Not one thing.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes. The whole Nation is concerned about the Secretary of State. He is not a businessman, yet he has complete control over the industry in my district and in the gentleman's district.

Mr. DOUGHTON. No. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He knows that Department does not have complete control. No one department has complete control. Many departments have a part in this program, including the Departments of Defense, Commerce, Treasury, Agriculture, Labor, Interior, the Tariff Commission, and the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to what my good friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] had to say about the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, the law under which we had the greatest depression, the greatest unemployment, under which labor was pauperized, under which agriculture was paralyzed, under which industry was in bankruptcy, under which there were 15,000,000 laboring people walking to and fro, up and down the highways seeking work and finding none. He says the Smoot-Hawley law has been on the books a long time and we have not repealed it. That does not do justice to my good friend from Ohio because he knows very well that the Smoot-Hawley tariff rates have been substantially reduced under trade agreements now in effect.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman will admit that the Democrats never have seen fit to repeal one line of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. That has never been done. Why did you not do it? That is what I asked the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows surely that complete repeal of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act would have placed responsibility right back in the Congress for setting tariff rates on thousands of commodities, a virtually impossible task to perform wisely and effectively by legislation. Moreover, it would have been fatal to reduce our tariffs without mutual and reciprocal reductions in the tariff barriers which other countries had erected in retaliation against the high rates of the Smoot-Hawley tariff law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is either a wise or a practical measure for the Congress to attempt to legislate trade agreements in detail. It is far better, in my opinion, for a scientific, nonpolitical commission who have the time and the knowledge to devote themselves to such a task and to perform this function for us. However, when Congress abdicates such power, it should assure itself that the industries of this country are not lost in the midst of international political shufflings. Surely, the Congress should insist that any time the administration decides that it is willing to sacrifice an industry and does this even though the Tariff Commission brings to its attention the implicit peril it will create, the Congress of the United States should be informed of such a drastic and dangerous decision. We have been very generous, Mr. Chairman, in distributing our golden eggs throughout the world but when we destroy the goose—our system of free enterprise which has made our country what it is today—we invite our own collapse and, therefore, those who depend on us throughout the world.

And what is happening today?

In the fine city of Gloucester, Mass., which is within my congressional district and at the present time the largest port in the United States for the landing of edible fresh fish, the industry is moving to Canada. Why?

In 1939, we produced in this country about 98,000,000 pounds of fresh and frozen ground-fish fillets. Imports that year amounted to about 9,000,000 pounds or 9½ percent of the domestic production.

In 1948 imports had increased to over 53,000,000 pounds or 40 percent of the entire domestic production of 138,000,000 pounds. In 1950 it was estimated that imports would represent almost 50 percent of the United States production.

There is at present approximately an 11-cent-per-pound spread between local costs of fish and those imported. Do the American housewives get the benefit? They do not. They pay exactly the same for imported fish as they do for local fish. Certainly in this case, one of the most cogent arguments for free trade—lower cost to the consumer—falls to the ground.

It takes no deep thinking, then, to understand why our fishing industry is moving to Canada. The tariff established in 1939 was set at 1⅞ cents per pound for the first 15 percent of domestic catch and 2½ cents per pound thereafter on an unlimited basis. In view of the increase in prices and the procedure of filleting fish, which gives two and one-half times as much edible fish per pound, there is no barrier whatsoever against imports.

There is only one factor that prevents importers from driving us out of business at the moment, and that is the limited fishing facilities which are being rapidly expanded in these other countries.

The time will come when the State Department must realize these dangers and the problem in Gloucester will have to be corrected. We are giving false assurances to these countries that no administration can guarantee over a period of time. When the time comes that we are forced to take action, the injury that must be done to these countries will be much more damaging in international relations than is gained by concessions at this time.

The Merrimac Hat Corp., of Amesbury, Mass., which until recently has had to face the low-price competition of Communist-dominated Czechoslovakia, now finds that the relief it gained is only temporary because of imports which are now arriving from Japan. The landed cost of wool hat bodies in the United States from that country is $2.76 per dozen. The total manufacturing cost of this item at the Merrimac Hat Corp., not including selling, shipping, and administrative cost on this particular body, is $6.96. The actual amount of wool for this body costs $4.75. How can this American firm possibly compete under these circumstances?

The leather industry in and about my district, including Salem, Lynn, and Peabody, have found it almost impossible to compete against the subsidies of foreign countries. I shall ask unanimous consent when the Committee rises that a letter from Mr. Stephen Palmer, vice president, A. C. Lawrence Co., be included at this point.

A. C. LAWRENCE LEATHER CO.,
Peabody, Mass., February 2, 1951.

HON. WILLIAM H. BATES,
House of Representatives, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BATES: I have your telegram of February 1 in which you say that the reciprocal trade extension bill comes up in the House of Representatives next week and that you would like to hear from me as to what effect the bill has had or may have on the leather situation.

To start off with, I might say that in the light of what has happened during the past few years, the reaction on the part of any tanner probably is that of complete frustration. The leather industry is one which believes in international trade and we live by it. In recent years, on many occasions when the leather industry has been asked questions in connection with international trade, tariff agreements, etc., industry spokesmen have repeatedly said that it is not the tariff agreements which are the crucial problem in international trade; it is reciprocity. United States tariffs on leather have been cut again and again until they are now the lowest of any important leather-producing nation in the world. To our knowledge there has been no reciprocity from others.

So-called reciprocal trade agreements have only resulted in other countries' setting up against us discriminatory measures, embargoes, preclusive trading, bilateral and unilateral trade contracts, barter, and, of paramount importance, subsidies. These artificial barriers and outright discrimination against the United States have completely vitiated the purpose of reciprocal trade agreements.

We have a very recent case which is a glaring example of what seems to be happening when it comes to our Government's interpretation of reciprocal trade agreements. This type of situation is the reason for our saying that we think our opinion, or perhaps anyone's opinion, as to reciprocal trade agreements is rather useless. Last spring and summer chamois leather from the United Kingdom was dumped into the United States at prices below the cost of United States tanners' raw material. Obviously, this could not be done in any other way excepting through subsidy. The trade in this country knew that the English tanner was subsidized and it was common knowledge in the United Kingdom. This subsidy was only a part of the official plan of the English Government as demonstrated by official publications. When we, as United States tanners, asked for protection against such outrageous dumping, we were told by Government officials, after months of insistent questioning, that there was no subsidy within the precise language of the law.

From our viewpoint, so-called reciprocal trade agreements are nothing more than mockery and hardly worth the paper they are written on. In actual practice, under these agreements our leather tariffs have been cut to the bone. Other nations apparently have openly violated such agreements and we are no longer protected against foreign internal subsidies, Government monopolies, embargoes, cartels, and all sorts of discriminatory measures practiced against United States trade which our Government has tolerated abroad and which have not been practiced in the United States.

May we say, therefore, that if any reciprocal trade agreement is allowed to continue to function as it has in the past few years, then it is rather useless. Any reciprocity, from our standpoint, has been from the United States only, and in the long run the result most surely will be detrimental to American industry and American labor.

Sincerely,

A. C. LAWRENCE LEATHER CO.,
STEPHEN PALMER,
Vice President.

Down through the years our shoe industry has been seriously affected by foreign trade. Those in my area will never forget how 19 major shoe factories were closed by a flood of Czech imports. We must make certain this will never happen again.

In a letter addressed to me on February 5, 1951, Mr. Norman J. Randell, executive secretary of the Lynn Chamber of Commerce, informed me:

The Italian, Swiss, French, and Austrian countries present serious competition to the American shoe industry. They purchase styles and designs and leather in this country and the work is mainly done in people's homes, therefore, they are able to market fine shoes at a lower price than the American market. If trade barriers are let down, we will be unable to compete at all.

Our trade agreements must be mutually beneficial in order to be reciprocal.

The peril point should be unanimously adopted by this body.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot agree on a time for concluding debate on this amendment. How many Members want to be heard on the amendment? I observe 17 Members are standing.

There is no thought on the part of anyone on this side to close off debate. However, I think it is understood that we would like to dispose of the bill today, and there are other amendments to be offered.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close at 2 o'clock.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I suggest we let the debate run on for a little while.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago it was stated on the floor in the debate that the control of this program was in the hands of the Secretary of State. I disagree with that, and that is the reason I take the floor. The act requires that the Department of Defense, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Labor, and the Economic Cooperation Administration take part in the program; so the statement that the Secretary of State has control of the program, I think, is in error.

Mr. Chairman, the press of the country is overwhelmingly in favor of the continuation of the present program for a period of 3 years. In addition, some Members may be surprised to know the various organizations that support the present program. So that they may become aware of what responsible organizations support this program as is, I read into the RECORD the following list of organizations that have gone on record as supporting this program:

The American Farm Bureau Federation.
The National Farmers Union.
The Chamber of Commerce of the United States.
The United States Council of the International Chamber of Commerce.
The United States Junior Chamber of Commerce.
The American Chamber of Commerce of Cuba.
The United States-Cuban Sugar Council.
The American Chamber of Commerce of France.
The Detroit Board of Commerce.
The Tobacco Associates, Inc.
The Commerce and Industry Association of New York.
The National Cotton Council.
The National Council of American Importers.
The American Watch Assemblers' Association.
The National Foreign Trade Council.
The American Federation of Labor.
The Congress of Industrial Organizations.
The United Textile Workers of America.
The International Association of Machinists.
The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.
The League of Women Voters.
The General Federation of Women's Clubs.
The Women's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church.
The National Council of Jewish Women.
The National Council of Catholic Women.
The Catholic Association for International Peace.
The Board of Social Missions of the Lutheran Church.
The Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church.
The Friends Committee on National Legislation.

Mr. Chairman, these associations have seen this program in operation since 1934. These associations know the effect this program has on the general economic welfare of the country. The labor groups, both organized and unorganized, know what effect it would have on the high wages of the people of this country if we throw up a Chinese wall around our industry and are not able to export goods. It will shut down factories in every State and every community of the Nation if other countries refuse to buy from us. You can say what you want about a few individual industries being hurt, but you are going back to the old Smoot-Hawley system if you adopt this peril-point amendment. You will be going back on your friends throughout the world with whom we have established good will. You will be going back to the isolationist policy. You will be branded as isolationists. You do not think that the newspapers and the editors of the newspapers of this country and the subscribers of those newspapers are so wholeheartedly in favor of this program if it is hurting American industry in general, do you?

Should we pick out one industry and say that industry has suffered, and therefore we must destroy much of the export business of the country? That is what you will be doing if you adopt crippling amendments such as this one undoubtedly is.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee, if it adopts this peril-point amendment and the escape-clause amendment as proposed, will be taking a stand today which will definitely brand the country as going back on its friends. America today is established as a leader of the world, as a country that wants to promote trade among the nations of the world, as a country that wants to promote good will. If we cripple this program of reciprocal trade agreements, those who vote to do so will be branded as isolationists insofar as trade is concerned, insofar as our friends are concerned, and insofar as the good will of the balance of the world is concerned.

We should be careful what we may do because of a few instances wherein a minor domestic industry has complained of competition from imports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just concluded addressing the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is quite concerned about us turning our backs on our so-called friends overseas. Well, I am more concerned, Mr. Chairman, about not turning my back on the workingman of this country. I also would like to point out to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in my district I have over 3,000 men who are employed in the tannery industry. Last spring I received a petition signed by every member of the three labor organizations requesting me to intercede for them with the Reciprocity Committee and the Secretary of State in an effort to protect their industry and protect their jobs against further tariff reduction on leather and leather products. There is no doubt in their minds and there is no doubt in my mind that if the war in Korea had not developed, those men would be out of their jobs. They would be out of jobs where they have skills which require long training and experience. I have in my hand a pair of gloves which my secretary purchased this summer for 59 cents. These gloves were made in Czechoslovakia, a Communist-dominated country, a country where they utilize slave labor. These gloves, so I am told, cannot be manufactured in the United States, by an American company hiring American labor, for less than $2.50. How do we expect American industry and how do we expect American labor to maintain their high standards of living and high wage scales which we want them to have, when they have to compete against foreign cheap labor and slave labor.

I say to you that if we continue our present policy of reciprocal trade, which is not reciprocal, we will lose many vital industries and force many men into unemployment if we ever reach a period when we are not at war.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POTTER. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I just wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are people who say, "Well, what about the consumers? They should be able to buy in the cheapest market." Here is what happens: When they have driven our industry out of business and our labor out of work, then they put the prices up away beyond what they were before.

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. And what good does it do to have cheap commodities if our workingmen are out of jobs? Industries, such as the pottery industry, wood products, fishing, and the leather industry, will either be abandoned or wage cuts will have to be made if we are going to compete with foreign labor.

They talk about reciprocity. We do not have reciprocal trade with these other countries that are producing leather. As a matter of fact, our foreign trade had declined prior to the Korean War, while imported goods had flooded our markets.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POTTER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know that today, 17 years after the program started, there are more restrictions and more limitations on free trade than there were when Mr. Hull had his idea?

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a letter which I wrote to the chairman of the Committee for Reciprocity Information. This letter was written May 22, 1950.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three additional minutes.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. POTTER. I thank both the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Arkansas.

I would like to read this letter which was written on May 22, 1950:

Mr. EDWARD YARDLEY,
Executive Secretary, Committee for Reciprocity Information, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YARDLEY: It is my understanding that open hearings will commence before the Committee on Reciprocity Information Wednesday, May 24. It is my privilege to represent the Eleventh Congressional District of Michigan in which are located several tanneries. These tanneries employ many hundreds of men.

The tariff on leather has been reduced time and time again making it ever more difficult for our leather industries to compete with foreign competitors. This competition is grossly unfair. The foreign competitors utilize cheap labor, some of it being slave labor. We in the United States on the other hand believe that labor should receive the highest possible wage, in order to maintain a decent standard of living.

I have received several hundred letters from employees of the various tanneries in my district protesting a further tariff reduction on leather and leather products, which will be an item for negotiation at the coming tariff conference this September. It is becoming increasingly difficult for our tanning and leather products industries to operate successfully due to this foreign competition. A further reduction in rate would force many of our companies out of business with the resultant effect of loss of employment to hundreds of skilled workers in my district alone.

The theory of reciprocal trade is not working as was the intent of Congress. The countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements have violated the principle of reciprocal trade by imposing embargoes and other obstacles upon American manufactured goods in order to protect their own industries. In other words, reciprocal trade—as presently applied in world trade—is a one-way street. We lower our tariffs to a point where foreign competition forces industry after industry to close and at the same time our exports are decreasing. If further reductions are made in tariffs, it will mean increasing unemployment in the United States; it will mean a gradual lowering of our standard of living and it will force the working men and women of the United States to either accept lower wages or be forced out of employment.

You will have before your Committee on Reciprocity Information protesting the action by the United States, representatives of the leather industry—The Tanners' Council of America, The Luggage and Leather Goods Manufacturers of America; the International Fur and Leather Workers Union, and others. I request your committee to heed the protests that will be made by the organizations representing both the manufacturers and labor.

Very sincerely yours,
CHARLES E. POTTER,
Member of Congress.

This protest has been made on behalf of the laboring men in the leather industry. Leather products was one of the items which were to be considered for further tariff reduction. If the Korean War had not come along, these industries would have been out of business. It is a sorry situation that recipient trade agreements does the American people great harm unless we are at war. I hope the administration does not plan on war as a permanent policy.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time in order to clear up some questions that have been raised in this extended debate on the so-called peril-point provision. Let me preface my remarks by saying that I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania is trying to do. I shall support his peril-point amendment. But I would like for the members of the committee to realize that the peril-point proposition has its limitations. You must not get the idea that the peril-point provision will solve the basic problems that need to be solved to bring relief to your vast industries. I will give two or three examples to illustrate the point I am making.

All the peril-point proposition can do if followed to its fullest conclusion is to restore the basic rates in the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930. Let me give an example to the gentleman from Texas who made such an excellent speech. He has a lot of independent oil in his State. The Smoot-Hawley bill assessed an import duty of 21 cents a barrel on crude oil. That has been reduced under the reciprocal trade agreements policy to 10½ cents. Considerable testimony was taken by both the Senate and House committees last year on the danger to the independent oil industry and the coal industry, and it showed that it would take $1.05 import duty per barrel of crude oil to preclude and prevent injury to the coal industry and the independent oil industry of this country. I point that out, and I propose to support the amendment because it is a step in the right direction. However, we must find an avenue of escape for harassed industry through a properly worded and properly delegated escape clause, which I understand the gentleman from Nebraska will offer before debate has closed on the proposition to extend this act.

I want to call attention to another instance to show that this peril-point proposition will not solve all of the difficulty. We have a freeze order here on highly tempered steel that is used in the manufacture of clothespins. I have the largest clothespin factory in the world in my district. What is happening? That industry will not be able to get this highly tempered steel. It happened back in World War II. Sweden, our chief competitor in the clothespin industry, takes over the American market because she did produce prior to World War II and sell clothespins for 49 cents a gross in New York City, while it cost 81.3 cents a gross to manufacture them in my plant in West Virginia. The minute the war ended, Sweden brought her price down to 42 cents. But while the war was on she raised that price up just as high as the American market would stand.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Has that not always been true in the history of our country, away back to the dye plants which were driven out of existence in this country? When they once capture the American market and crush our local industry, then they immediately impose higher rates.

Mr. BAILEY. They take their pound of flesh.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the need for a real sensible approach that will allow the industry to be given consideration. I am not speaking for the five industries that are vitally affected in the State of West Virginia. I tried that in 1945 and in 1949 and I got run over with a steamroller.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] will offer an approach to this problem, which I will support, although I shall probably offer a substitute amendment. This would provide an escape for every industry in this country if it is harmed by foreign importations. It will be a simple procedure that will allow the President to initiate it, the Tariff Commission to initiate it or an industry that thinks it is harmed can initiate it by asking the Tariff Commission for a hearing. It is up to the industry to show they are injured. But we must have an escape clause because of the fact that we are going to have more than 200 critical articles frozen in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I shall also support the escape-clause amendment that will be offered a little later. I shall endeavor at this time to show how the reciprocal trade program has injured the wool industry.

Mr. Chairman, the recent repeated reductions in tariff duties have been a major factor contributing to the present low estate of the wool and sheep industry in this country. We find ourselves today with the fewest sheep since records have been kept, at a time when we need wool for the war effort. A brief review of the policies that produced this dangerous state of affairs will help in an understanding of reciprocal tariffs. Under the threat of war this country is producing less wool, an absolutely essential war material, than in any year of record. Why is this?

The total domestic production of shorn and pulled wool from 1933 to 1944 averaged 434,800,000 pounds. In 1945 it was 397,000,000 pounds; in 1948 it dropped to 280,000,000 pounds—and for 1950 it was estimated at 212,000,000. The United States had 53,000,000 sheep in 1933. This number has declined to 46,000,000 in 1945, 34,000,000 in 1948, and an estimated 27,000,000 at the present time.

During this period our domestic consumption of wool has been on the increase. But instead of expanding to supply this demand, the domestic wool industry has declined and imports of foreign wool have increased tremendously.

Stocks of wool on hand have diminished from about 1,000,000,000 pounds in 1946 to an estimated 200,000,000 pounds at the present time. There is no stockpile of wool with which to clothe our armed services, to say nothing of the civilian population, yet we have known throughout history that wool is essential to clothe troops warmly and that great armies—Napoleon and Hitler learned this lesson in Russia—must have warm woolen clothing.

The average annual import of wool in the prewar years, 1930–40, was 64,000,000 pounds. In 1941 the first tariff concessions were negotiated on wool, with Argentina, and immediately imports began to increase. In 1946 imports of South American wool were more than twice the prewar level, and from Argentina they were three times the prewar quantity. The total was near 1,000,000,000 pounds. This was the high point of wool imports, which have since leveled off at about 600,000,000 pounds per year. The total for 1950 is estimated at 500,000,000 pounds.

Imports of woolen fabrics—excludes piles: 1947, 4,612,000 yards worth $8,368,000; 1949, 8,217,000 yards worth $18,416,000; 1950—first 10 months—14,891,000 yards worth $25,822,000; when November and December figures are in, it will be twice the previous year.

The chief source of wool and wool textiles are Australia and England. In 1947 textile labor costs were three times higher in the United States than in England, and ranching costs, including herding, were 4 or 5 times higher than in Australia. This was after we had reduced the tariff on English textiles as much as 40 percent, and on raw wools, 25 percent.

As I have said, our consumption is running in the neighborhood of 1,000,000,000 pounds per year in normal times, far more than that in wartime. Our production has decreased from 435,000,000 pounds in 1933–44 to half that amount in 1950.

The tariff reductions and trade concessions negotiated from time to time have been perhaps the principal factor in the decline of the wool industry here in the United States. These concessions have been made in the face of repeated warnings from those who recognized the need for a sound sheep industry in the United States. We could not expect, perhaps, to supply all of our domestic requirements, but a healthy industry, capable of supplying at least one-third to one-half of our requirements, is the bare minimum for safety. The lack of foresight which prompted the destruction through tariff policy of the domestic sheep industry is going to cost the taxpayers of this country untold sums to provide the wool necessary for the uniforms our soldiers need. At the present time there are American agents in Australia and England making every effort to buy this vital material and they will have great difficulty in acquiring any sizable supply of wool. Is it not incongruous that at the same time other Americans are sitting at Torquey, England, in a trade concession conference with 38 other countries at which one of the items on the bargaining list, for further tariff reductions, is wool?

Mr. Chairman, the production of wool is an exceedingly important industry in the 11 Western States, covering an area from Texas on the south, the largest producer, to Montana in the north where it is one of our largest industries. It makes use of a natural resource—grass grown on some 800,000,000 acres—that would not otherwise be used. The United States should have the maximum number of sheep, gathering this resource and processing it into a commodity vital to our economy and to our national defense.

We should not overlook the coproduct, lamb and mutton, which is in short supply because of this same discouragement of the sheep industry. A proper supply of lamb and mutton would make a tremendous contribution to a better diet for our people.

Someone will remind me that today wool is quoted at the highest price in its history. This is true, and it is true because of the policy followed by our administration in dealing with wool under the reciprocal-trade program and the related policies of the OPA which fixed the price of wool at an unrealistically low figure during the wartime wool purchase program. The price of domestic wool is still lower than prices anywhere else in the world.

The January 1947, issue of Fortune magazine carried an obviously inspired article entitled "The Trouble With United States Wool Is That It Is Uneconomic." In a subtitle were these comments: "The industry subsists on excessive tariffs, wartime subsidies, and political shenanigans." Well, the tariffs were lowered, the Government bought all the wool during the war at a price so low that the wool industry in this country withered and nearly died. There were no wartime subsidies, tariff favors or political shenanigans in this, unless the obtuse attitude of the administration could be called political shenanigans. The result is, as I have shown, that sheep numbers in this country have decreased to the lowest on record and we have agents in Australia and England today trying, we hope not in vain, to buy wool supplies necessary to our war effort. As many of us predicted, when we protested tariff reductions, the decline of our sheep industry has left us at the mercy of foreign producers. We cannot do without wool and we must buy it on their terms. We must bid for it in competition with Russia and her satellites.

Mr. Chairman, today we have before us a proposal to extend the reciprocal-trade program. One of the factors that has contributed so greatly to our unfortunate wool situation, at a time when we must have wool for our soldiers, is this same program.

It is proposed that the legislation before us be amended in two instances so that industries vital to our national defense and our economy can be protected.

Amendments will be offered that would include in the legislation a peril-point clause and a workable escape clause. I am firmly convinced that the adoption of these two amendments is the minimum necessary if we are to have a domestic wool industry.

The National Wool Growers Association adopted the following resolution at its annual convention in December 1950:

The National Wool Growers Association desires to reaffirm its position, stated many times in past conventions, that the maintenance of a sheep industry in the United States of sufficient size to prevent wastage of forage growth as well as to assure our Nation a continuous supply of meat and wool depends primarily on the assurance of a domestic price which will equalize the cost of the production here with that in those countries which are permitted to sell in our market.

We believe that, from the standpoint of all parties concerned, the cheapest as well as the most effective method of accomplishing this end is the use of an adequate tariff.

We again emphatically reaffirm our position in believing that an adequate tariff on wool, lambs, and sheep is the bulwark of strength for our American sheep industry.

We view with grave alarm the report that the Australian Minister of Commerce, Mr. John McEwen, has told the House of Representatives that Australia is seeking a substantial reduction in American duties on the imports of wool; also that Mr. McEwen said the request had been submitted to the tariff conference now in session at Torquay, England.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with this resolution.

The answer to our wool problem is to rebuild the sheep industry. Lowering the tariff does not result in lower costs to the user in this country. Witness the present highest price on record after repeated lowering of the tariff. Let us protect this great industry so necessary to our war effort, an industry that gives employment to over 100,000 people in the West, makes use of a great natural resource that would otherwise be wasted, and that adds to the health and enjoyment of all.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, on January 16 of this year—in company with several of my colleagues—I journeyed down to our State capital city of South Carolina to witness the inaugural ceremonies of one of our former colleagues as he was inducted into the office of Governor of our State. In Governor Byrnes' inaugural address, he warned that we cannot successfully prosecute or defend this threatened global war strictly as Democrats or Republicans. Said he:

In times like these, we must rise above party politics and stand and fight as Americans.

Mr. Chairman, from what I understand, the pending amendment is not in accord with the views of my party. We have heard the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Hon. BOB DOUGHTON, chairman, Ways and Means Committee, speak against the amendment. When I find myself in disagreement with such Members as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], I reexamine my views because of my high regard for him. Reference has been made here to one of our greatest Secretaries of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, who served during World War II. I have implicit faith in his judgment but even he could be in error. Soon after coming to Congress—which was long before Pearl Harbor—in company with some of my then colleagues, I went down for a conference with Secretary Hull calling his attention to the ever increasing export of scrap iron to Japan. The Secretary contended that we must keep up a trade balance with Japan, but we advised him to be cautious for fear trouble would ensue. The Secretary would not interfere with the export of scrap iron to Japan,, and ultimately, much of the self-same metal came back home in the bodies of our gallant sons. Thus it is, Mr. Chairman, that none of us are invincible.

Mr. Chairman, the subject of tariffs is an exceedingly technical one. I do not pretend that I am capable of understanding all or even many of its implications. I do have more than a half-century's practical experience, and I now draw upon my own experience and observations.

It is my privilege to represent a district in which I am told there are more spindles and looms than any other congressional district in the world. I sprang from the loins of those who spin and weave the products of our fields into the beautiful and useful fabrics so sorely needed to clothe the nakedness of the world. I was advised during the last war that textiles were among the most essential items in the war program. In June of last year, I appeared before the Committee for Reciprocity Information, Tariff Commission, in opposition to any further cut in tariffs on imported cotton textiles. Under date of June 7, 1950, I pointed out from the well of this House the grave threat to our high standard of living among textile workers by the increasing importation of Japanese textiles. I was amazed to find the facts to be as they were then. Since that time, I have given further study to the problem and have found that India, the second largest cotton producing country in the world, likewise presents a grave threat to our textile way of living. The record reveals that although approximately half of India's textiles are produced by hand, she is able to export her textiles to our country in opposition to the products from our modern looms at far less cost to the public. This, of course, is understandable when we know that while textile employement in India is considered of the highest type, the average annual wage of a textile worker in India is $67. This annual wage is little more than the weekly wage of the textile workers in my district. Manifestly, our textile industry here at home cannot cope with or survive against such slave labor wages. As you know, a conference is going on now at Torquay, England, studying suggestions for further lowering tariffs. I sincerely hope that due caution will be taken before any other reductions are authorized.

As in the past, I intend to vote for this reciprocal trade agreement. I believe that the adoption of this amendment will be a proper safeguard. I call upon you as Americans, without regard as to which side of the aisle you sit on, to rally around the support of this proper amendment.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. I want to go on record here and now as being very much concerned about this whole program. In the early thirties Jan Bata, foreign shoe manufacturer, sold shoes in the United States and flooded the market in competition with the Endicott-Johnson products and many other American shoe concerns. He established a Bata Shoe Co. here, but for some reason was unable to maintain labor standards, so he folded up and went back to Europe. When Hitler took over Central Europe Bata kept on producing, only he produced shoes for the Hitler war machine. Since then he or his successors have been relegated to a position behind the iron curtain, but it is my understanding that the Bata Shoe Co. is still making shoes. There is a strong possibility that they may be in direct competition, if the State Department gets its way, with Endicott-Johnson shoes. I am talking today not from the management standpoint of this great corporation because the management did not consult me on this matter.

I am talking for the 20,000 patriotic men and women who make shoes and the finest kind of shoes for the American people in the Endicott-Johnson workers' democracy in the Triple Cities area. They are now fulfilling or attempting to fulfill orders for millions of pairs of shoes for the Armed Forces of the United States. About 6 months ago I had a flood of postcards from Endicott-Johnson workers, 20,000 of them, demanding that I contact the State Department to protest and protest loudly the possibility that they were proposing to scrap the American selling price for rubber footwear and rubber-soled footwear. This would have thrown thousands of these workers out of their jobs. When I consulted the State Department the answer I got was, "It is all in this reciprocal trade program. We cannot help it. If we throw out a few hundred workers in a certain industry here, or a few hundred or a few thousand in a certain industry there, we cannot help it. It's just too bad, but it is in the program."

Those are the words in answer to the request that I made for consideration of these shoe workers. It is serious because those shoe workers in my district have a time-honored profession. They have worked at their trade in some cases for 20 or 30 years. It is a disgrace and an insult for the State Department to say to them, "It is just too bad, but you will have to find work elsewhere. Our program must go on whether or not thousands of Endicott-Johnson workers are going to be dropped from the payrolls." That means those men will have to find jobs elsewhere. Either that, or it is a problem of the WPA, or wanting that, it will be a problem for local relief.

Can any of us afford to get into a position of that kind where we, representing patriotic American workers, can say to them back home, "I voted for a program which is going to jeopardize your jobs. I voted to continue the direct competition of Japanese-made shoes which will flood the country in the event the American selling price is scrapped or in the event that the peril-point amendment is not adopted?" Is it going to be your position to say, "I voted for a program which will allow shoes to flood this country which are manufactured behind the iron curtain, which supplied the footwear for Hitler's armies." Is it going to be your policy to say, "I voted for a program which will favor workers behind the iron curtain and in Japan, and will let down the bars so that 20,000

Endicott-Johnson workers are going to be jeopardized in their jobs"? Are you going to say that the shoe workers and others in many of the key industries, and in other hundreds of industries throughout the United States are going to be penalized because we approve this policy? I am against the whole program unless this amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, since I came to Congress in 1939, I have supported the reciprocal trade agreements with an understanding that they were enacted in June 1934 under emergency conditions and were designed to assist in the restoration of the American standard of living, overcome domestic unemployment, expand foreign markets, and promote world trade. In later years they have been continued on the basis that they were a vehicle to be employed in achieving universal world peace.

In 1948 when extension of the Trade Agreements Act was before Congress, I supported it with one reservation, and that was my approval of the peril-point amendment to safeguard American industry.

At that time we were told by advocates of the reciprocal trade agreements that their impact on the wage earners of America was negligible. We were informed that the peril-point provision of the act was unnecessary and that the Committee for Reciprocity Information would take testimony from the industries concerned and that complaints would be investigated and adjustments would be made.

During the succeeding years of 1949 and 1950, the effects of imports on the jobs of the American wage earner became a matter of grave concern. The situation developed to the point that key industries in my congressional district, as well as throughout the United States, began to lodge vigorous complaints with Congress against the importation of cheaply manufactured and in some cases slave-labor products from behind the iron curtain. These American business concerns were joined in their protests by representatives of the trade-union movement as well as by individual workmen and their families.

Like many of you I complained to the Department of State and was referred to the Committee for Reciprocity Information. The Committee replied with the stock argument that conferences were being held at home and abroad and when concluded, recommendations would be made to correct any abuses. At this moment I want to be brutally frank by stating that, in my opinion, the Committee for Reciprocity Information is nothing but a window-dressing agency through which complaints are pigeonholed.

You will recall that a year ago we were in a comparative state of normalcy in the field of American business and that the threat of war was not so clearly pronounced. Therefore, we should consider the effects of imports on employment of the American workingman from the standpoint of conditions in 1950, and not during periods of emergency when American production is at its height.

Since 1948 it has been almost a daily occurrence for Members of Congress in both parties to arise and deliver a statement showing the ill effect of cheaply made foreign products on industries in various congressional districts. Surely, you recall the Waltham Watch Co.'s experience, and the many speeches protesting the importation of Russian crab meat, foreign oil, hides, pottery, glassware, cotton and woolen textiles, and numerous other commodities.

At that time, as a Member of Congress from Pennsylvania, I joined with my colleagues from nearby West Virginia and Maryland in protesting the importation of bunker oil from the Middle East that was rapidly displacing the use of coal in our respective States.

The complaints against foreign imports became so numerous and bitter that a subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor conducted public hearings for several weeks last May and June on the subject.

Spokesmen for management and labor representing some 28 industries testified that the effects of foreign imports were devastating and immediate relief was urged. Members of Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, appeared before these congressional committees and supported the views of their constituents.

In my opinion, the testimony given at these hearings and which has been printed as a public document, a copy of which I hold in my hand, without doubt represents the most bitter and factual indictment of the administration of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Let us see what Mr. O. R. Strackbein, chairman, the National Labor-Management Council on Foreign Trade Policy, and executive secretary, America's Wage Earners Protective Conference, said in testifying on May 2, 1950, before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor. His testimony appears on page 12 and includes the following statement:

> The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, as has been administered and as it is proposed at this time to continue to administer it, is a threat to employment in this country.

Mr. Strackbein represents a good cross section of labor-management groups affected by foreign imports and is recognized as an authority on the subject.

To further support this indictment of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, it is well to consider the testimony given by the following spokesmen for industry and labor.

Mr. J. M. Wells, representing the United States Potters Association said:

> Total sales of the members of our association for 1949 dropped to $64,000,000 from $77,500,000 in 1948, or a loss of 17 percent. During that same period imports of competitive dinnerware increased more than 24 percent.

Mr. Patrick McHugh, secretary, Atlantic Fishermen's Union, Boston, Mass., testified that—

> When fish from foreign countries are landed at lower prices than in our own, the competition is felt quickly. Today the wholesale prices are about 10 percent lower than 1948. Imports reached a peak in 1948, with the exception of the first quarter of 1950, and amounted to nearly 54,000,000 pounds, which is nearly 30 percent of our total consumption.

Mr. C. W. Gustkey, president, Imperial Glass Corp., said that—

> Our industry in 1948 produced and sold approximately $35,000,000 worth of handmade glassware. In 1949 our industry produced and sold about $27,700,000 worth of merchandise, which reflects a decline of nearly $8,000,000.

He continues by saying:

> Imported glassware sold in the United States in 1949 had a market value at American factory price level of approximately $6,000,000. In 1948 the similar total volume was $1,000,000 smaller than in 1949.

Mr. Gustkey stated:

> The imported glassware sold in the United States in 1949 represents about 20 percent of our domestic production.

Mr. Marx Lewis, general secretary, United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers International Union, testified that—

> In a declining industry such as ours, imports run close to 20 percent, and this year it is expected it will go above that—we do not know the exact amount—but it becomes a serious problem, one which affects the employees and the earnings of the workers.

Mr. Matthew W. Davis, vice president of the International Council of the Aluminum Workers Union, said in his testimony that—

> Until 1947, imports on aluminum were no problem in this country but effective January 1, 1948, the tariff was substantially reduced. As a result, Canadian aluminum has invaded the United States market in such large quantities as to become a very serious threat to employment in the domestic aluminum industry.

Mr. W. L. Carver, managing director, the Wall Paper Institute, testified that—

> Imports amount to 15 percent of the domestic manufacturers' delivery of papers of comparable price class. Not only is the volume of these imports on a sharply rising trend, but there is evidence that with currency devaluation, the field of the raiding of our market and employment opportunities will broaden rapidly.

Mr. H. B. Fell, executive vice president, Independent Petroleum Association of America, said:

> The value of crude-oil production in the United States was $5,245,000,000. In 1949 it was only $4,690,000,000, or a decrease of over $500,000,000. This was due primarily to the excessive imports of foreign oil, and resulted in considerable unemployment in the oil and gas industry in the United States.

Mr. Joseph T. Berta, president, Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Corp., said in his testimony that—

> Imports of foreign oil—now flowing freely into the United States at a rate approaching a million barrels daily—threaten to disrupt seriously our employment situation.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. Thomas Kennedy, vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, told the subcommittee that—

But we also realize the writers of the Trade Agreements Act did not intend the tariff reducing agreements to injure the American economy as they are now doing. The present flow of import oil has gravely disturbed our American economy. If it continues, and increases as the prospect seems to indicate, we shall witness a complete disrupting and revamping of our American fuel pattern.

Mr. Chairman, representing as I do, a congressional district where bituminous coal is the backbone of our economy, I wrote to President Truman asking him to exercise the authority he has under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act by increasing the tariff on foreign oil to save the jobs of American workingmen.

The President replied on June 12, 1950, as follows:

Naturally, I am very much interested in the welfare of all segments of the economy of the United States but I have yet to be convinced that anybody is being hurt by the present situation in oil.

I disagreed with the statement of the President and still disagree with it because this time last year foreign imports were destroying the jobs of American workingmen. This is evidenced by the testimony I have quoted and I could supplement it with numerous statements from representatives of the fur, hides, textile, gas meter, steel, leather, and paper industry.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that I am not going to change any votes on this legislation by my remarks. I want to assure you that the people I represent are suffering from the evil effects of foreign imports and I cannot in good conscience continue to support the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act because of the manner in which it has been administered.

In a few words, the trade agreements are revealed to be an international log-rolling program conducted at the expense of American industry and American wage earners, and for that reason I cannot conscientiously vote for their extension.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GROSS moves to strike out the enacting clause of H. R. 1612.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in proper order and, therefore, cannot be entertained.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a test of the reciprocal trade agreements for many years and I think after the debates we have had session after session we have finally begun to see through this thing and the great majority of the American people are beginning to understand it. It has proven a failure. Certainly the least we can do in this session of Congress in my judgment is to establish the peril-point policy and then write a real escape clause that will protect, I might say, almost the God-given right of industry, management, and the laboring people of this country to protect their jobs and thereby help to protect the economy of our country.

We are facing serious times ahead; we need to increase the power and strengthen the economy of this country. I think that the economy of this country and the best interests of this Nation demand that we take such corrective action with reference to reciprocal trade agreements here as representatives of the people, that will protect the just interests of the laboring men and of all of the people of the country.

They talk about 60,000,000 people employed, the trade agreements has never had a chance to operate because we have either been in war or working under the rumors of war most of the time. But they came near having an opportunity, may I say, to operate in 1948 and 1949. Then we had 3,500,000 people out of work and they were being laid off daily. Why? Because of the influx of foreign-made goods into the American market selling for prices lower than they could be produced here at the high standard of wages paid the American wage earner. Being a member of the Committee on Public Works I remember how representatives of the Administration came before our committee offering bills of authorization to be laid on the shelf, authorization to start public works here, public works there.

They knew that the policy of these reciprocal trade agreements and low tariffs were so destroying the economy of our country that they were going to have to be faced and they began to make ready to add to the budget expense of this country and to provide made work for the American people. That was the result of only a few months of our experience with these trade treaties.

Talk about labor supporting reciprocal trade agreements, the CIO met here in the city of Washington in 1949 with the oil industry and said "We want to help you in any way we can to raise the import duties and to prevent foreign oil from flooding this country with the duties having been cut over 50 percent." They testified before a subcommittee down in the southwestern part of the country, the head men of the CIO of that great region down there where the oil industry operates so intensively, urging that the import duties be raised because hundreds and thousands of their workmen drawing high salaries were being thrown out of jobs. Where did they go? They went onto the pitiful relief rolls. Yes at the expense for doles from the Federal Treasury.

I happen to represent a county in my district that mines 60 percent of all the fluorspar mined in this country. Hundreds and hundreds of those men were thrown out of work because of the importation of the low-wage fluorspar products of Mexico and some other countries that flooded the market. The representatives of the fluorspar industry of the Nation, when they were getting ready to cut the tariff again at Torquay, England, protested the lowering of the tariff on the importation of lead, lead derivatives, and fluorspar.

I went before representatives of the State Department in opposition to further tariff reductions. I was courteously received but, of course, without effect.

The State Department has never given relief in such instances, and the time has come for the Congress to assert itself and write peril points into this legislation, and to write into it an emphatic escape clause that will protect industries in this country from being ruthlessly destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this vital subject of foreign trade, I call the Members' attention to part 2 of the latest census report No. FT 410.

This might be called a routine, cold statistical report because it is published every month and is confined entirely to a listing of the kinds and amounts of products exported from the United States, and to which countries.

But with a deadly war going on in Korea, this report is no longer routine. Instead, it documents one of the most sordid chapters in the commercial history of the world, such a monstrous thing as to make the nefarious gun runners of old look like deacons by comparison, and enough to turn inside out the stomach of every moral and patriotic citizen.

This routine report discloses that the internationalists for a profit, including so-called Americans, are conducting a land office business, with British Hong Kong apparently emerging as the number one international robbers' roost.

Here is the situation. While Chinese Communists are killing our men in Korea, small manufacturers throughout the United States either must crawl on bended knees to the black markets for all too many metals or practically do without, resulting in lay-offs and, in some cases, bankruptcy.

In the face of all this, the Truman administration, to its everlasting shame, is allowing precious metals and other strategic materials to be exported all over the earth, including Communist China and to nearby Hong Kong for shipment anywhere, most of it to China.

Does this profitable open door, in juxtaposition for dealing with the various and sundry governments and bandits of Asia, explain why the Chinese Reds did not long ago walk in and occupy Hong Kong; why Britain was one of the first to accord formal recognition to the Chinese Communist regime; and why both Britain and France, on paper, supported the United Nations resolution branding Communist China as an aggressor, but then halted abruptly and exuded a tortured cry against following up the resolution with a blockade of the Chinese mainland?

From the standpoint of the London Government, and the leeches on Fleet Street, the few British troops fighting in Korea are probably considered entirely expendable, and, indeed, good investments in Britain's historic cause of international profiteering and exploitation, whether or not they are killed by ammunition made from material lucratively transferred from Hong Kong to Red China.

But the British are not alone.

Before proceeding further, permit me to point out that American internationalists, with the full knowledge of the Truman administration, and in a vicious circle, are not only providing Red China with strategic materials. By importing into the United States a wide range of Chinese products, these international parasites are providing American dollars which are used in turn to build up the Chinese war machine. Imports from Red China, in October alone, ran into the hundreds of thousands of dollars and included such items as drug flowers, tableware, bow hair for violins, fish products, electric lamps, film material, azimuth mirrors, jewelry, medical preparations, antiques, dolls, and dice. I wonder if the dice were loaded, in true Communist fashion?

But perhaps most interesting of all is the importation from Communist China of almost a million pounds of dried eggs, during October, in addition to shell eggs and frozen eggs, for which American internationalists paid China about a half million dollars. This, mind you, on top of an American domestic surplus of some 100,000,000 pounds of dried eggs in the caves of Kansas. And it has been going on for months and months, as I have revealed to the Members on more than one occasion, with the Truman administration doing nothing about it until, finally, last fall, the President announced that the tariff on dried eggs from China would be increased, effective December 11, 1950. In other words, he gave the Reds advance notice, providing them with plenty of time to do their worst—to flood the American market before the tariff increase went into effect. And they did exactly that.

Now back to the exports of our critical materials.

In November alone, tons and tons of American iron, steel, aluminum, copper, brass, bronze, lead, nickel, tin, zinc, and so forth, went to the four corners of the globe; heaven only knows how much of it was or will be transshipped to China for use against our troops in one form or another.

Large quantities, perhaps suspiciously large, were exported to Canada and certain of the small countries of South America, all of whom, incidentally, have been conspicuous by their absence in the front lines in Korea. I am not qualified to say how much of this material is used in the various countries to which it is shipped. Perhaps we will never know who is shipping what to Russia, China, and the rest of the Communist satellites.

But the report does list shipments of various goods direct to China from the United States, including, for example, black ungalvanized carbon steel to the tune of more than 7,000,000 pounds, making China, next to Canada, the largest single recipient of this item during November. Hong Kong was in third place with almost 5,000,000 pounds.

The United States exported to no less than 29 countries, during November, more than 11,000,000 pounds of galvanized steel sheets, the same kind for which small manufacturers in Iowa and elsewhere are crying, to keep their businesses alive and their employees on the job.

But these are just a few examples of the scarce metals pouring out of the United States. For further details, I refer you to the report.

Mr. Chairman, the Members will also be interested to know that both China and Hong Kong are high up on the list of more than 75 countries receiving millions of dollars' worth of American drugs, including huge quantities of penicillin and streptomycin, for the benefit of Communist Chinese soldiers.

I would venture to say that if the inhabitants of Hong Kong existed solely on drugs, they would undoubtedly founder before they could possibly consume even a fraction of the amount shipped in.

I urge my colleagues to obtain a copy of this report. It reveals in mathematical fashion internationalism for a profit at its worst and growing ever fatter on the blood of American troops in Korea—condoned if not aided and abetted by the Truman administration.

How much lower can the human race descend?

Do we need any further evidence that the Truman administration is unworthy of a continuation of vast and sweeping powers to manipulate our foreign trade?

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we should approach this question in the light as set forth by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] and think back a year or more in our consideration here today. Last year I introduced a bill to restore the peril point and the escape clause, and again this year introduced a like measure.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment now before the House will receive favorable action, because there was never a time to my way of thinking when industry and the American workingman should be more considered as against the cheap imported labor from without. I do not feel that this measure in any way disturbs the diplomatic relations with other countries throughout the world, and while the peril point feature as it is introduced is not entirely to my liking, I would like to have a peril point established by the Tariff Commission and after they had established such point below which the tariff could not be reduced without discrimination against the American working man, and before the tariff could be reduced below that point, that the President would be compelled to report back to the Congress and secure from the Congress permission to make such reduction. The peril point as proposed today would only require a confession of the President to the Congress that he has taken action and reduced a tariff which is going to be detrimental to the best interests of the workingman of this country. It only puts the Congress and the American people on notice that the President has taken action and reduced the tariff on a particular article, and that that action is going to be the ruination of that industry in this country.

If we think back a year and a half ago, when 16 labor organizations met here in Washington and protested the reduction of tariffs on many of the products being brought into this country, that meeting started the subcommittee action by the Committee on Education and Labor which caused them to hold hearings last year for a period of several months. I appeared before that committee on two separate occasions, and I know that labor, industry, and agriculture were vitally interested in the subject matter they were considering at that time.

I know that the hop industry in the State of California was being greatly hampered from the importation of Czechoslovakian hops, to a point that it caused a slump in the price of hops and the solvency of this substantial industry. I received a letter just a few days ago regarding the increased importation of almonds into this country now. If we would bring into the United States each year 5,000,000 pounds of almonds, that together with the production in this country would supply all the almonds the American market consumes. So far this year over 7,200,000 pounds of almonds have been imported and it is estimated that before the season is over 18 to 20 million pounds of almonds will be brought into the United States. This affects not only the almond industry in my district, it affects the walnut industry, it affects the pecan industry, and it affects many other like industries throughout the United States.

Are we going to sit idly by and permit American industries one after another to fall by the wayside because of an unrealistic approach to the whole program affecting the trade agreements between nations. I want it thoroughly understood that I believe in the principle of the reciprocal trade agreements program, but it must be reciprocal. It cannot be the one-way street, the downhill, crooked trail they are taking us on today through the operation of the trade agreements.

I am going to support the escape clause because I believe we have gotten ourselves into a great number of agreements with foreign nations that are going to ruin many industries which if properly administered we could have avoided.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I belong to that group of many who formerly supported the reciprocal trade agreements program, because I believed it would do much for the American people. In the face of what has happened, in the face of the removal of the peril-point provision 2 years ago, I no longer share that faith; and I think something will happen to the American people unless today we adopt this amendment and ensure once more the safety of our productive agencies.

I had not meant to speak today, but while I was sitting on the floor of the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

House there came to me a letter from my district. It is a great district, of which I am very proud, because it contains, in addition to large numbers, representatives of every kind of activity that makes this country great—industry, agriculture, universities, small-business men, and small-shop keepers. I read you this letter not because I am foolish enough to think that you can generalize from one instance, but because I think that the letter expresses a condition existing in one industry which exists in many. I think also that the evidence is important because it comes not from the heads of that industry but, as it says, from 1,500 workers organized into an employees committee in the plant of Arnold, Schwinn & Co. This is a letter that I would have you listen to with care:

We, the Schwinn Employees' Committee, represent 1,500 workers in the plant of Arnold, Schwinn & Co., at 1718 North Kildare Avenue in Chicago.

We understand that a renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act will be considered in the Congress in the near future. We know that bicycles are produced in Europe in large quantities and that foreign manufacturers are in a good position to compete in the American bicycle market because of their large volume and modern production facilities. This condition is peculiar to the bicycle industry, as the foreign producers of most other consumer durable goods are not in large-volume production.

Recently a large national merchandiser purchased 40,000 bicycles in Germany at a figure which is considerably under the bare cost of production in America. This is entirely possible because Department of Commerce figures indicate that workers in German bicycle factories are paid less than one-fifth of the scale in similar American plants. These bicycles are not the European type—they were designed to fit the American market and are exact prototypes of American bicycles in design, finish, thread fittings; in fact, exact duplicates in every detail.

Other national merchandisers who handle bicycles, noting this action on the part of their competitor, are now active in attempting to purchase quantities of bicycles in Europe so that they will be in a position to compete.

We understand that there is very little hope of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act being discontinued, but there is a possibility that an amendment may be considered which will afford an industry in our difficult position some possibility of relief through establishment of quotas.

We are convinced that our industry is in a precarious position and that there is a possibility of practically complete destruction of the industry, as in the case of watchmakers, ceramics, felt hats, and others.

We are informing you of the above outlined vulnerable position of our industry in the hope that you will support any amendment to the act which might be of help to industries which face ruinous foreign competition.

Yours very truly,

Arnold, Schwinn & Co.: Frank Peters, Frame Shop; Emmett Schellhorn, Welding; Walter Macierowski, Wheel; Edward Flintz, Shipping; Willard Beeskow, Tube Mill; Adam Jasinski, Inspection; Marshall Larsen, Tool Room; John Posinski, Assembly; Irving Tiedt, Special Parts; Arno Stimple, Maintenance; Walter Staff, Receiving; August Janov, Plating; Edward Wriedt, Lock; Henry Carlson, Paint.

Mr. Chairman, today we face a crisis. We are being told that on every side. One thing we know: Our strength is based on our essential freedom; but underlying any defense we can make in behalf of our country is our strong productive capacity. In the name of the employers of the great Thirteenth District of Illinois; in the name of the thousands of employees who share their employer's conviction that something must be done to protect American industry; in the name of the thousands of humble Americans like myself who believe that American principles are worth fighting for—and who are willing to make any sacrifice—but who expect us in the Congress of the United States to do our duty in protecting their means of living, I shall support this amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield for a question?

Mrs. CHURCH. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman may proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In my district, the Eighth Congressional District of Michigan, we have a large manufacturer who for years has been turning out bicycles and bicycle parts. I am informed, as the gentlewoman from Illinois has been informed, that one of our big mail order houses with these great branches throughout the United States has purchased these bicycles in lots of something like 40,000 from the Ruhr Valley in Germany and that they are being sold on a retail basis for about $19.75 as against our American price of about $36.50 to $40 per vehicle; and that there is no way on earth that our people can meet that price. I assume that is the type of competition to which your friends have directed your attention. It is somewhat of a double-barreled proposition in that I assume material will not be allocated to our industries to continue the manufacture of bicycles because of the material being diverted. And further with these parts coming in in competition in the form of a finished product and as you say produced in almost the exact color scheme with the chrome decoration and all that, there is just no way that we can hold the American market for these workers.

Mrs. CHURCH. I agree thoroughly that that is the current danger.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON], known as the peril-point amendment. I also support an amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY], or the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], which provides for what is known as the escape clause.

I wonder if the members of this committee have received much correspondence from their constituents with respect to granting too much power and authority to administrative agencies, including the State Department. It has been said on the floor of this House that the approval of these agreements is made by several agencies of the Government, but I call your attention to the fact that the policies with regard to the making of reciprocal trade agreements are laid down and promulgated by the State Department. In other words, it is the State Department that after all has the determination and makes decisions with regard to the making of the hundreds of reciprocal trade agreements that are made on behalf of this country. If we could realize that the Secretary of State is the one who finally determines these matters, it is possible that we might give this proposed amendment a little more serious consideration.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] called attention to certain groups that are favorable to the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreements, but he did not say that these groups and organizations are opposed to this proposed amendment. Do you think, for example, the United States Chamber of Commerce whom he mentioned is opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON]? Do you think the farm organizations oppose a proposal that protects them in some degree when their prices go below what is known as the peril point? Do you think that any of the organizations named by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER], would object to such proposal if they knew about it and understood it?

All in the world the amendment does is to require the President of the United States to let the Congress know when the price of goods and materials in trade with foreign nations goes below what is known as the peril point or danger point. In such event, the President simply notifies the Congress that such action has been taken and gives reasons therefor. Then it is for the Congress to take such action as it sees fit under the circumstances. It is a very mild sort of thing. I do not see how any member of this committee or anyone else interested in this legislation can object to it. The amendment should be approved by an overwhelming majority. You will observe that those who have risen against the amendment have given no substantial reasons why it should not be approved. They have directed their arguments against allowing any changes in the bill as proposed by the Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that the State Department has such an enviable or outstanding record that its policies are above reexamination in any field. I am inclined to think that it might be well to at least reexamine its actions with respect to its policies in reciprocal trade.

There are many on the floor of this House who have criticized and condemned the State Department in recent months with regard to its policies in other fields. I hardly see, therefore, why you would be unwilling to permit Congress to be notified when agreements are made with other countries with respect to exports and imports that may result in injury to the industries of America.

I think I should also call attention to the fact that the agreements presently in effect are considerably different from what they were when Secretary Hull entered into agreements 16 years ago. I am not unmindful either of some of those agreements.

I recall quite vividly in May of 1941 when I addressed a letter to the Secretary of State demanding that the tremendous increased amounts in shipments of scrap steel to Japan and Germany be withheld or greatly reduced. I also directed attention to the danger of sending huge quantities of high octane gas to Japan. The reply I received was in substance that because of agreements our country had made with Japan, we were not in position to make any changes under reciprocal trade.

The proposal before you today is a mild but important one. Again, let me repeat, I hardly see how those of you who have been critical with regard to the power and authority given the Secretary of State can oppose this proposal. In fact, I just do not see how anyone can oppose it. It is in the interests of American industry, American agriculture, American business, and American labor. In fact, it is in the interests of the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] has expired.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

When a matter like this comes up, I want to be sure that I am clear myself about it. I appear here for the purpose of finding out some information that may set me right. Where does the authority come from that the President has to negotiate these agreements in the first place? It comes from Congress. But when the President has made a mistake and he has executed contracts below the danger point what do we do about it? Nothing.

The only thing that is important about this amendment is that the President must come in here and tell us that he made a mistake, but there is no provision by which we can correct it after he has made that statement.

Are you afraid to exercise the authority of Congress that the Constitution gives you? If you have the power to give him the authority to make these contracts, by the same token you have the power to take that authority away from him if he makes a mistake.

As to your escape clause, I should like to find out how you are going to escape. It tells you it is an escape clause, it holds out a hope that you can get out, but I do not think it is an escape. You ought to do something about this; you ought to do something about this in the law now by providing that whenever the President makes a contract that is going to destroy industry in America that contract is null and void.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does not the gentleman think we better put something in the bill right here to have Congress retain control over the agency?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; right here. But, of course, you are afraid. You conferred this authority, but you are afraid to take it back.

While these amendments are weak and do not provide a positive course to pursue in regard to peril-point report by the President, the escape clause amendment is also merely a statement and does not show anyone how to escape.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I believe its adoption will add some protection to what in my opinion is bad legislation. I shall vote against the extension of the act itself.

I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that some of us who occupy seats on this side of the aisle, which have been empty for some years, do so because the people of this Nation have registered a protest against legislation of this kind.

If I may use a rather threadbare but appropriate phrase, we have a mandate to recapture and protect some of the functions of the Congress that have been delegated to other authorities in recent years. I believe this to be one of them.

The Constitution provides that Congress shall regulate foreign trade and shall levy duties and imposts. I believe it is time to reestablish the constitutional prerogative of this great legislative body.

Early in my service in this House I should like to be on record as being opposed to undermining the economy of this Nation in an attempt to foster ideologies that are not based on the protection of the jobs of American workers and the investments of the life savings of millions of our people.

I will perhaps be branded a reactionary. Well, I do react against exporting the jobs of American workers into cheap labor areas and destroying our standard of living.

I will no doubt be branded a conservative. If that means because I believe in the conservation of America's resources in order that we may have a stable economy, then I am a conservative.

The so-called liberals will want no part of me. If being a liberal means being liberal with the industrial strength of this Nation and giving it away in such a way that even the fair trade of competition is destroyed, then I do not want to be a liberal. But if being a liberal means believing in the liberty of the American workingman so that he may produce, earn, and save, if it is liberty and freedom for all our people under the Constitution, then I am a liberal.

Mr. Chairman, I want the record clear early in this session on my position—I shall in any way I can, however humble that may be, vote to restore to the Congress its rights, duties, and responsibilities.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it might be helpful, as we consider this amendment and consider the bill, to take a brief look at some things that are a matter of record.

Let us look at the record. Of the thousands of concessions that have been made under the trade-agreements program, only 20 applications for relief under the escape clause have been filed with the Tariff Commission. The Tariff Commission has recommended that one concession be withdrawn, which has been done. There are five applications pending. The rest have been dismissed because injury could not be proved.

I should like to indicate how really small these imports have been in comparison with the value of production of these same products in the United States.

In 1949, the most recent year for which statistics are available and the period during which it is claimed that many industries were being hurt, imports of walnuts represented less than 4 percent of the value of domestic production, imports of woolen textiles less than 1½ percent of the value of domestic production, imports of rubber footwear less than seven-tenths of 1 percent of domestic production, imports of coal-tar dyes less than one-half of 1 percent of domestic production, imports of cotton cloth only two-tenths of 1 percent of domestic production, and imports of cheese only 2.7 percent of domestic production.

Let us take another industry, the pottery industry. Imports of table and kitchen ware were lower in 1949 and are estimated to be lower in 1950 than they were in either 1937 or 1939. Imports of artware have increased since the end of the war but domestic production in 1949 was over three times what it was before the war.

Imports of potatoes, about which we have read so much in the newspapers, were only 2.4 percent of domestic production. Imports of women's and children's leather gloves less than a sixth of 1939 imports and about one-twelfth of imports in 1937. Imports of fresh tomatoes were less in relation to production than in 1946, 1947, 1948, or 1937.

Then there are a group of industries who have complained about imports whose exports actually exceed imports coming into the United States. Exports of bicycles exceeded imports in 1949 by a million dollars. Exports of leather shoes were more than double imports. Exports of saws were 15 times imports. Exports of rayon fabrics over 10 percent of production, imports less than five-tenths of 1 percent. Exports of softened plywood running at the rate of over eight times the imports.

Imports of fish fillets have increased but so has domestic production, which is very close to the highest peak ever reached. With the single exception of Waltham, the profits of the domestic jeweled-watch companies have been higher in the last couple of years than ever before in their history.

And now there are two industries exporting over $100,000,000 each—metalworking machinery and textile machinery. Total imports of these products into the United States were only $6,000,000—$6,000,000 against $236,000,000 exports—but there have been complaints about these imports as well.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on citing facts like these for hours, but perhaps by now it is as clear as it ever can be, that all this talk of a dangerous flood of imports is only significant because of the dangerous exaggerations which have been expressed in connection with it.

Total imports into the United States are smaller in relation to national income than they were before the war. They have risen slowly since 1947 and it is to our national interest for them to rise gradually over a period of years to the point where large appropriations of the taxpayers' money will no longer be necessary to balance our international accounts. We will then all be better off and richer to boot. Nobody has been injured yet in this very gradual process and it is my contention that nobody will be injured if we keep clear and alert about the facts and are not warped by fears which are hardly compatible with the pioneer spirit that has made this country great.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. May I ask the gentleman if the figures he has given are not figures that were obtained from the Tariff Commission itself?

Mr. PRIEST. Those figures were obtained from the Tariff Commission, and I believe those figures are in every sense reliable and accurate.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman spoke about the fact that the imports were only 1 percent of our products. I call his attention to the fact that there are some very big floods in some of the cities of this country when probably the amount of rainfall is not over one-half of 1 percent of the general rainfall of the country, but it causes a great deal of trouble to those communities. The same thing is true of the shipment of butter into New York, or of eggs from China. It breaks the market of the whole country on those particular commodities.

Mr. PRIEST. I believe these figures are rather convincing and that they will stand the test of careful examination.

Mr. REED of New York. We have poured about $38,000,000,000 into foreign countries. Why should they not have exports? Our taxpayers have paid for it. That is one of the reasons why you are here with a $16,000,000,000 tax bill.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is an old maxim of equity that one should not do indirectly what one cannot do directly. This obviously is an indirect attack upon the theory of the reciprocal trade-treaties program. It is not only indirect but it is, in my opinion, insidious, for the reason that this amendment, indulging as it obviously does in the clichelike term that is used only to substitute for thinking, seeks to arouse the fears of the membership of this Committee.

How does it propose to carry out its purpose? On the one hand it creates the Tariff Commission as a most dependable, objective, studious, nay, sacrosanct body, that is the only agency of Government that knows anything about tariffs or the point at which American industry is affected, and on the other hand, specifically, permanently, and irrevocably removes the Tariff Commission from the consideration of any given treaty.

The language of the amendment is quite clear. That is what it does. No member of the Commission will be able to participate in any of the hearings leading up to a trade treaty. My position simply is that that is only one phase of this great program upon which the American people have voted and passed upon in four separate national elections. It is well for our friends on the other side of the aisle to point to one or two or more accidents among them and define their presence as a mandate from the people of the country. You and I know that the factors which lead up to the conclusion and execution of a trade treaty are far more important and broader than the very patriotic and capable shoe workers at Endicott, N. Y., or even the equally patriotic and undoubtedly efficient pottery workers of West Virginia. This, Mr. Chairman, is 1951. It is not 1890 or 1900 or 1920. It is not even 1937. This program has taken its rightful part in our obviously sincere and conscientious efforts to establish a world of peace and order. I say to you members of the Committee the courageous thing for us to do today would be to vote that program up or down, but not try to mislead the public into thinking that we are for it, yes, but we are killing it while we are for it. It is my firm opinion the adoption of this obviously attractive amendment would not be perilous to the program, it would not be perilous to the country; it would be fatal to both, and it would be most disruptive of the attempts on the part of these great agencies of government.

Mr. Chairman, I am not one who would dismiss lightly the very sincere and serious efforts that are made by men chosen to head the great departments of our Government in their efforts to bring about a peaceful economy throughout the world, including the United States of America. When the RECORD is written, when you who today pose as friends of American labor and we who for years by our votes and by our deeds have proven ourselves truly to be their friends, the people will not be misled by your arguments today.

We should reject this amendment as a fatal blow which would kill the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman believe that the so-called peril-point amendment places in jeopardy the success of the ECA program? We have seen the economy, the productive potential of the nations of Europe, built up with our aid to the point where they are once again on their feet and off our backs. Now with this peril-point amendment we will be telling the nations of Europe, "You have built up your economy. We do not want you to deal with the Russian countries or with their satellites, but we still do not want you to deal with the United States if it imperils our industries in any respect. We ask you to remove your trade and tariff barriers between yourselves; we ask you to integrate yourselves economically." Yet does not the gentleman feel that the peril-point amendment proposes that we pursue a policy directly contrary to what we are asking the European nations to follow?

Mr. KEOGH. I am fortunate that the gentleman put his question in the form of a statement, for he has stated it far better than I could have. The gentleman is absolutely correct in that statement. This program is certainly far more important than any one phase, however important that phase is. The gentleman, coming from Chicago as he does, and I, coming from New York, know very well that the worst way to go into any negotiation or any trade is to go in with your hands tied and your feet tied and your powers limited.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has said, in effect, that after taxing the American people to build up these great industries in Europe we now must cut our tariff and provide a market for those people at the expense of the taxpayer-workingman here.

Mr. KEOGH. Of course, I am not bound by any effect the gentleman may put on what were my attempts to use a kind of simple language that the people of this country will understand, if the gentleman does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if I may have 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Will I be allowed the 3 minutes? Otherwise I should be forced to object.

The CHAIRMAN. It depends on how many Members care to speak. The time will be allotted between all Members who desire to speak.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I modify the request and I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON] is recognized.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful for an opportunity to stand up here and say a few words for New England, and especially Massachusetts, where we have probably been the greatest producers of materials of any State in the Union.

I was particularly interested when the gentleman from North Carolina talked about exports. We are interested in imports, not exports. If I had my way on this entire proposition, in addition to sending all of the exports out, I would like to send the State Department as one of the exports, too. I think it might help us a little bit.

Now, politics has been brought in here. I do not think there is any politics in the United States when it affects every single State in the Union, as this does. It may be because we are a State that produces things and have had to suffer from these tariff regulations as we have, but many businesses have gone out of business in Massachusetts because they could not compete with the starvation wages that the foreign countries pay. The people who ought to be interested in this proposition are the Members on my right who believe in America and want to make America strong and not European. Somebody has found fault because some of us are isolationists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

PERIL-POINT AMENDMENT

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, judging by the contents of my mail, many thoughtful and patriotic Americans are deeply concerned over the way in which Congress has surrendered and continues to surrender its powers and authorities to the executive departments of the Government.

We, who are elected to make the laws, should not surrender our power either lightly or quickly to the nonelective officials of the Government bureaucracy.

The present reciprocal trade bill gives great authorities to the nonelective officials in the State Department. The Congress and the country has little, if any, confidence in our State Department because of the way in which it has dismally bungled the foreign policy of this country.

I, for one, do not want to give any more power than it is absolutely necessary over the domestic affairs of our people to this State Department which has so utterly failed in the field of foreign affairs.

As an indication of what the people think of this State Department, to which this bill, unless amended, will give great powers without any curbs or restrictions, I cite you the results of a recent newspaper public-opinion poll on our foreign policy taken by newspapers in my district.

The Aberdeen Daily World, a newspaper of 15,000 circulation, published in Aberdeen, Wash., a city of 25,000, recently asked its people if they approved or disapproved of the administration's foreign policy. Out of 999 ballots received in the first 3 days of that poll, only 65 said that they approved the present foreign policy of the State Department and 934 said they disapproved that policy.

On the question, "Do you think our foreign policy should be reexamined," only 45 said they did not think it should be reexamined, and 944 said they believed our foreign policy should be reexamined.

The Daily Washingtonian, of Hoquiam, Wash., conducted a similar poll among its readers, and the answers revealed that more than 92 percent of those replying to the poll to be against the present foreign policy and less than 5 percent for it.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. NORBLAD] tells me that a similar poll, conducted by a daily newspaper at Grants Pass, Oreg., produced similar results.

My own mail, in which I receive 99 letters against the State Department's foreign policy, to every letter I receive endorsing that policy, confirms me in the belief that these newspaper polls offer a correct evaluation of public opinion.

The people are not for the State Department. They do not and I do not want to see that Department have any more powers than it now has. I would rather see its powers curbed and lessened rather than increased and expanded.

I shall vote for the peril-point amendment to this bill, because that amendment will, in some small way, curb and restrict the activities of the State Department over the domestic life of the Nation.

THE FISHING INDUSTRY

In 1949 the State Department permitted 499,000,000 pounds of foreign fish to flow into the United States. As a result of these foreign imports of fish our American fishermen suffered a decrease in markets and had their employment curtailed and their incomes decreased.

Fishermen engaged in catching fish for livers were practically put out of business by Japanese fish-liver imports. Our American fishermen and cannery workers could not compete with the low wages paid Japanese fishermen and cannery workers.

Huge quantities of bottom fish and tuna also were imported to the great detriment of our fishermen.

The crab industry was hurt by canned crab imports from Russia and Japan.

I tried for 11 months to get the State Department to take some action to stop the imports of canned crab from Russia. The State Department would do nothing to stop these Russian canned crab imports. It consistently took the position that our American fishermen were not producing enough crab for domestic consumption and refused to take any action to bar Russian canned crab imports, despite the fact that the American dollars which were paid for the Russian canned crab were used by the Russians to buy and pay for war supplies from Western European nations. Russia bought more than $200,000,000 of such war supplies as rubber, tin, iron, steel, copper, lead, zinc, automobile trucks, ball bearings, and barbwire from Britain, France, and Belgium in the 1 year of 1949. This unholy trade financed in part by the money we pay Russia for crab, furs, and other luxury items still continues.

FILBERT NUTS

We have had a prosperous filbert nut industry in the States of Oregon and Washington. The State Department has permitted large quantities of competing nuts to flow into the United States from China and other low-wage countries. Our filbert nut raisers have been greatly disturbed by these low-wage nut imports.

Many of our Washington-Oregon nut growers, at times, have even considered cutting down their filbert orchards because they knew they could not compete with China and other low-wage countries. Their very livelihood has been in constant jeopardy by this senseless policy of stimulating imports from low-wage countries without thoroughly considering the great risks to our own economy involved in these imports.

If we get a peril clause in this bill, we will be assured that before any tariff is reduced our nut raisers will have an adequate investigation made by the competent and nonpartisan Tariff Commission.

The nut growers want that kind of an investigation to be made. They are entitled to have it made.

PLYWOOD

State Department officials, without ever assuring an adequate investigation by such a nonpartisan group as the Tariff Commission, have threatened to reduce the existing tariff on plywood. If this is done, increased quantities of plywood will flow into the United States from Canada and Mexico, to jeopardize the employment and income of the 18,500 workers who are employed in the 56 plywood mills of Oregon, Washington, and California.

These plywood workers want the nonpartisan, scientific Tariff Commission to pass judgment on whether or not existing tariffs on plywood shall be reduced. They are entitled to this assurance and this protection.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the peril-point amendment which has been offered to this bill. Its adoption will lift a great fear from the hearts of many of our fishermen, nut growers, and plywood workers as well as from the workers in many other industries of this country.

Last year I attended a meeting here in Washington of the officials of 16 AFL unions and every one of these AFL officials favored adoption of this peril clause as a means of protecting the interest of the union workers they represent.

I am against giving more powers to the State Department. I will therefore vote for the peril-clause amendment.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am going back into past history. I remember a certain gentleman in the State Department, a distinguished Assistant Secretary of State, who told me when I was complaining that Japanese products were closing the corduroy and velveteen mills in the city of Lowell where I live, that we must not hurt the feelings of the dear Japanese. That State Department representative, Mr. Chairman, was caught in Corregidor after the Japanese attacked us at Pearl Harbor, and over the radio came the plea that we go and help him. I tell you that because it is important that we think. We not only ruined our industries, but we hurt the boys, the youth of the country.

You will remember the Czechoslovak competition with our boots and shoes and the closing of our boot and shoe industry, the coming to the United States of Jan Bata, who ran a slave-labor camp at Belcamp, Md. That was exposed, and I had the help of the Department of Justice in exposing it.

You should stop, look, listen, and investigate, Mr. Chairman, before these agreements are made. You do not want to ruin not only the industries of our country but weaken our country itself. Remember, it is not always the volume of imports that matters, but the value. We all know that. Low price is the market price and we cannot compete with low-priced foreign goods. Remember the plight of the Waltham Watch Co.

Why, Mr. Chairman, were not representatives of the House and the Senate asked, as I requested, to sit in at the meetings in Torquay, England, when these reciprocal trade agreements were being discussed? Every nation affected by those trade agreements had their representatives there, their members of Parliament listening to those discussions. It gives you a lot of food for thought, Mr. Chairman. We must not weaken irreparably the industries of our country. We should accept this amendment or a comparable one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONOHUE] is recognized.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to state I am not, and have not been, opposed to the worthwhile over-all objectives of our reciprocal-trade-agreements program. It undoubtedly embodies one of the most constructive efforts ever made to promote world trade on a scientific basis.

Realizing this fact I am, however, very deeply concerned that we retain its proved benefits to the maximum degree while, at the same time we carry out our conscientious obligation of including provisions to insure the least possible degree of injury to any American industry and to any product produced by the American taxpayer. This is, in my opinion, a moral duty we have to protect our domestic industries and our own people here at home.

That certain our own industries and people have suffered because of unintended and unseen reactions from the operation of the present reciprocal trade agreements policy, I know from my personal experience. On this score I have, during the last 4 years, made repeated appearances before the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee for Reciprocity Information, to acquaint them with the injustices being visited upon the American woolen, shoe, and watch manufacturing industries and their employees in my own congressional district, to whom no relief has been afforded from unfair foreign competition. In these particular industries, and many others, employment opportunities have been taken from our own people through no fault of theirs. In these fields we have also unwittingly, I am sure, hindered our war preparations by preventing an adequate production of woolen clothing for our fighting forces and by discouraging skilled craftsmen in our domestic watch manufacturing industry, whose products are so vitally necessary to atomic war instruments.

Mr. Chairman, there have been too many instances, heretofore, under the agreements entered into, where industries in this country have had to meet the competition of products manufactured by underpaid labor in foreign countries, some of whom might well be questioned as to their assistance to the Communist powers. This has resulted in hardship to the affected industries and workingmen of America. We cannot maintain our standard of living and successfully compete with foreign products made under the low-scale wages prevalent in foreign countries. In our charitable attempts to help these foreign countries we cannot afford to be unmindful of the possible adverse effect upon our own wage earners. To do otherwise is to improve conditions abroad at the unjust expense of the American people at a time when they are facing tremendous tax burdens. I do not blame the officials of foreign governments for favoring their own nationals but, on the other hand, it is only right and reasonable the agents of this Government be equally concerned about the welfare of the American people. Right and justice should be exercised in this country's administration of the law at least equal to that which is observed by foreign competitive governments.

In summary those are the reasons why I favor the inclusion of the peril-point provision in this bill.

In brief, all that the peril-point procedure will do is that—

First. The President will be required to submit the list of articles to be negotiated to the Tariff Commission.

Second. The Tariff Commission must make a factual study of each item and make a report within 120 days to the President. The report will contain the Tariff Commission's findings as to the limit the President might lower or raise duties without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or similar articles.

Third. The Tariff Commission is required to hold hearings.

Fourth. The Tariff Commission is to continue to furnish factual information to the negotiating committees but members of the Tariff Commission may not sit as members of the Committee for Reciprocity Information or the Trade Agreements Committee.

Fifth. If tariff cuts and other concessions are made below the peril-point report of the Tariff Commission, the President must identify the articles and state the reasons to the Congress for the action taken with respect to such items.

Sixth. The Tariff Commission is to furnish the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee a copy of its report on only those items which have been cut below the peril point.

The inclusion of this amendment is, in essence, merely implementing and clarifying the present intent of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. It can do no harm and may well result in much good to our labor and industries.

The provisions of this peril-point proposal do not take away any of the existing authority of the President and they will serve to provide the Congress with an alarm system to act, when necessary, to protect the fundamental interests of the American people and American industry. That, in my conviction, is why Congress is in existence. The adoption of the peril-point amendment, with the escape clause, is a reasonable step in the right direction toward the preservation of a healthy economic life in these United States. It will be also, in this emergency time, concrete evidence to the American people that we are, as we should be, primarily concerned with their welfare.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

RIGIDITIES IN THE PERIL-POINT SYSTEM

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, the peril-point amendment would introduce a number of rigidities into the method of formulating recommendations to the President about tariff concessions.

The first rigidity is that, in practical effect, the extent of the recommendation would be controlled by one agency of the Government.

The second rigidity is that this agency is required to fix accurately and with precision the exact point below which a tariff rate may not be reduced, or the exact point to which a tariff rate would have to be increased in order to prevent the causing or threatening of injury to a domestic industry. It is not possible to fix such a point with precision.

The third rigidity is that the Tariff Commission's decision on peril points must be made without the benefit of discussion or consultation with other agencies, some of which, like Agriculture and Defense, are particularly qualified to have judgments on the probable effects of a tariff concession on particular products within their field of interest.

The fourth rigidity is that this peril-point determination must be made by the Tariff Commission in advance of the actual negotiation and without the benefit of any facts that may be developed in the course of the negotiation. One of the important things that happens in the course of a tariff negotiation is discussion of the situation in the two countries with respect to the products being considered. These facts cannot be considered by the Tariff Commission in fixing peril points.

The fifth rigidity is that under this system the peril points will inevitably be fixed higher than is necessary for most products. In a situation in which the Tariff Commission is required to do something which is inherently impossible, to wit, to fix a precise peril point, the point will inevitably be fixed at the very top of any scale of doubt.

The sixth rigidity lies in the fact that if the President should go beyond a peril-point recommendation and, consequently, under the amendment that was in effect 2 years ago, the President would be compelled to publish all peril points involved in that particular negotiation, those peril points will limit action in the future, either (a) because even if circumstances change, and he makes a concession below that peril point in some future negotiation, the fact that the higher point was once fixed will always be cited against him, or (b) because if he does not go so far down as the peril point would permit, the fact that the peril point was lower than what he did do will always be cited against him by the other country in future tariff negotiations.

The seventh rigidity also arises out of the requirement that if one peril point is disregarded, the entire list of peril points involved in the negotiation must be published. This rigidity is that if the President should decide that the advice of the Tariff Commission on a particular peril point was wrong and that he could safely go further than the point fixed, he would be restrained from doing so by the knowledge that he would have to give away his whole hand to the other countries through the publication of the total peril-point list.

The eighth rigidity arises out of the fact that the members and staff of the Tariff Commission are not permitted to participate in any decisions or in the making of any judgments by the Trade Agreements Committee, but are limited to giving information. The line between information and judgment in the field of tariff making is a very thin one and an express statutory prohibition against either the members of the Tariff Commission or the members of its staff venturing at all into the field of judgment, recommendation or decision could only have a highly limiting effect upon their usefulness to the Trade Agreements Committee, even in the field of supplying actual information.

Finally, the amendment is unnecessary. Certainly the record of the past 17 years has been impressive as to the care with which this program has been administered. The record shows that the collective judgments made by the members of the Trade Agreements Committee have been wise and that the exercise of the authority conferred by the act has been judicious. Against such a background, the introduction of an amendment with so many disadvantages as the peril-point amendment could only be a serious backward step.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS].

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, I have been amazed during the debate to hear repeated statements made by Members—and I do not question their sincerity at all—expressing fear of what will happen to labor, the people who will be left out in the cold with no jobs, and what will happen to business if their crippling amendents are not adopted. Yet it cannot be disputed that in the days of the high tariff of the twenties and thirties millions were unemployed and business was prostrated. Under the reciprocal trade policies—not due solely to them but under them—from the late thirties until now our production has increased, employment has increased and we have reached a level of production and of prosperity for our business unexcelled in all the history of our Nation. Such statements therefore have no basis in fact; they are denied by the record.

The United States Chamber of Commerce and the Junior Chamber of Commerce are on record in support of this bill, the farm organizations are for it, most of the major labor organizations of the Nation are on record for it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. No, I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. No, because the gentleman does not want me to dispute his statement.

Mr. COMBS. The gentleman will have a chance to speak. The record is here in the printed hearings and speaks for itself. I have only a short time and therefore cannot yield. I want to refer to what one labor union says in support of the program, and I refer to the testimony of the United Textile Workers of America. I do this because a question has been raised about the attitude of labor unions. The resolution is in part as follows:

During the 1920's protective tariffs, which were at their biggest point in the history of this Nation, failed to provide regular employment or high wages for American textile workers. Similarly, these high barriers did not make jobs or maintain wages for our textile workers back in the depression days of the 1930's. It has been American efficiency and know-how which have enabled American producers to compete in the world market against goods from foreign countries, when people in the world market can get the dollars to pay for American goods. On the other hand, high tariffs have raised the living costs of American consumers. This tends to reduce the ability of American workers to buy American goods, including American textiles.

Tariff reductions under the reciprocal-trade-agreements program are made with care and moderation and only after exhaustive study by trade experts, and after opportunity for interested persons to state their views. In the 16 years during which this program has been carried on it has not brought about any flood of imports of any commodities. In 1949, notwithstanding the various tariff reductions in different types of textiles, under trade agreements since 1934, total United States imports of textiles were ridiculously insignificant by comparison with the vast size of our domestic production. In fact, since the development of the program, the American textile industry has grown very prosperous, jobs have been more steady, and wages for textile workers have reached their highest levels in our history.

Mr. Chairman, that is an expression from a group that is supposed to have been injured by the reciprocal trade program.

Under date of January 17, 1951, Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, transmitted to the chairman of our committee a resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor convention held in Houston, Tex., September 18–23, 1950. That resolution, in strong terms, sets forth the arguments in support of the program in language similar to that I have already quoted from the resolution of the textile workers and proceeds:

Resolved, That the Sixty-ninth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor gives its support to our Government's reciprocal trade-agreements program and urges that it be pushed with vigor, unimpeded by partisan political obstacles and the sordid pressure of special interests.

This is on pages 616 and 617 of the printed proceedings. I would read from the testimony of the representatives of other major unions, except it would unduly prolong the discussion at this point. They are all in the printed proceedings and to the same general effect as those I have quoted with the exception of a few unions mostly in local areas where, beyond question, there has been some falling off in production of local industries such as glassware, pottery, and some others due to foreign imports. However, I feel confident this situation can and will be remedied under the law without any amendment. As a matter of fact, only 20 claims or protests have been filed with the Tariff Commission alleging injury from imports under the Reciprocal Trade Act escape clause, which was first inserted in 1943. It is a remarkable record. Truly our country has prospered under the reciprocal trade program which got us away from the depression conditions brought about by the high tariffs of the late 1920's which dried up our foreign trade.

But it is not alone of dollars and increased production and the increased prosperity of our factories, farms, and workers that I want to speak. The reciprocal-trade program is a vital part of our foreign policy which is aimed to increase peaceful commerce and trade and understanding among the nations of the world and to lay the basis of a permanent peace.

All of us know that world communism is not in sympathy with our aims in that direction.

It has been suggested that the trade-agreements program is being used to coddle and help Communist countries. Let me call the attention of the House to what the Soviets are saying right now about the United States trade policy.

In the December 1950 issue of Vneshnaya Torgovlya—Foreign Trade—there appears an article in which United States trade policy and practice are blasted in the most violent terms as anti-Soviet and undermining Soviet trade. The United States theory of freer and multilateral trade is called a "mad concept of United States hegemony for the enslavement, plunder and monstrous exploitation of other countries." Our polices of trying to liberate trade are dismissed as "a demagogic slogan for the penetration and inundation of foreign markets by stale American products."

This is what the Soviets themselves are saying about the trade program, of which the act the House is now considering is a central part. Surely this shows more clearly than any other argument how baseless is the charge that the trade-agreements program is being used to help the Soviets.

In the May 16, 1947, issue of Trud, the official publication of the Soviet trade unions, there is a long article blasting the Geneva trade talks as an attempt by America to force upon other capitalistic countries the trading principles of the nineteenth century. This article analyzes United States trade policy, with particular reference to the most-favored-nation principle. On this point it says in part:

In the light of this trend of American policy, the purpose of the London conference of the autumn of 1946, the present conference in Geneva and the United Nations world trade conference it is intended to hold this year is perfectly clear. It is an attempt on the part of the United States to force all countries of the world to accept the most-favored-nation principle for American goods. Why is America so persistently pursuing this aim? * * * The aim of America's economic policy is, by forcing the most-favored-nation principle upon other countries, to insure greater opportunities for the sale of her goods in the world market and thus to solve, or at least mitigate, the problem of disposing of her products.

On December 28, 1947, the same publication painted a picture of the Habana Conference as being an effort to open world markets and sources of raw materials to the further penetration of American monopolies. The article is entitled "Blackmail at Habana." It labels the Marshall plan and the proposed International Trade Organization as concealment for the imperialist plans of the United States, and ends up by calling the Habana Conference a typical American racket.

In an article in Foreign Trade, the official monthly magazine of the Ministry of Foreign Trade in Moscow, the writer said in part:

One of the means of establishing world domination is the foreign-trade program of American imperialism. * * * The basis of the American foreign-trade program is the demand to remove exchange and quantitative restrictions in foreign trade, to remove the preferential system of trade, and to introduce the principle of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment and equal opportunities. * * * The establishment of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment, the reduction of tariffs, and the elimination of preferences mean the removal of any barriers in the way of American expansion.

These expressions from leading trade publications of the Soviet Union leave no doubt about the attitude of that country. Of course, their charges that we are using the trade program to advance the cause of American imperialism is ridiculous. Its purpose is to promote trade and commerce among the nations of the world that they may live together in peace and have the means in each nation to promote the general welfare and raise the living standards of their own people.

But in increasing our markets for foreign goods, reciprocal trade has increased enormously the foreign markets for American goods, mostly manufactured products of many kinds from automobiles and farm machinery to farm products; because, as we purchase the products of other countries, many of them basic raw materials that we seriously need, our purchases put American dollars in the pockets of their peoples so they can buy our products. This is the real reason that Russia opposes the program. The Soviets would like nothing better than for us to so injure or destroy the reciprocal-trade program so that our purchases of foreign goods would cease, thereby bringing about a situation in which she could make special arrangements with other countries, and thus put rubles in their pockets instead of American dollars and force them to trade with her because they would not have the means of trading with us. That is the crux of the whole matter. Let us not betray the free world by crippling with amendments our foreign-trade program which has brought us so far along the road toward the restoration of normal trade and commerce between our country and so many countries of the world. This program is vital to the future prosperity of our own country. It is vital also to the peace of the world. And the kind of bill the Congress shall eventually pass may well determine what kind of world our children will live in for a long time to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman fram Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, I have made my views known in this body several times before concerning the reciprocal-trade program. I desire, however, briefly to state some of the reasons which motivate my present action in opposing any reciprocal-trade measure which shall not adequately and expressly safeguard the welfare and prosperity of American industry, and thus guarantee, to a maximum degree possible, American working men and women to full-time, well-paid employment.

Let me state that I favor the encouragement of trade and commerce with foreign nations provided that the flow of that trade and commerce does not impair, harm, and destroy our own industrial strength. I have always opposed log-rolling tariffs which bestowed bounties on some classes and imposed oppressive prices and exactions on others. Such tariffs worked great injustice, promoted special privilege, and in effect levied indirect imposts upon the people. I believe, therefore, that the tariff question should be removed from politics as far as possible. I believe that qualified experts, businessmen, farmers, labor representatives, and other interested groups should all take part in the formulation of tariff rates and trade agreements.

If such principles were followed by our officials in making agreements and fixing rates, there would be no basis for criticism. But the whole process of making these trade agreements has been marked all too frequently by compromises and concessions to foreign nations that have not only imperiled American industries but have visited them with stagnation and depression, stalemate and unemployment which, were it not for the existing emergency in the world, would rapidly bring about economic collapse for many industries. I will not burden the House with detailed examples because they are well known and range from mining to textiles and from wool to boots and shoes and scientific instruments.

In my opinion, there is no justification for any law which permits the present flow of competitive goods from Russia and its satellites behind the iron curtain. This policy is strengthening potential enemies by giving them not only valuable dollars but also strategic materials.

Nor is there justification for failing to incorporate in this law provisions requiring certain and speedy adjustments of tariffs whenever imports reach the peril point and threaten the security and well-being of industries upon which we must depend to provide jobs, opportunities, and sustenance for American workers.

It is also incontrovertible that any worth-while reciprocal trade program should contain provisions by which our Nation would be able to escape from or avoid adverse and unfavorable and harmful consequences as the result of inequitable and unfair competition by cheaply made foreign goods.

Unless this bill is amended to meet these objections, I will vote against it because in that event it would work a great injustice to the workers and industries of my district and State.

I think that the American people are very much dissatisfied with—and some have strongly protested against—the ultraliberal and ultrainternationalistic concepts and ideological aims that have crept into the negotiation and administration of the trade-treaty law. The devaluation of the pound sterling has evidenced the gap between foreign and domestic cost of production with regard to several nations. That is surely most harmful in its effects. But it is hard to understand, much less estimate, the arrangements which allow the so-called iron-curtain countries to dump their slave-labor goods on the American market.

These particular agreements are defended on the ground that they promote peace and good will and raise standards of living in certain backward nations. But it is a peculiar and ill-advised altruism indeed which effectuates these concessions bringing loss of employment and loss of prosperity to American industries and at the same time strengthening the economy and the military potential of nations lined up against us in the conflict between freedom and slavery.

I hope the House will vote in this instance to secure and protect our industries, our workers, our farmers, and our businessmen. That is the path to the national strength we must have in this grave hour of world history.

American productive capacity is our greatest weapon in this crisis. Let us zealously and fearlessly protect it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted to me be given to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, many years ago there came from the great State of Tennessee to the Halls of Congress a young man whose name was Cordell Hull. He served in this body with distinction for a great many years, fighting high tariffs put into effect by the Republican Party of his day. He recognized the future danger to our country of such policy. He saw the position that our over-all economy might be put into, the disadvantage to agriculture, the disadvantage to many elements of our industry. He saw the repercussions abroad in the ultimate building up of higher and higher tariff walls in other countries against our goods from the farm and from the factory. He saw the vicious circle developing, and he knew that that was one of the causes that led to unrest, suspicion, distress—yes, hatred, which brought about imperialism and resulted in war. For many years he fought in this Chamber to have the Congress enact into law a scientific method applicable to our country and reasonably just and fair to other countries for international intercourse in business, and at the same time bringing protection to our own people, both in industry and on the farms. He later was sent by the people of his great State to the United States Senate and he continued his great fight. He not only fought in this direction but he fought for income-tax legislation. He made many other great fights, but one of his great contributions was in the field of sound, intelligent tariff legislation.

After leaving the other Chamber he was appointed Secretary of State, and for all time the name of Cordell Hull will go down in American history as one of the greatest Secretaries of State that our country has ever had or will have. As a cornerstone of his great career, if he were asked to pick out the one greatest thing, the greatest contribution that he felt he had made to the progress of our country, it would be the Hull reciprocal trade agreements legislation. We are now asked by the pending bill to extend for a period of 3 years that which Cordell Hull fought for for so many years and that which Cordell Hull finally was instrumental in enacting into law. If Cordell Hull were not confined to his home during the past several years due to illness, we would hear his voice ringing today urging the Members of Congress to extend unrestricted for another 3 years the Hull reciprocal trade agreements law. He saw the dangers and the harmful results of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. He saw it make a powerful contribution in bringing about an economic conflagration. He saw its great contribution to this misunderstanding throughout the world, and it certainly did bring great misunderstanding throughout the world. You and I saw this great country go into a great economic conflagration due in part to the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. In 1932 the national income was $39,000,000,000; last year it was $260,000,000,000. We have seen what the high protective tariff acts of the Republican Party have brought about. And we have seen the beneficial contributions made to the healthy building up of our country domestically and bringing about satisfactory conditions throughout the world under the Hull Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

In 1936 the Republican Party in its platform came out for the repeal of the Hull Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I respect the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON]. He is opposed to this type of legislation. I respect those who are opposed to it, absolutely and definitely. They want us to go back to the Smoot-Hawley Act with all of its vicious results. And they are honest. But there are those who by indirection are trying to impair and destroy the effectiveness of that which the great Cordell Hull, after many years of effort, had put on the statute books of our country and which today we are attempting by the pending bill to extend for 3 years.

The pending amendment, if adopted, will seriously impair the Hull reciprocal trade agreements law. You and I who have followed the leadership of Cordell Hull, you and I who believe in the leadership of Cordell Hull, should keep in mind that this is an indirect attack on the stability and the strength of the Hull reciprocal trade agreements law.

In 1949 we exported $12,000,000,000 of goods and farm commodities and imported $7,000,000,000. In 1939 we exported $3,000,000,000 and imported $2,000,000,000. The reciprocal trade agreements law has removed artificial barriers, has brought about better understanding, and has inured to the benefit of our country. Today it is an important part also of our relationship with other countries.

The pending amendment, as I say, will be an attack upon that which Cordell Hull has given to us. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the trade agreements program has been in effect since 1934. The proponents of that program said that it would relieve the depression and would bring peace to the world. When we entered the war economy of World War II there were still about 10,000,000 unemployed in the country. It is ridiculous to suggest that the trade agreements program has produced either prosperity or peace.

It is important that Congress take a look at the trade agreements program to see how it is being administered. The State Department, in administering the trade agreements program, has not kept faith with agriculture. The State Department officials not only lacked information about the problems of the American farmer, but they rejected the information that has been available from the Department of Agriculture and the Tariff Commisison. In the early years of the program greater reductions of tariff were made with reference to agriculture than any other industry. The fact that the tariff had been cut the full 50 percent as authorized in the original act on many agricultural products was the primary reason for the administration asking for authority to make an additional cut of 50 percent a few years ago.

When Mr. John C. Lynn, associate director of the American Farm Bureau Federation, appeared before our committee I asked him about the potato situation in reference to our tariffs and the trade agreements program. I want to quote to you just a little from that testimony:

Mr. LYNN. Well, the potato situation is not a good one to talk about.

Mr. CURTIS. But you have to hear about it.

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir. You have to face those rotten eggs once in a while. The potato situation that has given us so much trouble, or given us so much publicity, I think, is the Canadian potatoes coming into the United States. I think we could make a point there as covered in our statement.

Now, potatoes from the United States going into Canada pay a 75-cent duty per 100 pounds; potatoes coming from Canada to the United States on a quota of 3,500,000 bushels pay a 37½-cent duty. There is a case where we believe that reciprocity should be considered in these trade agreements. We are not saying that the duty should be raised to this level in Canada. But take Maine, for example. There is just an imaginary line between Maine and Canada, and potatoes are split right down the middle of the area; therefore, the duty from one place to another should be the same.

Another example to illustrate that is apples. In the case of apples from Canada to the United States, the duty is one-quarter of a cent a pound; in the case of apples from the United States to Canada, it is three-quarters of a cent a pound. Now, again, the same thing would apply.

Mr. CURTIS. And you had situations like that in mind when you stated it should be reciprocal?

Mr. LYNN. That is right.

Mr. Lynn pointed up the highly competitive nature of American farm products and their susceptibility to foreign imports. The testimony continues, as follows:

Mr. CURTIS. Now, take the Western Hemisphere. There are a great many competitors of the American farmer, are there not?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. But not so many very great competitors of America's heavy industries?

Mr. LYNN. I think, generally speaking, we are just about as efficient producers of agricultural products as industry is of industrial products. However, if I might use this as an example, an American GE refrigerator is just so much different from any other kind you see in the world that it is superior; whereas a bushel of wheat produced in America of the hard type and a bushel of the hard type from another country are about alike.

Mr. CURTIS. In other words, agricultural products are more sensitive to world prices than many industrial products?

Mr. LYNN. I think that is right. I think that is generally true.

Mr. Marion R. Garstang, of the Milk Producers' Federation, gave some very pertinent testimony on this same point. The testimony continues:

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Garstang, you represent dairy farmers or the manufacturers of dairy products, or both?

Mr. GARSTANG. The farmers, the producers.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that the duty on butter has been reduced by trade agreement negotiations from 14 cents a pound to 7 cents a pound on the annual quota of 60,000,000 pounds?

Mr. GARSTANG. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. That means that if they import more than 60,000,000 pounds, the tariff goes to 14 cents on that amount that is over?

Mr. GARSTANG. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. And is not 60,000,000 pounds almost three times as much as past imports in any one year except 1920?

Mr. GARSTANG. That is true. It is also a sufficient amount on a delicate market to just tear it to pieces.

Mr. CURTIS. Do not the chief imports of butter usually arrive at New York City; that is one of the principal ports of entry?

Mr. GARSTANG. I think that would be true; I am not sure.

Mr. CURTIS. I believe it is. And is it not also true that the price received by dairy farmers for their products is geared to the wholesale price of butter in New York City?

Mr. GARSTANG. In a great many markets——

Mr. CURTIS. I am talking about dairy farmers that are not in an organized milkshed where they have a local area for selling their product.

Mr. GARSTANG. Even in a great many of the milksheds which are subject to Federal orders, the price is set up on a formula which uses the price of butter as one of the elements of the formula and in a great many of the other markets that are not under Federal orders, a formula is used in which the butter price plays an important part.

Mr. CURTIS. Would the arrival of a boatload of butter, or the knowledge that it is expected to arrive, depress the price of butter in that market which would, in turn, depress the price to the dairy farmers throughout the country?

Mr. GARSTANG. I have heard the managers of some of our cooperatives say that one boatload of butter would upset the market particularly if the market happened to be well supplied with domestic production at the time.

Mr. CURTIS. Because the seller who offers his product at the lowest price really sets the market?

Mr. GARSTANG. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. At the present time butter imports are controlled through this section of the War Powers Act which you have read?

Mr. GARSTANG. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. But if those controls are removed the situation that you have described would exist, would it not?

Mr. GARSTANG. We were told at the Department of Agriculture about 2 or 3 weeks ago that there was considerable pressure on them to grant import licenses for butter. They are holding them down rather closely, but there are demands being made on them to grant import licenses for butter.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that the duty on Cheddar cheese was reduced to 3½ cents per pound, but not less than 17½ percent ad valorem by the trade agreements negotiations at Geneva in 1948?

Mr. GARSTANG. I do not have that information here, but that sounds about right.

Mr. CURTIS. And that is about one-half of the 1930 rate. I think you will find that is true. Do you know approximately what the imports of Cheddar cheese were in 1950? Were they not in the neighborhood of 15,000,000 pounds?

Mr. GARSTANG. It was 12,000,000 pounds for the first 10 months, so it would run close to 15,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Do you think that this duty reduction contributed to these large importations?

Mr. GARSTANG. Yes; I am sure that it did to some extent.

Mr. CURTIS. That is all.

Not only have the farmers of Nebraska been injured under the trade agreements program, but it has been a detriment to industry. One of Nebraska's leading industries is the production of motor scooters. These motor scooters are made at the Cushman Motor Works in Lincoln, Nebr. It is one of our largest home-owned industries. The principal competitor of a motor scooter is a motorcycle. There has been a heavy importation of motorcycles into the United States. Many of these came from behind the iron curtain. In other words, tariff concessions were granted by our Government to the makers of motorcycles in Czechoslovakia. Now I want to tell you just a little bit about the tariff on motorcycles.

The Tariff Act of 1930 fixed a 10-percent ad valorem duty on motorcycles, with a provision that if another country had a higher duty on motorcycles that our tariff could be raised to meet the foreign competition. The Trade Agreements Act of 1934 repealed this contingent provision. The present tariff duty for our importation of a motorcycle into Great Britain is 22½ percent ad valorem. The States Department has frozen our tariff on English motorcycles coming into this country at 10 percent. Is that reciprocity? Is that fair play? The motorcycle imports from England into the United States the first 10 months of 1950 were valued at $2,759,000.

The domestic jeweled-watch industry, consisting of Elgin National Watch Co., Hamilton Watch Co., and Waltham Watch Co., has been seriously affected by the reduced duties on imported Swiss watch movements. Their employment, earnings, and unit production have been severely curtailed by the competition from the Swiss industry whose average wages are almost one-third of the domestic average.

Elgin has been forced to begin importing low-priced watches through a subsidiary, Wadsworth Watch Case Co. Other companies will be forced to take the same measures.

The serious aspect of this situation is the injury to our national defense. There is no question that the jeweled-watch industry is vitally essential to our preparedness and ability to wage war. It is indispensable not only for timepieces but for many precise mechanisms to be used in a war of gadgets. Yet it is being whittled away, stifled, and ignored.

There are many ways to confuse the picture, but in the end the facts remain that our watch industry is well below our needs, not only in these fields but also in jeweled bearings, all of which are now imported from Switzerland. Aside from what may be done with the trade-agreements program as a whole, our jeweled-watch industry must be protected. It is already too small and should be supported and given an opportunity to expand as rapidly as possible. There is no excuse for our country being too little and too late in this part of its industrial capacity.

In a letter addressed to me and read to the committee, Mr. James G. Shennan, president of the Elgin National Watch Co., said:

In 1935, the year before the trade agreement with Switzerland, the domestic industry supplied about 53 percent of the watches sold to the American public. By 1941 this had fallen to 39 percent and today it is 28 percent. Though imports have increased from about 4,000,000 movements in 1941 to almost 9,000,000 in 1946 and 7,000,000 in 1949, the domestic industry in 1949 was able to sell only slightly less than the number of watches it sold in 1941. It would be difficult to convince our salesmen that the Swiss trade agreement helped the industry.

As we have stated before, our position respecting tariff has not been taken solely out of consideration for the welfare of the industry, or even its employees, but also because of the industry's extreme importance to national security. As you know, it has been our contention that the industry is too small for the vital purposes of national defense. This, now, has been borne out by statements made by the Chairman of the Munitions Board in answer to an inquiry from a subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee, specially appointed last year to study the situation of the domestic industry. Pertinent excerpts from two letters by the Munitions Board Chairman are quoted below so that you may have before you the proof of our contention in this connection:

"Assuming that we will have to rely exclusively on our domestic capacity to produce timepieces and related items in a future emergency, and based on an analysis of our experiences in the last war, I believe that the preservation of a minimum level of domestic productive capacity is absolutely essential.

"I regret that I am not in a position to state now what that minimum level should be, but if it would be helpful to you, I would venture the opinion that in no event should it be lower than the 1941 level of operations." (Letter of March 17, 1950.)

"As I pointed out in my prior letter, the maintenance of a heathy watch industry is essential to the national security. In addition to the items which it alone can produce the industry undoubtedly would again be called upon for the production of other items for which it is not the sole producer.

"In view of this, it is our feeling that, as a matter of precaution against probable future needs, every effort should be made to prevent the dissipation of the productive capacity of the industry and to maintain it in a healthy condition." (Letter of May 9, 1950.)

The total conversion of the industry to war production during the years from 1942 through most of 1945 gave the importers of foreign-made watches and movements a virtual monopoly of the American market. It has taken the whole American industry, not just this company, the 3 years since the end of the war to fight its way back in unit sales to the 1941 level. Even now, with a new and more serious threat to our national security than ever before, the industry is still at that minimum level to which the Chairman of the Munitions Board referred. In these times minimum levels are not enough. This country should have an industry fully capable, beyond doubts, of taking care of all needs. Great Britain has been subsidizing and supporting its horological industry for 10 years, because of its military importance.

I think it is fair to say that the State Department has been openly hostile to the American jeweled-watch industry, notwithstanding that industry's absolute necessity to our defense program. A thorough investigation ought to be made of the people in the State Department who have been running our trade-agreements program. It is well known that Alger Hiss had something to do with the trade agreements. When the general trade-agreement convention was held in Switzerland, Mr. Clayton took 100 or so associates over there with him. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] caused an investigation of these individuals to be made and found that there were 10 Communists in Mr. Clayton's party. I would like to ask the question, Were the Communists sabotaging America through the trade-agreements program?

One of the very fine witnesses that appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in reference to trade agreements was Walter W. Cenerazzo, national president of American Watch Workers Union. Among other things, he said:

A perusal of these rates will show that a watch finisher receives from 54.1 cents per hour to 57.2 cents per hour, American money, and in the United States the comparative rate for a piece worker, watch finisher, is $1.85 per hour with earnings averaging better than $2 per hour. A pinion maker ranges from 26.9 cents per hour, class 7, to class 1 at 56.5 cents per hour in Switzerland and the comparable rate in the United States is $1.60 to $1.90 per hour.

This pinion maker is an interesting comparison, because the American pinion maker works on the same machine as his counterpart in Switzerland.

These machines they work on are manufactured in Switzerland in Moutier by the firms of Beckler, Peterman, and Tornos, and are sold to us here in the United States, one of the few pieces of machines not blocked for sale by Switzerland to American firms. The productivity from these machines must be the same, but how different the wage rates are.

Our average wages in the United States are in excess of $1.40 per hour and in addition there is a vacation with pay, the paid holidays, the group insurance, the pension plans, social security, unemployment compensation, which is part of the direct wage costs, among other things. These are all based on the employee's average wage in their payment and the total average wage is about $1.60 per hour. In Switzerland these figures will show the wages are from one-third to one-fourth of our wages.

The records are clear as to what a 17-jewel watch movement can be brought into the United States for. The Commissioner of Customs can readily make those figures available to your committee as can the Statistical Division of the Department of Commerce. Profit and all, 17-jewel watch movements come in for an average of $6.10 apiece, transportation costs with insurance not more than 10 cents per movement and the tariff ranges from $2.10 for a 17-jewel man's watch movement to $2.70 for a woman's watch movement, a total of $8.90. The cost of producing a 17-jewel watch movement in this country is considerably in excess of that with American wage costs and other costs. How can a domestic manufacturer compete on equal terms with such competition?

Mr. Chairman, I too would ask the question as did Mr. Cenerazzo—how can the men and women employed in the Elgin National Watch Co.'s factory at Lincoln, Nebr., compete with this Swiss system without some further measure of tariff protection? It is apparent that the importers are the ones who have the ear of the State Department.

Another witness who made a very fine contribution to our hearings was Mr. O. R. Strackbein. It is very significant that more and more of the working people of the country are finding out that our trade agreements program is not reciprocal; that it favors Soviet Russia; and that it discriminates against American labor and industry. It has not relieved unemployment. And certainly it has not prevented war. Mr. Strackbein spoke in opposition to the trade agreements program. In his dual capacity as chairman of the Labor-Management Counsel of Foreign Trade Policy and as secretary of America's Wage Earners Protective Conference, Mr. Strackbein spoke for the following labor groups: American Flint Glass Workers' Union; Atlantic Fishermen's Union; Seafarers' International Union; Fish Cannery Workers' Union of the Pacific; International Brotherhood of Bookbinders; International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America; United Hat, Cap, and Millinery Workers' International Union; International Council of Aluminum Workers' Unions; National Brotherhood of Operative Potters; United Cement, Lime, and Gypsum Workers' Union; International Chemical Workers' Union; National Match Workers' Council; Greenhouse Vegetable Workers' Union 20557; United Wallpaper Craftsmen and Workers' Union of North America; International Union of Operating Engineers; Glass Bottle Blowers' Association; Window Glass Cutters' League of America; Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America; American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.

The trade-agreements program has lowered the tariff on most imports coming into the United States. The tariff is a tax on imports. If any tax is taken off or removed, it has to be made up in some other way. This means that this program, which has failed so terribly, has caused a great loss of revenue to the Federal Treasury. If the imports that came into the United States last year had paid the regular rate of duty as established by the Tariff Act of 1930, our Federal Treasury would have been about $3,000,000,000 ahead. Now Mr. Truman is insisting that we raise the taxes on the American people. Three billion dollars is a lot of money.

The fact that our trade-agreements program has played definitely into the hands of Russian Communists cannot be denied. On that point, I want to quote from the minority report on this bill:

As the result of the most-favored-nation principle, reductions in duty and other concessions made by the United States with all countries under the trade-agreement program are automatically extended to Russia, Communist China, and all other Communist-dominated countries. We now have trade agreements with approximately 45 free countries covering literally thousands of imported items, and the benefits of all these concessions contained in these agreements are now benefiting Russia, Communist China, and their satellite iron-curtain countries.

In the case of Russia, for example, approximately 88 percent of its dutiable imports into the United States benefit from reduced rates provided in trade agreements by us with free countries, and 92 percent of the tax-free imports from Russia consists of products bound on the free list in trade agreements by us with free countries.

In the case of Communist China, 72 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from that country benefit from trade-agreement concessions granted by us to free countries, and 75 percent of the duty-free imports of that country benefit from our concessions to the free nations.

Briefly summarized, similar figures for other iron-curtain countries are as follows:

Poland, 80 percent of the dutiable imports and 79 percent of the free imports.

Hungary, 73 percent of the dutiable imports and 69 percent of the free imports.

Bulgaria, 97 percent of the dutiable imports and 30 percent of the free imports.

Manchuria, 99.8 percent of the dutiable imports and 98 percent of the free imports.

Rumania, 96 percent of the dutiable imports and 84 percent of the free imports.

Detailed statistics on these import figures are contained in appendix A.

It is outrageous that our American soldiers should be fighting the Communists in Korea while at the same time all the Communist countries are enjoying the benefits of concessions made by the United States to the free world without (except in the case of Czechoslovakia) having given the United States a single concession in return. We recommend that this rank and preposterous inconsistency in our foreign policy be removed at once by the denying to Russia and Communist China, and to any Communist satellite country (including North Korea) which the President finds is part of a conspiracy against the free world, the benefit of the reduced rates which we have granted to the free world.

The administration of our foreign trade by the State Department in addition to helping Russia's war potential has hurt the United States defense program. It is not any wonder that the twenty-fifth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense meeting at the Statler Hotel in Washington, D. C., on January 25–27, 1951, condemned the trade agreements program and recommended that the act be not extended. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas a healthy national economy is necessary to a strong national defense; and

Whereas good wages and full employment form the foundation of a healthy economy; and

Whereas the free trade importation of products of countries where workers are paid much less than workers producing comparable goods in the United States can only result in increasing unemployment here and a weakening of our economy and our potential for national defense; and

Whereas the so-called reciprocal trade agreements program has removed protection from our workers and investors against the unfair competition of the low-paid workers of other countries, thereby threatening jobs of workers in industries important to our national defense; and

Whereas as a result of the reduction of tariffs and import fees incident to the passage of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 as extended, grave injury already has been inflicted upon various industries in this country important to our national defense program; and

Whereas imports into our country should be controlled by the imposition of import fees which would reflect the difference in our workers' wage standard and standard of living to those standards in other countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the twenty-fifth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge upon Congress that the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 as extended which expires in June of this year, be not extended further and that in its place there be established the principle of flexible import fees, to be decided upon by the Congress in keeping with the Constitution of the United States.

The Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense consists of 40 participating organizations as follows: American Gold Star Mothers, Inc.; American Gold Star Sisters, Inc.; American Gold Star Wives, Inc.; American Legion Auxiliary; American War Dads Auxiliary; American War Mothers; American Women's Legion of World Wars; Auxiliary to Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War; Blue Star Mothers of America; Catholic War Veterans of the U. S. A. Ladies Auxiliary; Dames of the Loyal Legion of the U. S. A.; Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, 1861–65, Inc.; Daughters of the United States Army; Ladies Auxiliary of the Military Order of the Purple Heart; Ladies Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic; Marine Corps League Auxiliary; National Amvets Auxiliary; National Auxiliary, Jewish War Veterans of the United States; National Patriotic Council; National Society for Constitutional Security; National Society, Daughters of the Revolution; National Society, Daughters of the Union, 1861–65, Inc.; National Society of New England Women; National Society, Patriotic Women of America, Inc.; National Society of Service Star Legion, Inc.; National Society, Women Descendants of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company; National Woman's Relief Corps Auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic; National Yeomen F; Navy Club, United States of America Auxiliary; Navy Mothers Club of America; New York City Colony, National Society, New England Women; Society of Sponsors of the United States Navy; The Wheel of Progress; United States Army Mothers; Women of the Army and Navy Legion of Valor of the United States of America; Women's National Defense Committee of Philadelphia; Reserve Officers Association, Ladies Clubs of the United States; The National Gold Star Mothers, Inc.

Mr. Chairman, right now people are worried about the war. That does not relieve this Congress from taking a look at this legislation. I am convinced that an investigation of the operations of the trade agreements law would lead a majority of the Congress to feeling that the program should be discontinued.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 198, noes 107.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin: After line 9 add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. As soon as practicable, but not more than 90 days after enactment of this act, the President shall take such action as is necessary to withdraw or prevent the application of reduced tariffs or other concessions (including the binding of an article on the free list) contained in any trade-agreement hereafter entered into under authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and extended, to imports from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and to imports from any nation or area thereof which the President deems to be dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, and reserve the point of order so that I may have an opportunity to examine the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we have heard the word "reciprocal" bandied about this afternoon. Anybody listening to the speech delivered on the floor just a few moments ago by the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, heard it used in practically every sentence. Webster defines "reciprocal" as "mutual, shared, felt, shown, or the like, by both sides." Webster also says "reciprocal has the implication of an interchange of the same feeling or act."

Mr. Chairman, under the administration of the Trade Agreements Act there has not been reciprocity. There are today more trade barriers imposed against American goods than when the program was instituted. Other countries have imposed import quotas, blocked currency operations, currency manipulations, state trading, and all the other vast number of new devices that are used today to restrict imports.

Mr. Chairman, I am not criticizing those countries, for doing so, because I think we can all appreciate the difficulties they had and the problems they had so far as their trade balances were concerned. But I certainly do not think it befitting a majority leader or a Member of the Congress or a department of the Government of the United States to sell a program to the people of the country on the basis that it is reciprocal when it is no such thing.

There is compelling evidence that this program is not reciprocal. It can be found in at least one instance by an examination of the operation of the program with respect to the Communist countries of the world. Let us understand at the beginning that we have no trade agreement with any country behind the iron curtain, with the exception of Czechoslovakia. We have today no trade agreements, for instance, with Russia, none with Bulgaria, none with Poland, none with Hungary, none with Rumania, and none with China. Yet all of the concessions that we have granted to any country with whom we do have an agreement by virtue of the Trade Agreements Act is extended to those countries. What does that mean today in the trade between these countries and the United States of America, particularly as it relates to their exports to this country?

Using the figures for 1949, which is the year for which we have complete figures, of the dutiable goods imported into this country from Russia, 88 percent came in with the benefits of concessions granted under the trade-agreements program. Of the items imported from Russia which were on the free list, 92 percent were items which have been bound on the free list by reason of trade agreements entered into under the authority of this act.

In the case of Poland, 80 percent of the dutiable imports that came into this country in 1949 came in with benefits granted under the Trade Agreements Act.

In the case of Bulgaria, 96 percent of the items coming into this country have benefited by reason of concessions made.

From Hungary 73 percent of the dutiable imports were benefited as a result of concessions. Rumania, 96 percent; China, 76 percent.

Is that what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] would call a reciprocal program, when they gave us nothing for all the concessions that we have given? They have no agreements with us whatever.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to inform the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin that I have in my office three linen towels stamped in the weave "Made in Soviet Russia," bought in a department store in Miami, that came into this country under the provisions of the Czechoslovakia reciprocal trade agreement. I just wonder how much of that is finding its way into the American markets through the favored-nation clause. I hope the gentleman explains to the Committee a little more the devastating effect of the favored-nation clause.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman for that evidence of a lack of reciprocity and what is actually happening as a result of the extension of the concessions that we have made to the iron-curtain countries.

Where, may I ask, is the reciprocity in a program that extends benefit to a country that gives you nothing in return? I am amazed that the majority party, that the majority on the committee, should seize upon a technicality to continue those benefits to the Communist countries of the world.

The amendment which I proposed in the first instance recommended only one thing and asked only one thing, that is, that any concessions granted by reason of these trade agreements should not be extended to the Communist countries. That is all it did. Yet they seize upon a technicality and say, "Oh, no. We want to continue to extend these benefits to Communist areas."

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain that his amendment will in no wise hinder the importation from Russia of any war materials that we may want?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. It certainly does not. Items coming from iron-curtain countries are not restricted by reason of the amendment. All it provides is that any imports that do come in shall come in under the tariff rate imposed by the Congress under the Tariff Act of 1930 and not come in under reduced rates which have been given as the result of so-called reciprocal concessions, in which they played no part whatever.

Another thing the amendment would do, however, it would free our hands, as a Congress and as a Government, to deal as we see fit, with the problem presented by the importation of specific items from those countries. Let me explain briefly what I mean by using this example. Fur imports from Russia and the iron-curtain countries since the war have been used as a device by Russia and the satellite countries to get dollars—dollars with which to purchase strategic items elsewhere, which they may need for their economy or their military efforts. In the last 4 years the iron-curtain countries have imported into this country $148,000,000 worth of furs. Granted they were on the free list, but the industry, in attempting to get some action to protect itself against this inflow of imports, was faced with this statement from all of the agencies of Government to which they appealed: "We cannot impose any restrictions on the importation of Russian or Communist furs because they are bound on the free list, as a result of trade agreements that we have with other countries."

Do we have to be bound in our conduct and treatment of goods from Russia and Communist countries by reason of some concession we have granted some other country and for which Russia or the other Communist countries have given up nothing of worth? I say "No," and I say that we as a Congress should say "No," and write it into the act. Unfortunately we cannot do much in view of the insistence of the majority to stand on a technicality in order to permit Russian goods to come with the benefits of the concessions granted in trade agreements already entered into. However, we should do all we can to prevent such things happening in the future and see to it that no concession granted in future trade agreements shall be extended to the importation of products from countries under Communist domination.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. When we buy fur coats from Russia we pay her in gold which they use to buy war equipment which they use to fight our men in Korea.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Absolutely, and it makes it that much easier for them to get dollar credits if they can do so on some nonessential item rather than to have to part with such essential things as manganese, tungsten, and some other things that we need and which can be imported without damage to domestic industry.

Mr. Chairman, there have been many false claims made for the trade agreements program. The most unfounded claim is that it is reciprocal. It is no such thing. The adoption of this amendment will not make it so. The adoption of the amendment will, however, remove the most glaring evidence that it is not reciprocal.

The adoption of this amendment will also show that in at least one area we are not going to further appease communism.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to discuss the gentleman's amendment as it has been altered and corrected with some of the members of the committee on this side. As I understand the gentleman's amendment now, what he is proposing to do is to direct the President to remove the most-favored-nation policy in connection with any future agreements that may be entered into as far as imports from Russia, Red China, or the satellites of those countries are concerned. Is that right?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. That is substantially correct.

Mr. MILLS. I think perhaps the purpose the gentleman has in mind can better be served by other language, but as far as I personally am concerned I am willing to accept the gentleman's amendment with the understanding now that during the course of the consideration of the bill in conference, we may perhaps want to perfect the gentleman's amendment if it is possible for us to perfect it.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I would be very pleased to have the gentleman perfect it and particularly perfect it relating to some of the agreements that are now in existence. But I do want to say to the gentleman that I appreciate his action at this time with respect to the present state of the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman understands that those of us who bring legislation in on the floor of the House sometimes feel honor bound to the committee and to ourselves to protect the legislation from amendments which are not in keeping with the rules of the House. I objected to the gentleman's amendment earlier because it was not germane to the bill before us. The gentleman's amendment now is germane to the bill before us and I am suggesting that, as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to accept his amendment. Some others on this side agree with me.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I appreciate that. If the gentleman would permit I should like to make it clear, however, that we on this side of the House have waived points of order on amendments coming up from the floor dealing with specific subjects.

Mr. MILLS. With regard to other legislation, but not legislation from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, a great forward step will be taken with the passage of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES]. It has my fullest endorsement because its purpose and aim to a limited degree will accomplish the expression of my Concurrent Resolution 11 introduced on January 3. It is the sense of the Congress in that resolution that the President should take such action as may be necessary to rescind any foreign-trade agreement negotiated with any foreign country, or any instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, if the Secretary of State is of the opinion that the government of such country is Communist controlled.

Addition of the Byrnes amendment will be heartening to those of us who desire additional action beyond the curtailment of the benefits now inuring to Communist satellite countries from the favored nation clause. The Byrnes proviso added to the peril point amendment and the addition of the escape clause will make the bill before us, H. R. 1612, a composite measure for which I can vote on final passage.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, throughout this debate, the proponents as well as the opponents of the extension of these agreements, have stressed the fact that the escape clause had been invoked in only one instance. I also point to that single instance with some pride because the Presidential proclamation just before the last elections withdrawing as of December 1, 1950, certain United States tariff concessions on women's fur felt hats and hat bodies made in the general agreement on tariffs and trade concluded at Geneva in 1947, was issued in accordance with recommendations of the Tariff Commission made after an investigation. I made a personal appearance and testified at length before the Tariff Commission on May 9, 1950, for the revocation of the concession which was causing serious injury to the hat industry and the workers in Norwalk and Danbury in Connecticut and the other affected areas in Massachusetts, New York, and New Jersey.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, for the excellent amendment he has offered and state that I wish that the Democratic leadership had not made a point of order against the amendment as originally offered so as to make it apply to existing trade agreements.

I am in favor of sound reciprocal trade agreements with peace-loving nations. But I am not in favor of giving any trade concession, directly or indirectly, to a nation that is seeking to destroy us. Russia is in reality conducting a war against us. She is doing it of course, by means of indirection, primarily through her satellites. Trade advantages indirectly given to Russia or its satellites is a grave injustice to American boys who are called upon to fight Russian satellites in Korea.

I wonder if the technical gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who will not disturb present agreements benefiting Russia know how much Russia has benefited thereby so as to enable her to be in a position described in the following AP dispatch under today's dateline out of New York:

SOVIET JETS OUTPUT SEEN AT 400 MONTHLY SOON

NEW YORK, February 7.—Russia is expanding production of her MIG–15 jet fighter planes and, according to Swedish sources, expects to be producing 400 a month in the next few months, the magazine Aviation Age said today.

It said American production of planes of all types does not exceed 250 a month.

The magazine said MIG–15, which has been in action over Korea, has speeds up to 660 miles an hour.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I have supported the principles and the theory of the Reciprocal Trade legislation, and I shall today vote for the pending measure because I believe in the principles involved. As I have stated before, however, I do find considerable fault with the manner in which the legislation has heretofore been administered. For that reason I have supported the so-called peril-point and escape clause amendments. I shall also support the so-called iron-curtain amendment. I take this time to call to the attention of the Members some factual information with respect to the fur farming industry and to the effects upon it by imports of foreign furs. In the year 1939 there were approximately 3,000 silver fox farms scattered throughout the United States. Some 200 of them were located in the State of Washington. I regret to say that there are less than 400 of these farms left in business in the United States today. Whereas, these fur farms have produced 350,000 silver fox pelts, the estimated production for 1951 is less than 25,000 pelts.

Mink farming did not reach a point of importance until the late thirties and showed a steady growth until 1948 when there were 6,061 mink farms. Today there are a little over 5,000 mink farms, a decrease in 2 years' time of approximately 1,000 farms.

During the year 1950 imports of silver-fox furs totaled 44 percent of the domestic production. During the same year imports of mink furs totaled 69 percent of the domestic mink-pelt production. How much longer the remaining mink farms can stay in business against this foreign competition is a matter of your personal conjecture. The foreign pelts are, of course, produced at a much lower cost with cheaper labor. In many instances, and I refer to Russian imports particularly, the fur pelts are produced by slave labor or forced labor. Obviously, they can and do undersell our domestic product. As a matter of fact, Russian furs today dominate our domestic fur market. In that connection may I say that during the last 5 years we have imported over a quarter billion dollars' worth of furs from communistic-dominated countries, over $190,000,000 of which came directly from Russia.

I am not certain just what effect the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] will have upon these imports of Russian furs. Be that as it may, I want the Members to know that imports of certain foreign products can and do injure domestic industries. It is my belief that the Secretary of Commerce should forbid the importation of Russian-produced furs just as he has now prohibited the importation of Russian canned crab, on the grounds that the fur pelts, like the crab, are produced by slave or forced labor. I hope the House will approve the so-called iron-curtain amendment. If, as it is presently worded, it does not relieve the existing situation, then, perhaps the amendment may be reworded in the other body where the rule of germaneness is not as strictly applied as it is in the House.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, it would be much easier and more pleasant for me to sit still and be quiet. But, who can remain silent when a measure of such vital importance to every family and individual in America is before us?

Always I have thought that anything that is fundamentally wrong and basically unsound cannot be justified by all the camouflage and sophistry which clever and ingenious men might employ.

Never have I voted for these reciprocal trade treaties and never shall I vote for them because Congress supinely and abjectly surrendered its prerogatives and delegated its powers to one branch of the executive department.

Instead of our foreign trade being controlled by an independent, unbiased, bipartisan agency, whose sole function is to study it and whose decisions are based upon factual evidence, it has been maneuvered, manipulated, and concocted by long-haired men and short-haired women in the State Department who are largely, if not wholly incompetent and unfitted to pass upon such matters.

These treaties are surrounded by an aura of mystery, conducted in secrecy without the duly elected representatives of the people, the Members of Congress, or the representatives of American business, labor, or agriculture, being given an opportunity to be heard. Such star-chamber proceedings are repugnant to free men and violate every tradition of the American people and the lovers of liberty everywhere.

Representatives of foreign governments and of foreign industry are granted admission to the hearings on these negotiated treaties, but all Americans are barred. There is nothing reciprocal about them because it is all give and no take so far as we in this country are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, there are other countries much larger than the United States in both area and in population. There are civilizations older, with vaster natural resources. Yet the incontestable fact is, that we have grown in the past 160 years to be the greatest and most powerful Nation on earth. Perhaps the chief reason for our industrial might and productive capacity is that we had a high protective tariff to protect our infant industries, which have made us the marvel of our age. I know that we are now grown up; that our industries are not any longer infant, and that we must have an active flow of commerce between the different nations. It is both interesting and significant to note that the father of reciprocity was the former outstanding chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of this House, a good Governor of Ohio, and the great and beloved Republican President of the United States of America—martyred William McKinley.

Naturally, other countries must sell to us if they can buy from us, but we have an American standard of living to preserve and I still prefer to help my next door neighbor in Missouri or in any one of our 48 great States than to help anybody in a foreign land—whether he be prince or pauper—from English aristocracy, French royalist, German junker, to the coolie in China, the peon in Mexico or the hottentot from Zanzibar to Zamboanga.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] and other Members on the Democratic side have pointed out the undeniable fact that today we have high employment with the highest wages ever before in our history. This cannot be disputed but what kind of prosperity is it that we are enjoying? Is it natural, normal, sound, and permanent? Or is it artificial, unnatural, unsound, temporary, and synthetic? Sir, I declare that it is a false prosperity, built upon war and the spilling of American blood. This blood money I do not want.

Every intelligent and well-informed person knows that the New Deal from its inception in 1933 to Pearl Harbor in 1941 doubled our national debt, increasing it from $32,000,000,000 to $66,000,000,000 on boondoggling, pump-priming, leaf-raking, silly, asinine projects. In spite of the vast expenditures during the 1930's, in spite of the increased taxes and the mounting debt, we still had 8,000,000 people in this country unemployed at the time of Pearl Harbor. It took World War II to put our people in the Army and in our munition factories, to reduce unemployment, and lull our people to sleep in a blissful state of a false and damnable prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, every State in our Union and every section of our population is vitally affected by this legislation. Potatoes grown in Canada are brought into this country with a tariff of 25 cents on the hundred pounds. Potatoes grown in the United States, in Aroostook County, Maine, across an imaginary border, in Long Island, in Idaho, and even in Missouri, as well as many other States, when shipped to Canada, have a tariff of 75 cents on the hundred pounds. Of course, the Canadians have a three-to-one advantage over us on this one item.

Sir, we grow many apples down in my district, and the greatest and best apple grower is Stark Bros. Nurseries in Louisiana, Mo. It just happens that Lloyd Stark, a great and patriotic American, is a former Democrat Governor of Missouri, and he sells not only his apples but his apple trees all over the Nation. When we ship apples to Canada we pay a great duty, but when people in Canada ship us apples they pay about one-third the duty. Of course, that must help Lloyd Stark and all the other apple growers in our country. It does not help those in my district; and I want you to know, Mr. Chairman, that even though we are "apple knockers," we still insist upon our rights and do not want to be pushed out of business. We are at the lowest ebb now.

Hats and gloves from Italy, all kinds of leatherware from Austria, and Czechoslovakia enter the American market in competition with our own workers in those industries. This is the reason that our industries in Gloversville and Amsterdam in New York have suffered and it is the reason that St. Louis, the shoe capital of the world, not excepting Brockton, Mass., and the many little shoe factories in my own district at West Plains, Marionville, Aurora, Sarcoxie, Monett, and other towns have felt the pinch because of cheaply made shoes in Czechoslovakia, and these countries behind the iron curtain where labor is employed at exceedingly low wages. Much of the labor is slave labor performed by conquered peoples and by political prisoners. Sir, we cannot compete with this cheap foreign slave labor in any of our industries without lowering our American standard of living. Even a moron should be able to see this. Evidently, some Members of Congress cannot.

There are millions of acres of forest lands in Siberia that have not yet heard the sound of a woodsman's ax. Does any Member on this floor from the great Northwest, whether from Washington, Oregon, or from the deep South in Alabama, dare tell us that we can compete in this country with the slave labor of Soviet Russia? Of course not.

Mr. Chairman, the glassware, pottery, and ceramics business in West Virginia, Ohio, and other spots in our Nation have felt the terrific impact of the imports of these cheap products from abroad. Before the present chaos in Asia, millions of pounds of dried eggs from Red China were imported into this country in direct competition with the poultry farmers of my own congressional district. Oh yes, we not only grow chickens and produce eggs in the Ozarks but in the tri-State area—Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma—we produce lead and zinc; in Arizona, Utah, and Montana, they produce copper, and our mining industry in every section of this country has suffered terribly in competition with the importation of ores and minerals produced by cheap and slave labor abroad.

Sir, I could continue the list, but time will not permit. However, I do want to refer to one other industry—the watch and jewel movement industry in this country that has not only suffered but has been almost annihilated. Everyone here knows that Waltham Watch Co., in Massachusetts, has been closed; that Hamilton and Elgin have suffered because of the importation of these items from abroad, particularly from Switzerland. Many people have lost their jobs.

Mr. Chairman, as the ranking Republican member on the Armed Services Committee, I am particularly concerned with our national defense. I do not want to have to depend upon any foreign source for these highly developed technical precision instruments in time of war. If Russia could overrun all of Europe—as practically everyone agrees, how could we depend upon Switzerland or any other country to furnish us the materials needed? Do not forget, sir, that in World War II, 54 of our 59 tankers carrying oil from Venezuela, Aruba, and Curacao were sunk by Nazi submarines off the Atlantic coast.

Since I have mentioned oil, it may be pertinent and not completely out of order, to mention that we have increased by exploration in this country, our oil productive capacity. We cannot rest assured that we can depend upon the vast, rich oil fields in the Near East, in South America, and Mexico, or anywhere else in the world should we become engaged in a global conflict. Oil, like rubber and steel, is the lifeblood of our Nation in both peace and war because America is a nation on wheels.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the indulgence of the Committee, and I shall not trespass further upon its patience and strength, but I do hope that today, and I fervently expect this House of Representatives of the American people to stand up and be counted. We shall not abdicate our powers, turn over our prerogatives, but shall return and hold fast to the trust that has been placed in us.

I shall vote for all the amendments that have been offered here. I shall vote to recommit the bill and in my opinion it is a measure that needs—not a doctor, but an undertaker. It was enacted to bring about world peace. It gave us the greatest war in our history and threatens in a clever and subtle manner to wreck the foundations upon which this Republic rests. I hope, sir, that my position on this particular measure is clear to everyone who can read—but unfortunately and tragically many men who can read do not understand.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the measure before us seeks to extend the authority of the President for 3 years to enter into foreign trade agreements. It is popularly known as the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. For 5 years, I have been attempting to find the reciprocity features in the act. So far, I have been able to find that it is chiefly a one-way street with most of the reciprocity on the part of good old Uncle Sam. Actually under its operation we trade a horse and get a hare in return.

The Democratic administration, which has sponsored the program since 1933, under Cordell Hull, as Secretary of State, has been compounding a felony against the American workingman and his standard of living. The fancy language that is used to describe the benefits of the program is political trickery and the American people are not being fooled. The union factory worker, who has lost his job because of unfair competition from abroad is now aware of the great danger to him and his family if this bill is finally approved. I am for a true program of reciprocity but on an equal basis and after full public hearings. I am absolutely against the measure before us because there are no public hearings and because it gives to the State Department, through the President the right to bargain away the rights and protection of the American workingman in those industries affected in the agreements. The present bill is anti-American and I repeat I am against it in its present form.

Mr. Chairman, extended hearings before the House Committee on Education and Labor were held last year on the question of the effect of foreign imports on employment. Some 14 A. F. of L. and CIO union representatives appeared and testified and all to the same effect that foreign imports are seriously affecting employment in their respective industries.

As a fair example of the testimony given before the House committee, one Rudolph Heinl, Chicago, Ill., representing the United Wall Paper Craftsmen and Workers of North America, A. F. of L. said and I quote:

A survey of imports of wallpaper into the United States between 1937 and 1948 shows that such imports from Canada have increased 24.2 times and 2.5 times from England in that period. A survey conducted in 1923 by the United States Tariff Commission revealed that print rollers produced in foreign countries were entering this country at a declared value of $9.68 per roller while the over-all cost of the same American-made unit was $34.73; as a result, employment in the industry suffered seriously and finally reached a point where skilled workmen—who had spent 3 to 5 years learning their trade—were forced to try to earn a living by making rollers in their homes because the United States mills were forced to close because they could not compete with the imported product.

Thus it is apparent, Mr. Chairman, that this reciprocal trade program is one that is today threatening the standard of living of the American workers. It is time that we take protective action to make sure that American workers and their families are protected against unemployment and that the investments made by American business people are not undermined and destroyed by unfair competition from abroad as now exists under the Democratic reciprocal trade program.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, in reaching a decision on the question of extending the authority to enter into reciprocal-trade treaties with foreign countries, the House today is faced with a decision on a more fundamental problem of the kind which has troubled legislators from time immemorial. The basic question is whether we as legislators should support a bill the letter, purpose, and spirit of which are entirely proper and purposeful, knowing, at the same time, that the administration of that act will be faulty and irresponsible. Such is the predicament in which I find myself in reaching a decision on this question, which is of such vital importance to American industry and the American workingmen.

It must be remembered that this is not the first occasion when an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Treaty authority has been sought and granted by the Congress. The original authority to make these trade treaties was enacted by the Congress some 16 years ago for 3 years' time. At the termination of that period the Congress has granted additional extensions for periods of varying lengths of time. The proposal before us today is to extend the authority for another 3 years. Therefore, we have had the law in operation for approximately 15 years, and something of the nature of its administration is known to us.

The principle of trade reciprocity is thoroughly sound. It was first put into operation by the Republicans over 50 years ago. The trouble with trade reciprocity as it has been experienced under the Democratic administration is that these agreements have not been truly reciprocal. They have been of greater benefit to the foreign countries than they have to the United States. To express it differently, they have been more harmful to the United States and many of its specialized industries and workers than they have been helpful to the country generally. To be truly reciprocal, these agreements must be mutually advantageous, mutually helpful to each of the parties to the agreement. Trade reciprocity is a two-way street, advantages flowing out to a foreign country and into this country. The trouble has been that in administering these agreements in the past they have not been reciprocal; they have not been mutually helpful to this country as well as foreign countries.

I have come to the conclusion that I shall support the proposal to extend the Reciprocal Trade Authority for another 3 years, in spite of the fact that experience has shown to us a lack of proper administration of the law, for the reason that I am hopeful that through some change in personnel in the State Department, and of individuals who have the responsibility of carrying out the purposes of this law, or that there will be a change in heart and attitude of those people. In other words, I have concluded it is better to have a good law, even though poorly administered, than to have no law at all. If we have no law, the best of available competent administrators would be helpless in the absence of statutory authority; with a good law on the statute books, even though temporarily administered by incompetent or irresponsible people, there is always the hope and the opportunity and the outside chance that a change in the personnel will occur and an improvement made in the individuals who are to administer the law.

I realize that in the administration of this act substantial harm has been done to some of the industries in my own congressional district, notably the glass and salt industries. These instances represent some of the evils in the administration of the law to which I made reference a moment ago. Undoubtedly there have been some advantages gained to American industry and workingmen through the administration of these treaties; it is not all bad.

I have reached this conclusion with no great amount of enthusiasm. It has been with reluctance that I have come to this decision. However, I do feel that in the national interest in the long run it is the proper course for us to take. In making this decision. I have elected to take the lesser of two evils.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the Trade Agreements Act of 1934, as amended, authorizes the President to enter into trade agreements with foreign governments whenever he finds the fact that existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or of any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and to make such changes in duty rates and other import restrictions contained in the general tariff laws as are required to carry out such agreements.

The Trade Agreements Act of 1934 was originally made effective for a period of 3 years but has been extended by the Congress in 1937, 1940, 1943, 1945, by the Republican Eightieth Congress in 1948, and in 1949.

The Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948 extended the program until June 30, 1949, and instituted the following procedural changes:

(a) The President was required to submit the list of articles to be negotiated to the Tariff Commission.

(b) The Tariff Commission was directed to make the so-called peril-point report within 120 days to the President. This report was supposed to contain the findings of the Commission as to the limit the President might lower or raise duties without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or similar articles.

(c) The Tariff Commission was to continue to furnish factual information to the negotiating committees, but members of the Tariff Commission could not sit as members of the CRI—Committee for Reciprocity Information—or the Trade Agreements Committee.

(d) If the President exceeded the factual findings of the Commission contained in the peril-point report, he had to advise the Congress within 30 days after any trade agreement had been entered into and had to identify the article to which the limits or minimum requirements had not been complied with, stating his reasons for the action taken with respect to such items.

(e) The Tariff Commission was directed to furnish the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee of the Senate with a copy of its peril-point report to the President if the President exceeded the peril points.

The Eighty-first Congress repealed the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948 and extended for 3 years from June 12, 1948 the period during which the President was authorized to enter into new foreign-trade agreements. The net effect, therefore, of the enactment of the extension made by the Eighty-first Congress was to extend the original Trade Agreements Act of 1934, as amended, until June 12, 1951, in the form in which it was effective immediately prior to the Republican Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948.

The only limitation under the President's authority is that he may not increase or decrease by more than 50 percent any rate of duty existing on January 1, 1945, and he may not transfer articles between the free list and the dutiable list. When the President changes the duty rates for particular articles under the trade agreements program, the new rates become applicable to such articles imported from any country and regardless of whether such country is a party to the agreement.

In considering whether the Congress should again delegate to the President for another 3-year period the responsibility of making new trade agreements, it should be recognized that this program is now being administered by the State Department and for the State Department. In my opinion, the original intent of the Congress in delegating this authority to the President, has been completely misinterpreted by the State Department, and, pending an opportunity by the Congress to reexamine the entire program, no further extension should be made.

If, on the other hand, this legislation is passed by the House then most certainly Congress should enact certain safeguards for its administration. The testimony before the Ways and Means Committee showed that, unless some safeguards were imposed by the Congress, many more segments of our economy would be seriously injured as the result of improvident tariff cuts and concessions made by the State Department. Undoubtedly, had not the present emergency intervened, the influx of imports resulting from this program would have caused widespread unemployment throughout the country and at the very moment when world conditions become stabilized again we will see a recurrence of the unfortunate effect of the hit-or-miss basis on which the State Department has administered this program.

In general, there are at least two steps which should be taken by the Congress in restricting the unbridled authority of the State Department in cutting tariffs and making other concessions. The first step is the reenactment of the peril-point report. The facts now show that the arguments spread in this connection by the State Department were without any foundation and that the procedural machinery involved in the preparation of the peril-point report worked entirely satisfactorily for the negotiations in Annecy, France, in the summer of 1949. As has been pointed out during the debate on H. R. 1612, the Republican amendment for the reenactment of the peril-point report makes a significant change in the procedure adopted in the Trade Agreement Extension Act of 1948. This change is the elimination of the requirement that the Tariff Commission must furnish its full report to the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee. To accommodate those who objected to this part of the peril-point procedure, we have limited the information to be supplied by the Tariff Commission to the Congress to only that portion of its report which deals with the items on which the President has reduced tariffs and made other concessions below the point which the report indicated would seriously injure domestic producers.

Thus modified, the only basic issue arising from the peril-point procedure is whether the State Department should have the benefit for its guidance of a peril-point report of the bipartisan expert Tariff Commission which we recommend or whether the State Department should conduct this program on only a calculated-risk basis without adequate safeguards.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that Secretary Acheson stated in public hearings that no new trade agreements were contemplated during the next 3-year period, it is manifest that the adoption of the peril-point procedure will not undo the damage already done. In fact, even if the State Department contemplated making new agreements, the peril-point report will not protect the country from rash tariff cuts, because in the final analysis the only penalty imposed by the peril-point report is that the President must notify the Congress of the action he has taken.

It seems to me, therefore, that the most important step to be taken at this time is to improve the escape-clause procedure. The authority of the President to enter trade agreements was delegated to him by the Congress in the 1934 amendment to the Tariff Act of 1930. The 1934 amendment did not, however, itself provide any avenue for escape from serious injury, but almost all trade agreements now contain a so-called escape clause designed to prevent serious injury, or the threat of it, to domestic producers and their workers. The language of the escape clause is as follows:

> If, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of the obligations incurred by a contracting party under this agreement, including tariff concessions, any product is being imported into the territory of that contracting party in such relatively increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry in that territory of like or directly competitive products, the contracting party shall be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to suspend the obligation in whole or in part or to withdraw or modify the concession.

The President has directed that all trade agreements negotiated in the future contain an escape clause, and it will be recalled that, following the Republican recommendation, the State Department finally has undertaken to have the clause inserted in the Swiss agreement.

The great difficulty with the escape clause is that, due to the ambiguity of the language and lack of any standards established by the Congress for the President's guidance in determining when relief should be granted, the escape clause is a wholly inadequate relief provision. This is illustrated by the fact that in all the applications for relief only one has been granted. Moreover, of the 15 cases under the escape clauses which have been disposed of, 13 were dismissed without even a formal investigation or a public hearing. The domestic industries, which believe they had been seriously injured, were given virtually no explanation as to why their applications were dismissed. It is clear, in my opinion, that the Congress should, therefore, do everything in its power to remedy this situation. Good wages and full employment are the foundation of a strong economy, and every producer should have a fair opportunity to show that serious injury is being done as the result of imports from countries where workers are paid much less than our own workers producing comparable goods in this country.

The Republican minority will offer an amendment designed to make the escape clause an effective relief provision where it can be shown that serious injury or the threat of it to a domestic industry has occurred. Rather than attempt to have a new escape clause inserted in the agreements, the Republican amendment will establish a few simple principles or guideposts to assist the President—or the agency to which he delegates the responsibility for administering the escape clause—in interpreting the term "serious injury to a domestic industry." The amendment will also provide a clarification of the terms "domestic industry" and "like or directly competitive"—two ambiguous and troublesome terms.

If the Republican amendment for improving the effectiveness of the escape clause is adopted, I believe that a vast improvement in this whole program will be made. At the first opportunity, however, consideration should be given to the problem of rewriting the escape clause itself and inserting this new escape clause into all agreements.

And finally, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that, in my opinion, the 3-year extension provided for in H. R. 1612, is too long a period before the State Department should be required by the Congress to give an accounting of its stewardship of this program. The effect of this legislation is to delegate to the executive branch of the Government one of the most fundamental responsibilities of the Congress under the Constitution and the Congress should be required to examine the administration of this program at least every 2 years.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska: Page 1, after line 9, insert the following:
> "SEC. 3. The act entitled 'An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930,' approved June 12, 1934, is hereby amended by adding after section 4 the following new subsection:
> "'SEC. 5. (a) If as the result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of any obligation (including any tariff concession) incurred by the United States under a foreign trade agreement entered into under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 any article is imported into the United States in such relatively increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry in the United States of like or directly competitive products, the President shall suspend the obligation in whole or in part or withdraw or modify the concession to the extent and for such time as he deems necessary to prevent or remedy such injury: Provided, That such action shall be taken only with respect to an article or articles provided for in the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade or in any other trade agreement which contains a provision similar to article XIX of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade.
> "'(b) Serious injury to a domestic industry shall be presumed to have been caused or to be threatened as the result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of any obligation (including tariff concessions) incurred under a foreign trade agreement if—
> "'(1) The ratio of imports of the imported article or articles to the production of the like or directly competitive domestic article or articles has increased within a period during the past 12 months over a corresponding period in the preceding 12-month period; and
> "'(2) The President finds that either employment, wages, sales, prices, or profits have declined with respect to an important segment of the domestic industry.
> "'(c) For purposes of this act—
> "'(1) The term "domestic industry" means that the like or directly competitive article or articles constitute the principal product of one or more domestic producers of a relatively important product of two or more domestic producers.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

"'(2) The term "like or directly competitive" means an imported article which is used for substantially the same purpose as the domestic article or tends to displace the domestic article in United States markets.

"'(d) When directed to do so by resolution of either House of Congress or upon application of a party or parties having a substantial interest, the President shall immediately institute an investigation to determine whether action should be taken under subsection (a) of this section. If after such investigation the President determines no action should be taken under subsection (a), he shall, within 90 days from the date the investigation was instituted, issue a report setting forth the reason for such finding.'"

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is what is commonly known as the escape clause and it is not in conflict in any way with the amendment previously adopted known as the peril-point amendment. As the gentleman from Texas so well pointed out, the peril-point amendment involves a procedure to be followed before a trade agreement is entered into. The escape clause amendment is an attempt to bring remedy for injury that might occur after a trade agreement has been entered into.

The trade agreements originally negotiated with foreign countries were binding for 3 years certain and continuing until one nation or the other brought it to an end. Then this problem arose: Suppose after a trade agreement is entered into a situation arises where an industry or a segment of our economy or a group of our workers are injured, what then? The State Department has put into the trade agreements an escape clause. They have opened up some of the early trade agreements and inserted an escape clause in those agreements. The first section of this amendment incorporates the langauge of the escape clause in the existing trade agreements, including the general agreement on tariffs and trade. We were confronted with this further problem, however, of certain definitions and standards in order that that escape clause might have real meaning. It uses the term "serious injury to domestic industry." That creates a possibility for disagreement, so we in this amendment provide that serious injury to a domestic industry shall be presumed to have been caused or threatened as a result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of any obligation incurred under a foreign trade agreement; if the ratio of imports of the imported article or articles to the production of like or directly competitive articles has increased within a period of 12 months, and that the President finds that either employment, wages, sales, prices, or profits have declined with respect to an important segment of our domestic economy. Now, certainly there can be no objection to putting into the act the identical escape clause the State Department has already inserted in all of our major agreements, and certainly this Congress has a right and the duty to define what we mean by "serious injury to domestic industry." We do that here. We also define what we mean by a domestic industry. If one town has one plant that is injured or may be put clear out of business, is that an industry? We provide the answer. The term "domestic industry" means that like or directly competitive article or articles constitute the principal product of one or more producers or a relatively important product of two or more producers. The purpose of this amendment is to vitalize the escape clause that is already in the trade agreements.

Now this escape clause in the trade agreements also uses the term "like or directly competitive." This is subject to various interpretations. So this Congress, the group that is charged with fixing duties and tariffs, lays down a rule as to what we mean by "like or directly competitive." It means an imported article which is used for substantially the same purpose as the domestic article.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. A like or directly competitive article is one that is used for substantially the same purpose as the domestic article or tends to displace the domestic article in the United States markets. Now that makes it clear. It means that if a product does displace an American product, it is directly competitive.

Some 20 or so cases have been heard in reference to granting relief through the escape clause. Relief has been granted in only one case. A number of these cases were presented and argued, and briefs were filed, and then nothing happened; no answer was given. It should not be that way. The people of this country, if they feel that they are injured should have a place where they can present their case and they should get an answer. So the last section of this amendment provides:

When directed to do so by resolution of either House of Congress or upon application of a party or parties having a substantial interest, the President shall immediately institute an investigation to determine whether action should be taken under subsection (a) of this section.

In other words, either House by resolution pertaining, could require the President to investigate an article and see whether or not the concessions made in reference to the article involved should be withdrawn. Keep in mind the foreign country has already agreed that we have the right to withdraw.

This last section further provides that after an investigation is held to determine whether or not there is an injury, the President, if he takes no action, shall within 90 days from the date the investigation was instituted issue a report setting forth the reason for such finding. That is all.

Someone has said, "How can you compel escape?" An interested party cannot. But the fact that the clause is in the agreement means that so far as the foreign nation is concerned we as a Nation have the right to escape from the consequences of a particular concession if we can prove that we are injured. This amendment incorporates that language into the statute. It sets up four definitions, and it provides that the President, when the Congress or an interested party demands it, shall immediately investigate, and that he shall give an answer.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. Does not the gentleman's amendment go beyond his description of it? Is it not a fact that under the gentleman's amendment, whether there is an injury or not, just a mere decline of some sort, a mere increase in imports of some sort, is sufficient to justify the invocation of this escape clause?

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I think not.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman says it is presumed.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. The intention here is that that shall be a presumption of injury. It is not a presumption that cannot be overcome by the evidence. We have this very real problem. The people go before these existing committees and point out that they have been injured, that their production is falling off, their inventories are piling up, that they are hurt, that the market is slipping away. At the present time those who hear them can say, "Yes, that is true. You are injured, but there are a lot of other factors that may be involved here and it may not be the result of the agreement." So they grant no relief.

This amendment says that if the ratio of imports and imported articles to the production of like domestic articles has increased and employment, wages, sales, prices or profits have fallen off, that there is presumption that they have been injured by the trade agreement. It is not a direction that they must give relief, it merely shifts the burden of proof and gives the citizen a fair chance.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a very clear illustration of the very grave danger which is inherent in the adoption of amendments on the floor of the House without due consideration and discussion, and consultation, and without sufficient debate.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this amendment was offered in committee.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I cannot yield to the gentleman. I made the statement on which I stand. I hope the gentleman will permit me to continue. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman if I have the time. I would like to express some of my thoughts before the committee.

The gentleman calls his amendment an extension of the principle of the escape clause. The escape clause is very popular both among the Republicans and among a great proportion of the Democrats. The membership knows that the escape clause has been put in every trade agreement which has been entered into since 1943 and under it we have operated fairly successfully. The gentleman's amendment goes very much further than the present escape clause. It is one of the most restrictive amendments that could possibly be drawn. It is one of those amendments, if you actually study it, you will see is ridiculous and its very absurdity makes it impracticable in application. In fact, if this amendment were enacted into law, I am certain the law would be absolutely nullified. I mean that in all sincerity and ask both sides of the aisle to consider it well. The gentleman's amendment applies to wages; it applies to sales; it applies to prices and to profits; the four basic fundamentals of industry. If any industry suffers a decline in wages or if there has been a small increase, even to the extent of one-fifth of 1 percent in imports, then this amendment is effective and that trade agreement cannot continue in operation. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is not stating the situation correctly.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, the same thing applies to sales. If the sales of any particular major company in the country manufacturing a large proportion of a particular item decrease in any given period of a year, and the proportion of imports is increased, then the trade agreement previously entered into practically becomes null and void. The same thing is true of prices. Suppose for some reason or other, through the adoption of better production methods, the price of a certain item is reduced to some extent. At the same time, by some coincidence, there is a greater import into this country of that particular item. Then the agreement heretofore entered into would be subject to being called null and void.

The same thing applies as to profits. So that I am certain if the members of the committee on the Republican side have an opportunity to study this amendment they would not support it themselves.

Let me give you an instance. Here is a concrete example of what would have happened. In 1946 and 1947 the imports of electric ranges increased from $1,416 in 1946 to $31,098 in 1947. At the same time, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, employment declined by almost 2,700 workers. That brings into effect the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]. However, domestic production increased from $51,000,000 in 1946 to $131,235,000 in 1947. That is an increase of three times the production of electric ranges in this country. Despite that increase, the ratio of imports to production did increase in a greater ratio, and therefore the President would have been required to withdraw the concession. I am sure that the Members on the majority side do not approve of any such provision in this act.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. No. I do not yield at this time.

Here is another example as far as the automobile industry is concerned: The imports of automobiles increased from 1947 to 1948 from 2,000 to 29,000. That seems like a very large percentage of increase. At the same time there was a decline of 40,000 in employment in the automobile industry. This decline was due to a strike at the Chrysler plant. Domestic production increased from 3,500,000 to 3,900,000 automobiles, but because of the formula which the gentleman's amendment sets forth, the President would have been required to withdraw the small tariff concession on automobiles and parts.

Mr. Chairman, I am certain this Committee does not want to adopt any such drastic proposal. If these examples are not sufficiently convincing, I submit we might as well not have any reciprocal trade-agreement program whatsoever. We might as well recommit the bill if this amendment is adopted. It is unworkable. It would apply to any company that manufactures the larger proportion—not a majority proportion—of a particular article. Suppose one company had almost a monopoly, suppose it manufactured 40 percent of a certain item. Suddenly there became a great deal of competition in this country from other domestic companies, and they would be compelled to reduce their prices, and then there would be a slight increase, two-tenths of 1 percent, in imports, the President would be required to abrogate the trade treaties with respect to that particular industry, affecting all competition, affecting agreements in every respect whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment was not really discussed and considered in the committee—I will say that it was not discussed, according to my recollection—I doubt if other members on the committee knew what this amendment provided. I submit if they knew it, they would not have supported it, and I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will see fit to withdraw the amendment. I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to give him an opportunity to withdraw the amendment and study it a little further.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. There is not anything the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said about the amendment that is supported by the facts or the language of the amendment, and I have no intention of withdrawing it. The gentleman knows it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say to the gentleman that my facts and figures were obtained, as I now so state to the committee membership here and to the chairman, from the Tariff Commission. I am willing to submit my contention to the Tariff Commission that under the language as drawn by the amendment submitted by the gentleman the result will be as I have stated.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. Is not the gentleman from Pennsylvania making the point that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska does not do what the gentleman from Nebraska intends it to do, but goes far beyond what he says now he wants to do?

Mr. EBERHARTER. There is no question about that.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this question of an escape clause is vitally important for the protection of American industry. We have an escape clause in the agreements today, but unfortunately the agreement does not provide the escape which industry needs. There have been, I believe, about 20 applications for relief under the escape clause, but of the 20 only 1 has been acted on favorably; 8 or 9 have been summarily dismissed. There was no opportunity whatever for the complainant to appear and register his objection nor was any reason given on the part of the administration as to why the summary dismissal was ordered, yet that is the fact. There are several still under advisement, and we know that something must be done to protect those industries that have been damaged.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] has a most inaccurate understanding of what this amendment does. If an industry makes its showing, it is still entirely discretionary with the President of the United States to do what he pleases.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. If he chooses to act, he does not nullify the entire agreement as alleged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER]; he does not junk the trade agreement; he merely withdraws the concession as to a particular article in question.

There is nothing in this amendment that would force the hand of the President or force the President to nullify any trade agreement; it is still discretionary with the President. The only mandatory thing is that he must hold the investigation, and then we provide that within 90 days he must give us an answer, but it is his answer.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. That is right. He is under no compulsion whatever. He simply listens to the people. He is bound by certain limitations and if he finds that a company makes a proper case then he would give relief which he does not do now.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman from Nebraska mentioned my name. I wish to read this portion of the amendment:

The President shall suspend the application in whole or in part or shall withdraw or shall modify the concession to the extent and for such time as he deems necessary.

The word "shall," I submit, is a requirement, and I object to the word "shall."

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I wish the word "shall" were in the law today; I want it in now.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to these 20 appeals for relief under the escape clause, stating that relief had been granted in only one case. To what agency of Government were those appeals directed?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. They are directed to the Tariff Commission, are they not?

Mr. MILLS. They are directed to the Tariff Commission, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania well knows.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Let me make myself clear on that, they are directed to the Tariff Commission, and the Tariff Commission is represented on the Reciprocal Trade Policy Committee which is completely dominated by the Department of State. There is in my opinion no fair place to where a group of businessmen may go for relief, and that claim has been substantiated repeatedly by the fact that each of these cases is summarily dismissed.

Mr. MILLS. Before whom were these appeals heard? They were heard, were they not by the Tariff Commission, not by the Reciprocal Trade Committee or the Committee on Reciprocity Information and report is made by the Tariff Commission to the President if injury is exposed.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. My point is that no report was ever made. None is required and the industry was never told why the adverse action was taken and it will not be told.

Mr. MILLS. I understand 14 or 15 of them have been disposed of and one has been recommended to the President as being an injury.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. They were disposed of, but the industry was not told why it was not given relief.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Referring to the language that was read a moment ago, that language was read from the first section of my amendment which copies in the language of the escape clause that was put in there by the State Department. It has nothing to do with the procedural part coming thereafter. The President is still the judge, or such agency as he designates is the judge of whether or not there is injury and what, if any, remedy or escape there may be if there is injury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Does the gentleman not think it is revolutionary for us to require the President when he acts on something that is vital to the concern of the Nation to give his reasons for action or an explanation for his actions? Is that not revolutionary?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I think the revolutionary part of this is that the Congress is perhaps going to give some relief to the businessmen.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. May I say that the examples I gave of the automobile industry and the other industries referred specifically to those words "shall suspend."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska: Add a new section to be known as section 3, as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) If in the course of a trade agreement entered into by the United States under the provisions of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and extended, any product on which a concession has been granted is being imported into the territory of one of the contracting parties in such relatively increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers in that territory of like or directly competitive products, the contracting parties shall be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to suspend the concession in whole or in part, to withdraw or modify the concession or to establish import quotas.

"(b) Upon the request of the President, upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party the United States Tariff Commission shall make an investigation to determine whether any article upon which a concession has been granted under a trade agreement to which a clause similar to that provided in subsection (a) of this section is applicable, is being imported under such relatively increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry or a segment of such industry which produces a like or directly competitive article.

"In the course of any such investigation, the Tariff Commission shall hold hearings, giving reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings.

"Should the Tariff Commission find, as the result of its investigation and hearings, that serious injury is being caused or threatened through the importation of the article in question, it shall recommend to the President the withdrawal or modification of the concession, its suspension in whole or in part, or the establishment of import quotas, to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury.

"(c) When in the judgment of the Tariff Commission no sufficient reason exists for such a recommendation to the President it shall, after due investigation and hearings, make a finding in support of its denial of the application, setting forth the facts which have led to such conclusion. This finding shall set forth the level of duty below which, in the Commission's judgment, serious injury would occur or threaten.

"In arriving at a determination in the foregoing procedure the Tariff Commission shall deem a downward trend of production, employment, and wages in the domestic industry concerned, or a decline in sales and a higher or growing inventory attributable in part to import competition, to be evidence of serious injury or a threat thereof."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill before the House, H. R. 1612. The amendment is retroactive in its effect as well as prospective. The bill before the House has to do with an extension of the President's authority to enter into trade agreement negotiations for a period in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BAILEY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have been advised from information developed in the course of the debate here today that a similar amendment to this was discussed in the Committee on Ways and Means. I assume that the outgrowth of that discussion was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. CURTIS, There was no question raised in the Committee on Ways and Means about its not being germane. I can see no reason why the amendment is not germane at this time because it has to do directly with the administration of the reciprocal trade agreements. Let me say to the Chairman that the present so-called escape clause is not a basic part of the reciprocal trade agreements. It was manufactured at the Geneva Conference and is not a part of the law. My amendment would attempt to write it into the basic law, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and not leave it as a plaything for the State Department. I make the point that it is germane; that it is the business of this Congress to set out the procedure, delegating such authority as it desires to the President and to the Tariff Commission, telling the industries of this country what they may do and what methods of relief and what procedures they will have to take to get relief under this clause.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that my substitute, since it deals directly with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, is germane, and we should have a discussion on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Of course, the distinction between the substitute amendment and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska is to section 350 of the Tariff Act. The substitute offered by the gentleman from West Virgina is in effect an amendment to the bill before us now, H. R. 1612. The Chair would like to point out to the gentleman that casual examination of his amendment discloses that the effect is, among other things, retroactive, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Chair bear with me further?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I have here an amendment to amend section 350 of the act. I suspected that the other substitute might be subject to a point of order, but I do not think the point of order will rest against this amendment to the basic Tariff Act.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. BAILEY. I am offering this as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska: Amend section 350 of the Tariff Act, as amended, by adding thereto the following subsections:

"SEC. 5. (a) If in the course of a trade agreement any product on which a concession has been granted is imported into the territory of one of the contracting parties in such increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers in that territory of like or directly competitive products, the contracting parties shall be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to suspend the concession in whole or in part, to withdraw or modify the concession, or to establish import quotas.

"(b) Upon the request of the President, upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party the United States Tariff Commission shall make an investigation to determine whether any article upon which a concession has been granted under a trade agreement to which a clause similar to that provided in subsection (a) of this section is applicable, is being imported under such relatively increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry or a segment of such industry which produces a like or directly competitive article.

"In the course of any such investigation the Tariff Commission shall hold hearings, giving reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parti s interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, this substitute amendment which I propose will attain the objectives of the gentleman from Nebraska fully It will answer the major part of the objections raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who opposed the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment merely sets out a simple procedure whereby harassed industries of this country can get relief directly through the Tariff Commission. I would much prefer that the wording of this procedure be decided here on the floor of the House of Representatives and in the Congress of the United States than be written, as the terms of the present so-called escape clause were written, subsequent to the Geneva agreements.

This simple procedure is provided, that when some domestic industry feels that it is being injured under the reciprocal trade agreements program, all that has to be done is this. The President is first given authority to ask the Tariff Commission for action. The Tariff Commission itself has the right to initiate action. However, in case neither the President nor the Tariff Commission takes that action, then any aggrieved individual may apply to the Tariff Commission for a hearing.

The amendment sets up the procedure by which the Tariff Commission will hold hearings and take testimony and make a decision, and make public their decision. It also provides the procedure that if the Tariff Commission finds that the case presented by this industry is a legitimate one and that the industry is being injured, the Tariff Commission then directs the President to suspend the concession, modify the concession, or set up import quotas to control the amount of foreign goods coming into this country.

If the testimony offered by the complaining industry is not sufficient to convince the Tariff Commission that the industry is being unduly injured, then the Tariff Commission shall make a report and shall make public their findings.

The gentleman from Nebraska proposes to get relief. He proposes to enact into the basic reciprocal trade agreements law the so-called escape clause, that was written, as I said before, subsequent to the Geneva Conference. It is not a part of the basic law.

I think this is the place for this Congress to say to the President, "This is the authority you shall have," to say to the Tariff Commission, "This is the authority you shall have," and to say to the harassed industry of this country, "Here is your avenue of escape. You can come to the Tariff Commission and get relief if you are actually being injured and can prove it."

It is so simple a procedure it will not hurt the basic structure of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act at all.

Why is it necessary that we have some escape clause like this? Because we have already frozen and we will continue to freeze during this war effort hundreds of essential commodities in this country that our domestic manufacturers have to have to produce their products. If we do not have an escape clause like this, what happens? Why, the foreign importer moves in while our American producer cannot get the material to manufacture the product. They move in and take over the American market. We have to have an escape clause like this to assure the domestic producer that when he is handicapped by a freeze order on essential material, there must be something to offset the foreign producer who is not living under a freeze order on essential material. The foreign producer moves in and takes our market. We must have this escape clause so that we can regulate the amount of foreign imports which come in while we have these freeze orders during this emergency. We simply must have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, some partial relief will be achieved, should the peril point proposition be carried through to the complete amendment stage. But it does not offer the type of relief which is needed by so many of our industries which are being handicapped due to our efforts to prepare this country for an adequate defense. Let me say to my friends that the escape clause will settle the proposition raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] with reference to the independent oil situation. That is very serious because indirectly it affects the coal industry of this country. I explained a minute ago in discussing the peril point that the peril point would only restore the original 21-cent import duty imposed by the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930 on a barrel of crude oil. There are over a million barrels of crude oil coming into this country daily. It was testified by both industry and the unions concerned at hearings of both the Senate and House that we could only stand 460,000 barrels of foreign oil daily being imported into this country without injuring domestic oil and the independent oil industry and without harming the coal industry of this country. Here is a method whereby the independent oil people can come in and show that they are being harmed by the excessive imports of cheap oil from Mexico, Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq and Iran.

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield briefly, for a direct question.

Mr. GOLDEN. You are familiar with the obvious effect upon the oil industry and the coal industry resulting from the reciprocal trade agreements as we now have them. Is it not true that your amendment will give relief to both of these basic American industries?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true, I will advise the gentleman. It will offer a method of relief for every other industry in the country. It will take care of the lumber situation and the fishery situation in the Northwest. It will take care of the fruit situation in California. It will take care of the independent oil situation in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Kansas. It will take care of the pottery industry in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, and Ohio. It will take care of the glass industry in West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. It will take care of the fishery industry in New England. It will take care of the hat industry in New England. It will take care of the watch industry in New England. It will take care of the textile industry in Rhode Island, Connecticut, as well as Massachusetts, and in other sections of the country. It will take care of the aluminum situation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COX. May I inquire of the gentleman if there is any substantial difference between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska and the substitute which the gentleman from West Virginia has offered. In other words, as I understand it, the gentleman has the same objective. The only difference between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], and the substitute amendment is one of language; and if the point of order made against the gentleman's substitute is withdrawn and is not to be insisted upon, then I wonder if the author of the regional amendment, in view of the fact that the only difference between the amendment and the gentleman's substitute is one of language, might not accept the substitute amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. That is an end to be desired. I would like to have an expression of the attitude of the gentleman from Nebraska. It accomplishes all that the gentleman hopes to accomplish.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. The objectives are similar. The approaches are different. The amendment I offered is based upon proceeding with the escape clause as already in the agreements.

Mr. BAILEY. That is exactly why I am offering this substitute, because the present so-called escape clause is not workable, and you propose to give it a basis of legality by writing it into this act, and I am opposed to it. We want a sensible escape clause in there.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I did not write the escape clause. I am simply trying to protect the industry.

Mr. BAILEY. Then you should not be protecting the escape clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH], a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Bailey substitute. Since I have been a Member of Congress, I have always supported the reciprocal trade-agreements program and have supported the committee up until this point in all their efforts to put across a satisfactory reciprocal trade program. I am for the bill and intend to support the committee today excepting this substitute amendment. I realize that in times like these it is more important that we have workable reciprocal trade agreements than ever before. From a diplomatic standpoint, it is altogether important that we maintain the good will of all countries who believe in democratic forms of government. We cannot deny the fact that our reciprocal trade program has made a great contribution to our increased standard of living in America, and the renewal of these trade agreements have had the same effect in other countries.

Mr. Chairman, I do believe that certain basic industries have not received the consideration they should have received from the State Department. I come from a coal-producing district. I have some figures here that I would like to give the committee:

During the year 1948 the bituminous-coal industry produced 599,518,229 tons of coal; for the calendar year 1949, 437,868,036 tons—a drop in coal production of approximately 162,000,000 tons in a period of 1 year. During the first half of 1950 the same coal industry produced 232,746,000 tons. After the Korean situation and the demands for some 15,000,000 tons of coking coal in Western Europe came about, besides the increased demands in the United States, we produced approximately 273,000,000 tons.

During the year of 1949 and the first half of 1950, more than one-third of the miners in my district were out of employment and many of the other miners, outside of the captive mines, were working only 1 to 3 days a week. Coal production for the corresponding period in my district was off approximately one-third. During the year 1948 the Big Sandy coal fields produced 15,287,180 tons in comparison with 10,661,740 tons for the year 1949. Coal production in the Hazard coal fields for the year 1948 amounted to 8,971,050 tons as compared to 5,557,700 tons for 1949. Coal production in the Pond Creek section of Pike County, which is a part of the Williamson coal fields, was off approximately one-third. The coal production in the Harlan coal fields in southeastern Kentucky was off approximately one-third during the year of 1949 and the first 6 months of 1950. Many of the mines in eastern Kentucky have been completely closed down and it will take more than a year to open some of those mines back up and get them in suitable condition to produce the amount of coal that this great Nation may need in times of emergency. The importation of residual oil today is almost two and one-half times greater than in 1948. Coal cannot compete with such unfair competition, especially since this imported residual oil costs very little in comparison with production of coal.

I am supporting this Bailey substitute because I firmly believe the State Department has not given appropriate consideration to our coal industry. Imports of residual oil have been permitted by the State Department to come into this country to such an extent that such imports have curtailed the normal functioning of America's great coal industry, and will continue to cripple it in normal times unless something can be done with a few oil concerns who have brought oil into this country and dumped it on the eastern seaboard at the rate of a million barrels per day, and many times, mostly residual. I mean, after these companies had extracted their first profits from gasoline.

I feel confident that no one in times of emergency would want to raise any question about any oil imported into this country, whether it be residual or sweet, because we need crude oil. I do think, however, that a party in interest should have a right to have a hearing before the Tariff Commission in the event this emergency should soon be over and another year similar to 1949 and the first half of 1950 should recur.

The imports of crude petroleum and residual oil into the United States are under the Internal Revenue Act of 1932, and under the trade agreements. Such imports, under the Revenue Act, are subject to an excise tax or a tariff of 21 cents per barrel of 42 gallons. In the trade agreements with Venezuela, which I think were entered into about the year 1939, the United States agreed to admit a certain quantity of crude petroleum at a reduced rate of 10½ cents per barrel. The amount that could be shipped in under the reduced rate was to be equal to 5 percent of the total crude oil processed in the United States refineries during the preceding calendar year. That trade agreement is still in effect.

A desperate effort was made by the coal people and the United Mine Workers, and the independent oil producers, to get some relief from this situation last spring. A subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee conducted hearings and Senator NEELY conducted extensive hearings.

I am sure that no one would object in times like these to our Government importing all residual oil or fuel oil needed for Government use, or for use as ship fuel, or for reexport purposes. Oil of that type comes in free under the Trade Agreements Act today. If, in normal times, these oil concerns, who are altogether operating on a money-making basis, insist in bringing this oil into this country at the rate of a million barrels per day, and I think the record shows that approximately 315,000,000 barrels were shipped in during the calendar year of 1950—but, of course, a lot of that was crude oil—and continue to buy up the residual oil in countries like Venezuela at the rate of a few cents a barrel, and can bring an unlimited amount into this country by paying the regular tariff rate of 21 cents per barrel even though it exceeds the trade-agreements quota, under such circumstances the interested parties should have a right to protect the coal industry.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand the Bailey substitute, it is quite different from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]. The Curtis amendment will not be of any avail to the coal industry and the independent oil producers. On the other hand, the Bailey substitute will permit the party in interest to go before the Tariff Commission, and if he can show that a substantial injury is resulting to a basic industry, the Tariff Commission is required to make a finding of fact and make a recommendation to the President, modifying the agreement in whole or in part, and can recommend the establishing of import quotas.

I am sure many Members of Congress, who have been concerned with the present escape clause brought about by Executive order, feel that the conditions set forth are extremely difficult, if not impossible, to prove. We could not contend that the conditions that have resulted in the coal industry from the importation of residual oil were unforeseen at the time the agreements were entered into.

Besides, the escape clause created by Executive order does not require a finding of fact or a statement of reasons underlying the dismissal of an application by the Tariff Commission. The important question under the Bailey substitute is injury of a domestic industry as a result of imports. The Tariff Commission is required to hold hearings and make findings of fact and give their reasons therefor. No reasons were required under the Executive order escape clause.

Mr. Chairman, I am certain that the membership of this body would not want to see a few oil concerns crucify the important coal industry in this country. There seems to be no program now before the American people that would make our industrial pattern harmonize with our basic resources. But we are, on the other hand, by our own acts, accelerating the drift from abundant coal to scarce oil and gas fuels. The State Department certainly has permitted this unsound trend to be further accelerated by the large-scale importation of residual fuel oil, which tempts still more industries away from coal. While this is basically unsound, it is becoming doubly so in times of an emergency when the burden must again be shifted back to a coal industry that has been injured by this very process.

Mr. Chairman, I am against the Curtis amendment and hope the Bailey substitute will be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. To state that I accept the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. This comes as a surprise to me. Is it not necessary that unanimous consent be obtained before the gentleman can accept the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be put to a vote; the substitute has not been agreed to and it has not been withdrawn.

The parliamentary situation is that the gentleman from New York is recognized under an agreement for 5 minutes.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, we are witnessing another attempt legislatively to do indirectly what the Congress has refused to do for many years. It is suggested that there be written into the basic law under which these agreements are executed the mandatory provision for the insertion of an escape clause. This suggestion follows, I am sure, without a full realization that it has been and is now the policy to obtain the insertion in all these agreements of the so-called escape clause.

In 1942, none of the reciprocal trade agreements had such a clause; in 1947, only 23 of them were without the clause, and, in 1949, only 14 were without the provision. Upon the successful conclusion of the conferences at Torquay there will be only nine such agreements that do not have this provision. I am informed that most of these are agreements with Central and South American republics in which the insertion of the provision now would yield no benefit to the United States.

It is, therefore, the intention of the administration and it has been evidenced, to proceed as rapidly as possible to obtain these provisions in all outstanding agreements. Why then should we do this by law? It violates, in my opinion, a basic tactic of any negotiation; for when we charge our representatives with the duty of obtaining the mandatory provision in any agreement, a provision of any kind but especially this kind, it puts the other parties to the negotiation on notice of the limitations of our representatives' powers.

In many instances where it will avail the United States no direct benefit, the necessity to include this provision in the agreement will result in impediments and will result further in our having to make concessions on the far more important subject of rates in connection with other commodities. A congressional mandate such as this does not belong in basic law when we have the relief provided for in the outstanding agreements, and when we have the bona fide evidence of those charged with the administration of the program that they will continue to negotiate such provisions into the agreement.

Referring now to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia I should like to call your attention to the fact that he makes his provision applicable where conditions cause or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry or a segment of such industry but makes no effort to define what a segment is. A segment of an industry is any part of the industry. You and I well know, much as we perhaps hate to admit it, that in all industries there are managements that are less efficient, there are locations that are less attractive, there is plant equipment that is obsolete, which would cause that segment of the industry to reflect a changed condition. It might very well be charged that this has been caused by the execution of a reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEOGH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know whether I fully understand the substitute for the Curtis amendment but if I do, may I ask a question. If the substitute is adopted, and then the amendment as amended is adopted, will that not seriously affect the reciprocal trade agreements program?

Mr. KEOGH. In my opinion it would.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The other side has won its case if we adopt that substitute for the original amendment.

Mr. KEOGH. It is trying to do indirectly what should not and cannot be done directly.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to incorporate in the RECORD at this point some of the views of our mine workers and our coal operators.

It is my purpose to direct the attention of the Congress to the dangers inherent in the policy of permitting the unrestricted importation of oil from foreign sources. I urge that, first, such legislation include a quota restriction on the importation of residual fuel oil; and, second, such extension of the Trade Agreements Act be limited to a period of 1 year from June 12, 1951.

In this time of grave international crisis one does not lightly question the propriety of unrestricted trade with friendly nations. However, when the policy of unlimited importation threatens to deprive a basic resource industry of its ability to serve the Nation and the Military Establishment in time of emergency, justification exists for an examination of the program as a whole to determine whether some basis for modification exists.

On March 2, 1934, the President of the United States sent a message to the Congress requesting authority to enter into executive commercial agreements with foreign countries for the reciprocal reduction of tariffs and other barriers to the flow of international trade. The President, in asking for the authority, indicated that it was part of an emergency program necessitated by the economic crisis and that the request was an essential step in the program of national economic recovery. In commenting upon the prospective exercise of this authority, the President had this significant statement to make:

> The authority must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed * * * the adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests.

It can be shown beyond question that the coal industry has been injured by the operation of the reciprocal trade policy and that this great industry is entitled to protection. Our great industry—both operators and workers—does not believe that the entire reciprocal trade policy must inferentially be abandoned because of selective modifications in the interests of protecting a basic domestic industry from unfair foreign competition. On the contrary, protective modifications fall within the framework of the administrative policy enunciated by the President. Such action is also implicit in the acceptance of the escape clause principle in reciprocal trade agreements. The escape clause was first included in the agreement between the United States and Mexico—1943—and subsequently appeared in the agreement with Paraguay and in the multilateral general agreements on tariffs and trade—1948. The escape clause provides that under specified conditions either party to the agreement may withdraw or modify any concession made. The Tariff Commission is directed, under Executive Order 10,082, to conduct investigations to determine the facts and to recommend remedial action for the President's consideration in cases where facts justifying invocation of the escape clause are found to exist.

The difficulty here, however, is that the Tariff Commission has not exhibited any inclination to grant requested relief pursuant to the escape clause procedure, but what is more important, even if such relief were accorded the coal industry, no useful purpose would be served since the existing import excise tax on oil is only 21 cents per barrel—an amount wholly inadequate to keep coal competitive with cheap foreign oil.

In 1949 the importation of foreign oil supplanted about 150,000,000 barrels of American petroleum production and resulted in surplus residual oil of 100,000,000 barrels which, in turn, displaced 25,000,000 tons of coal. This meant that 25,000 miners and 25,000 transport workers lost their jobs. The coal industry lost $125,000,000 in gross income; and the railroads, $75,000,000 in freight revenues. The Nation, States, and cities lost tremendous sums in purchasing power and taxes. Resultant unemployment in the coal and railroad industries brought about by foreign oil added materially to heavy relief burdens of States and cities. The report from the National Coal Association indicates that there was a daily average of 836,000 barrels imported during this period and that the totals for the year amounted to 304,882,000 barrels. It is obvious that coal tonnage displacements and the impact upon labor, railroad, and related industries was even more severe in 1950 than was the case in 1949.

In response to the public demand for action, a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare initiated hearings on May 22, 1950, pursuant to Senate Resolution 274 to determine the causes of increasing unemployment in the coal, oil, and railroad industries. The subcommittee was headed by Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY, Democrat, West Virginia.

I had the pleasure of appearing before this able subcommittee of the other body and urging action to remedy the deplorable condition.

On July 14, 1950, the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare issued a unanimous report on the hearings held pursuant to Senate Resolution 274. In appraising the materiality of the report for the purposes of this hearing, it is well to bear in mind that it was issued after the Korean crisis which developed June 25, 1950. Pertinent excerpts are as follows:

Many distinguished witnesses, including United States Senators, governors of States, Members of the House of Representatives, and prominent spokesmen for the coal, oil, and railroad industries testified that if oil imports continue at present levels, these industries will suffer lasting injury.

The indispensability of the coal, oil, and railroad industries to our national economy and security requires that measures be promptly taken to prevent their deterioration.

The committee fully recognizes this Nation's heavy responsibility to expand commerce, to the limit of its capacity, between the United States and friendly foreign countries. But when policies designed to increase trade result in continuing injury to the economic well-being of the American people, it becomes necessary to reexamine those policies and to weigh the evident harm against the assumed benefit.

It is perhaps inevitable and certainly understandable that those preoccupied with urgent problems of global concern should be somewhat insensitive to protests of domestic economic dislocation. Fortunately, such lack of vision is not characteristic of legislative representatives entrusted by the Constitution with responsibility for the welfare of the people of the United States.

Of equal importance, but of special interest to the Members of this House are the hearings which were initiated by a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor on June 1, 1950, pursuant to House Resolution 75. The subcommittee was headed by Hon. TOM STEED, Democrat, of Oklahoma, and other distinguished Members.

Approximately 40 witnesses appeared in these hearings, including responsible representatives from the bituminous coal industry and various affected railroad, labor, small-business, and independent oil groups.

The chairman of this subcommittee made the following statement:

Since the Congress will be called upon this session to consider again the reciprocal trade program, I commend these hearings to the Members who desire more factual information on just what far-reaching authority is granted and how the careless use of this authority can and does frequently undermine whole industries in this country.

These hearings contain considerable information about how we have permitted reciprocal trade agreements to benefit nations behind the iron curtain and to harm American factories and workers. I hope the Congress will provide the safeguards in the new reciprocal trade legislation that we need to avoid these abuses in the future.

In conclusion, I believe that the future national security of our country depends upon the enduring strength and vigor of the coal industry. I have made every effort in this statement to address myself exclusively to the facts. The record will show that the policy of unrestricted importations of foreign oil has resulted in severe damage to our industry, and we are confident that justification exists for seeking remedial legislation. With the stakes to the Nation so high, there is no room for retreat behind the once comfortable words, "trade barriers" and "economic nationalism." It is obvious to an important segment of the American people that there must be congressional action—it is hoped that the Eighty-second Congress will perceive that the time is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 191, noes 89.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 1, after line 9, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 3. Section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) No reduced tariff or other concession resulting from a trade agreement entered into under this section shall apply with respect to any agricultural commodity for which price support is available to producers in the United States unless the sales prices (as determined from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture) for the imported agricultural commodity within the United States after the application of such reduced tariff or other concession exceeds the level of such price support.'"

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that you have just heard read by the Clerk is simple and provides for just one thing, that when we are maintaining price supports for any agricultural products, no foreign country can ship in the same product at the same time for less than the support price.

We have been criticized throughout this Nation because of the potato situation and similar situations. We have a shortage of farm labor, but notwithstanding that, we are producing huge surpluses in this Nation, which are purchased by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Then we pay to have them destroyed. At the same time, because of cheap labor in some of the nations throughout the world, they are shipping in the same produce, and whatever amount they ship in, we are required to buy because it increases the surplus. That just does not make sense to me. I think if you want to have these foreign countries ship this produce in, it is all right. But they should not come in at less than the floor price at which the products are being supported.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. I can well understand the gentleman's interest in the reduction of importations of any product when the Government is supporting the production of that product. Those who have negotiated at the Geneva Conference on tariffs and trade took into consideration this very concern that the gentleman has, and that agreement contains a provision permitting the imposition of quotas at any time. It is not necessary for us to do so in order to protect our control program and support price program. I do not think the gentleman's amendment is necessary as a part of this bill. In addition, we have section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which also applies, as members of the Committee on Agriculture know.

Mr. DEMPSEY. You probably have various provisions, but the fact is that they are not being applied, and you are not doing it. A few minutes ago here on the floor of the House, I heard our very able majority whip give percentages, half of 1 percent or 2 percent. Those seem to be small percentages, but if they are on $800,000,000 or $900,000,000, it is a lot of money to me or to the people I represent.

I have received letters from all over this Nation telling me of the potatoes leaving Canada going to Florida, New Orleans, and various parts of this country. Letters such as this one:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., January 26, 1951.
Representative DEMPSEY,
Democrat, New Mexico, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I was interested in your timely remarks on the potato situation in the United States, in the Florida-Times Union (Jacksonville paper) of January 24.

As a housemother at the Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority at Florida State University, I read market and shipping reports. I serve meals to around 60 people twice a day. It shocks me to read of potato shipments into Jacksonville while the United States Government is foolishly, and I do mean foolishly, destroying potatoes. I am no economist but I know waste when I see it. Once this winter, I was even unable to buy potatoes from the wholesale houses for several days.

I enclose a shipping notice, steamship Adriatica (GK) unloading potatoes at the port of Jacksonville. If you look back through port files, you will also find potatoes from Canada have been unloaded here, too. How many potatoes are shipped in general-cargo listings would be interesting to know.

If a garage man overbuys gasoline, nobody pays him for unsold stock on hand; if farmers overplant potatoes you toss away millions. With hungry spots on the world's surface, and our Army to feed, why doesn't someone do something?

More power to you.

Yours truly,

Mrs. STANLEY WATSON.

P. S.—I realize farmers must live—maybe it is our whole farm program that needs overhauling? "Waste makes want" in any language.

At the same time, it is being publicized in the papers of the United States that we have just destroyed $22,000,000 or $23,000,000 worth of the same commodity we are bringing in from some other nation.

If we are going to create a situation where we subsidize the agriculture of other nations, I think we are putting such a burden on our workers that I do not believe we can carry the load.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. How about the 805,000 pounds of dried eggs that came in from China in October, in 1 month?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The percentage concerning potatoes that the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee said was only 2.4 could mean about 10,000,000 bushels of that commodity. Maybe in dollars it is not so much the way figures are today, but the quicker we stop throwing away that much money and apply it where it should be applied the better off this Nation is going to be. The people are confused about it. I think the time has come when we ought to do something about this situation. I thought the committee would adopt this amendment, because I offered it in a spirit of cooperation.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is actually not a new amendment to this program. As I understand, the amendment has been offered from time to time in the past, at least in another body.

Let us see what the gentleman is proposing to do. He is proposing by his amendment to take care of one industry in the United States by special and unusual treatment which is not accorded to any other industry in the United States under this program.

I have heard members of the leadership of the American Farm Bureau Federation speak on occasion when they have said they did not want, so far as this program is concerned, any treatment different from that extended to any other industry in the United States.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am speaking now of the people that are paying taxes in the United States. They are the ones I am talking about. They resent what we are doing.

Mr. MILLS. I, too, am interested in the people who are paying taxes in the United States, and I will come to that in a minute.

The gentleman from New Mexico, my good friend, does not have a monopoly of interest in the welfare of the American farmer, either, because I do not represent anybody but farmers; I do not have any industry in my district to amount to anything. I am interested in the farmers, too.

Let us see what we have here. We have as a part of our existing trade agreements now in effect this Geneva agreement on tariffs and trade entered into in 1948.

In that agreement we undertook to refrain from doing certain things, such as imposing further restrictions in quotas and so forth, except under certain circumstances. In that agreement we reserved the right, in keeping with the terms of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, to impose quotas on agricultural commodities when the Federal Government was supporting the price of those commodities and acreage or marketing were being controlled, and where the imports of those commodities threatened to jeopardize those particular domestic controls here in the United States. The gentleman's amendment would extend that kind of protection to agricultural commodities whether there is a support-price program, and whether there is a control program or not. It is my humble opinion, and I think I am right, that the imposition of such a provision would absolutely force the Geneva agreements on tariffs and duties to be abandoned by all countries because we would have violated what we have said we would do.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. My amendment states "where price controls prevail."

Mr. MILLS. I understood the gentleman's amendment to provide quotas on agricultural commodities where they are below a certain price, but not if there is price control. Did I misunderstand the reading of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The amendment says price supports.

Mr. MILLS. Price supports? The gentleman understands that not to conflict with what was done at the Geneva conference?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It means if we are supporting the price at $2.50 a bushel, they could not bring it into this country under $2.

Mr. MILLS. Is that an additional restriction, beyond that which we permitted to be placed into effect under the Geneva agreement on tariff and trade?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It does provide that where we have these surpluses and where we have a price support on those surpluses, then they cannot bring those commodities in at a lower price.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman is concerned about Irish potatoes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I love Irish potatoes.

Mr. MILLS. I love Irish potatoes, too. But the gentleman did mention Irish potatoes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This applies to all these agricultural commodities.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman told us that we were bringing in Irish potatoes when we were supporting the price of Irish potatoes. The gentleman knows the program of supporting the price of Irish potatoes terminates with this crop. Some of you members of the Committee on Agriculture who are acquainted with that provision, I think, will back me up when I state that that program for the support of Irish potatoes is about over. We do not want to do something here just to keep a few potatoes from coming into the United States which nullifies and vitiates the agreements already entered into and which is contrary to the pledges we have made in that agreement. Do we want to do that?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Surely the gentleman knows that when the negotiators got together in Geneva they wrote into that general agreement many provisions for which they had no legislative authority. They greatly exceeded their authority.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman may be right, but we gave them authority to reduce the tariffs.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. But not to make agreements tying the hands of Congress on domestic matters.

Mr. MILLS. In addition to doing that, they took into account the provisions of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. They retained the right on the part of the United States to impose quotas at any time quotas are needed to protect the price of agricultural commodities that are being supported, and with respect to which control programs are in effect. I do not think the amendment is necessary. And I think we can do a tremendous amount of harm to our standing with these democracies of Western Europe with which we are allied in the Atlantic Pact.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, I come from a territory that raises potatoes and Republicans, and I am supporting this amendment. It is true that the support goes off of this crop. It is also true that they have in the law a provision which permits this country to prevent importations, as the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] has stated, but the trouble with that is that they do not impose it. We had one in Maine, and they abrogated it. So, under the circumstances, we thought we had been a little bit mistreated. When you consider that 10,000 carloads were imported in 1 year, when we raised 70,000,000 bushels, and they dumped some 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 bushels because they had a surplus, I think perhaps the imposition of a quota would have been a good thing. They abrogated it, for some unknown reason, and we complained very bitterly about it. Ten thousand carloads means 10,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FELLOWS. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. As I now understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], it would not help the potato situation in Maine. That support price is withdrawn with this crop.

Mr. FELLOWS. That is very true, but I am interested in other States of the Union, including Arkansas.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FELLOWS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. It would surely help the egg situation. The gentleman might not be in favor of helping hens, but I am telling you we have to rely on them sometimes.

Mr. FELLOWS. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan is a source of wisdom, and I listen to him occasionally.

I like our Canadian neighbors. They are splendid neighbors, and I believe in the good-neighbor policy to a certain extent, but I do feel that we should protect our own, and I am at a loss to understand, during all this debate, why it is if anybody stands up here and says that we have a country and that it needs our help, somebody gets up to tell us that we should be more interested in Poland or Czechoslovakia, or what not. We celebrate this week the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, who said, "I have not thought much on the subject recently, but my general impression is that the necessity for a protective tariff will ere long force its old opponents to take it up, and then its old friends can join in and establish it on a more firm and durable basis."

This thought has entered my head today: It might be of more profit to us, and it would save us money, if we dug up the Mayflower and refitted it and all went back. We could thus save much transportation expense.

I am going to support this amendment in the interest of Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I am not going to take any more time. I was allowed 3 minutes on the last amendment, and I did not finish.

I was very much interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FELLOWS], as was everybody else. I am glad that we have a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that will print what he said, because he talks the same language as we do in Massachusetts. As a matter of fact, Maine was a part of Massachusetts at one time and we got rid of it.

Somebody here—I do not know who it was—was finding fault with those people who were voting the American way, accusing them of being isolationists. Well, I want the 435 Members here to know, and the country at large to know, that there is another one here that is going to be an isolationist if they do not change their tactics.

What have these internationalists brought us? Two wars and the possibility of a third, and letting France, England, and some other foreign countries who neither talk our language nor understand it tell us what to do.

I was interested to hear about the exports, but what about the flood of imports? When are we going to stop them?

We have got to start right now, I think, to tell the whole world that at least we are going to look out for our own country. The sooner we do it the better off we shall be. If this be isolationism, then I am an isolationist.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 124, noes 110. So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 103, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called Simpson amendment and also on the Curtis amendment as amended by the Bailey amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania: After line 9, insert the following:

"SEC. 3. (a) Before entering into negotiations concerning any proposed foreign-trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the President shall furnish the United States Tariff Commission (hereinafter in this act referred to as the Commission) with a list of all articles imported into the United States to be considered for possible modification of duties and other import restrictions, imposition of additional import restrictions, or continuance of existing customs or excise treatment. Upon receipt of such list the Commission shall make an investigation and report to the President the findings of the Commission with respect to each such article as to (1) the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended in order to carry out the purpose of such section 350 without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles; and (2) if increases in duties or additional import restrictions are required to avoid serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles, the minimum increases in duties or additional import restrictions required. Such report shall be made by the Commission to the President not later than 120 days after the receipt of such list by the Commission. No such foreign-trade agreement shall be entered into until the Commission has made its report to the President or until the expiration of the 120-day period.

"(b) In the course of any investigation pursuant to this section the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings.

"(c) Section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930,' approved June 12, 1934, as amended (U. S. C., sec. 1354), is hereby amended by striking out the matter following the semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and before concluding such agreement, the President shall request the Tariff Commission to make the investigation and report provided for by section 3 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, and shall seek information and advice with respect to such agreement from the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, and Defense, and from such other sources as he may deem appropriate.'

"SEC. 4. The Commission shall furnish facts, statistics, and other information at its command to officers and employees of the United States preparing for or participating in the negotiation of any foreign-trade agreement; but neither the Commission nor any member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall participate in any manner (except to report findings, as provided in section 3 of this act and to furnish facts, statistics, and other information as required by this section) in the making of decisions with respect to the proposed terms of any foreign trade agreement or in the negotiation of any such agreement.

"SEC. 5. (a) Within 30 days after any trade agreement under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, has been entered into which, when effective, will (1) require or make appropriate any modification of duties or other import restrictions, the imposition of additional import restrictions, or the continuance of existing customs or excise treatment, which modification, imposition, or continuance will exceed the limit to which such modification, imposition, or continuance may be extended without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive articles as found and reported by the Tariff Commission under section 3, or (2) fail to require or make appropriate the minimum increase in duty or additional import restrictions required to avoid such injury, the President shall transmit to Congress a copy of such agreement together with a message accurately identifying the article with respect to which such limits or minimum requirements are not complied with, and stating his reasons for the action taken with respect to such article. If either the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, are not in session at the time of such transmission, such agreement and message shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or both, as the case may be.

"(b) Promptly after the President has transmitted such foreign-trade agreement to Congress the Commission shall deposit with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, a copy of the portions of its report to the President dealing with the articles with respect to which such limits or minimum requirements are not complied with."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 225, nays 168, answered "present" 2, not voting 38, as follows:

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. COOPER. I voted "yea." I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present" since he would vote "nay" if he were here.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is requested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska as amended by the amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY: Amend section 350 of the Tariff Act, as amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"SEC. 5. (a) If in the course of a trade agreement any product on which a concession has been granted is being imported into the territory of one of the contracting parties in such increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers in that territory of like or directly competitive products, the contracting parties shall be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to suspend the concession in whole or in part, to withdraw or modify the concession or to establish import quotas.

"(b) Upon the request of the President, upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party the United States Tariff Commission shall make an investigation to determine whether any article upon which a concession has been granted under a trade agreement to which a clause similar to that provided in subsection (a) of this section is applicable, is being imported under such relatively-increased quantities or under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry or a segment of such industry which produces a like or directly competitive article.

"In the course of any such investigation the Tariff Commission shall hold hearings, giving reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. REED of New York. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REED of New York moves to recommit the bill H. R. 1612 to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk of the committee may be permitted to correct section numbers in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT AND THE FLORIDA FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INDUSTRY

Mr. LANTAFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANTAFF. Mr. Speaker, while the fruit and vegetable industry in my district has been adversely affected in some respect by the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, nevertheless, the record of accomplishment under the act, and the best interests of the country as a whole, dictate that I vote for H. R. 1612. Today our greatest concern is the maintenance of our national security in cooperation with other nations.

The fruit and vegetable industry, of which I speak, has suffered because of the large quantities of fruits and vegetables imported from Cuba and Mexico, where labor is cheaper than in south Florida, and to afford that industry an opportunity to be fully heard I have voted for certain amendments.

Originally this industry did not support the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. As the years have passed, they have changed their opinion, however, and now believe that the trade treaty principle is sound, considering the national good, but in the overall application there are inequities which need correcting.

Recently this industry made a study covering nearly 2 years' time, and worked out an economic program adjusted to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, its entire principle and purpose.

This proposal was so sound and fair that the major vegetable association in Nogales, Ariz., which owns or controls 70 percent of the vegetable production in Mexico, endorsed the program submitted by the Florida growers.

At the same time, the producers and exporters of Cuba agreed to the program and endorsed it. Representatives of these foreign and domestic groups made an appearance before the Committee for Reciprocity Information and submitted that agreed-upon program last September.

Nothing, however, has been accomplished to date. These producers are constantly told that certain policies will not permit the Department of State to include their program in the trade treaty now being negotiated with Cuba. They have not been formally turned down, but little, if any, consideration has been given to adoption of this sound program agreed to by both foreign and domestic interests. Such an unreasonable attitude is not in best interests of our citizens, and will eventually harm the whole reciprocal trade program.

BROOKLYN REGIONAL OFFICE OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELLER. Mr. Speaker, in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent the Veterans' Administration now maintains a regional office for the Borough of Brooklyn. There seems to be some talk or report in Washington of this office being taken away from the borough.

To forestall such action, I have this day introduced a bill and I shall urge that favorable action be taken providing that a regional office of the Veterans' Administration be maintained in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more generous, wise, or farseeing than the provisions Congress has made for the protection and assistance of veterans of the Second World War. There has never been anything to equal it in our history or in that of any other country. There is always the danger, however, that the actual beneficent intent of Congress will be nullified to a greater or less degree by the ineptness of those who are called upon to administer the provisions of the law.

An instance of this has come to light in the report that the Veterans' Administration is about to close its regional office in the Borough of Brooklyn. The ground alleged is that the building in which the present regional office is housed must be vacated to make way for a war industry in connection with the present mobilization.

I venture to hope that this report is without solid foundation in fact. If the situation is otherwise, and the Veterans' Administration is really seriously considering the closing down of this office, a great disservice will be done to one of the largest groups of veterans in the whole country. There are some 400,000 veterans served by this office. Every one who has any connection with veterans' affairs knows something about the complexity of the questions that are constantly arising in connection with the many-sided activities carried on. Innumerable questions and uncertainties arise; there are innumerable occasions when nothing will clear up the case except a personal interview between those concerned.

To assign all this work to some center at a distance from the borough where 400,000 of the beneficiaries live will contribute neither to expedition nor to efficiency. There will be unnecessary delays and avoidable misunderstanding, and a considerable degree of inconvenience to 400,000 veterans.

If defense needs really require the evacuation of the present building, there are many other sites which can be found. It is not necessary to give up the regional office altogether, thus adding further confusion to an always confused operation.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from California [Mr. HINSHAW] may have an indefinite leave of absence due to illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TRAIN WRECK AT WOODBRIDGE, N. J.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include two bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have sent to the Secretary of Commerce and the Attorney General a request that they furnish the House of Representatives at the earliest practical date full and complete information with respect to the railroad accident which occurred near Woodbridge, N. J., on February 6, 1951, an accident in which the lives of 81 persons were taken and 500 others injured, specifically advising the House whether the accident was directly or indirecity caused by sabotage.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House realize that we have had far too many railroad accidents in the past months, many of them killing our soldiers going to camp and to the front. This matter should be thoroughly investigated.

I have introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce of the United States is requested to furnish to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date full and complete information with respect to the railroad accident which occurred near Woodbridge, N. J., on February 6, 1951, and took the lives of 81 persons and injured 500 persons, and specifically advising the House whether the accident was directly or indirectly caused by sabotage.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may include as part of my remarks an article by Mr. David Lawrence on Yalta and a resolution adopted by the Polish Peoples University Forum of Chicago; further that my colleagues, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK], the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BOGGS], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RADWAN], be permitted to extend their remarks at the conclusion of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

YALTA HAUNTS U. S. A.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this day marks the sixth anniversary of the Yalta agreement. At Yalta, three men with their advisers met and determined the fate of Europe and Asia—Stalin, Churchill, and Roosevelt. The events that have flowed from that meeting have left the world in utter confusion and on the brink of another global war.

Mr. Speaker, I shall never forget the first day of March 1945 when the then President Roosevelt came into the well of this House and reported to a joint session of the Congress on his trip to Yalta and return. He was a very sick man and it was evident that he had undergone considerable strain notwithstanding his attempt to take matters lightly. I have just read his speech in the RECORD of that day and I now realize that he gave us a detailed report. I was particularly interested in one statement that he made. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 91, part 2, page 1622.

Quite naturally this conference concerned itself only with the European war and with the political problems of Europe—and not with the Pacific war.

As we look back, Mr. Speaker, we realize that certain Asiatic problems were discussed and agreed upon contrary to that statement. Russia was given concessions in Manchuria and certain islands in the Pacific at the expense of China who was not represented at the conference in direct contradiction to the agreement made at Cairo in 1943. This was the occasion when we put the skids under China. The record has been made. It cannot be denied. This deal was engineered by the Democratic administration.

Mr. Speaker, on March 2, the very day after the President had made his report to Congress it was my privilege to have addressed this body on the subject of Yalta and the title of my remarks was: "Yalta—A Moral Retreat—Poland and Small Nations Crucified." On that occasion I stated that the purpose of my remarks would be confined to that phase of the Yalta conference which dealt with the so-called Polish question and specifically the determination by the conferees at Yalta to settle the boundary lines of Poland before that question was even submitted to the free people of Poland. I charged then, Mr. Speaker, that such agreement was a retreat from the high moral ground that we had steadily maintained throughout the war, namely, the right of all people to the principle of self-determination.

I recognized, Mr. Speaker, at that time that I might be charged with fostering disunity among our then allies but, notwithstanding, I considered it my duty to speak out against what I believed was a great injustice to the people of Poland. I said then that a great mistake was made at Yalta and further, and I quote:

It is a mistake, which if not rectified, will lead to world war III.

I did not realize, of course, that these words would in effect be a prophecy but as we view events today we are apprehensive that another war—world war III—is about to begin, largely as a result of the Yalta episode.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the results of Yalta. Violent discussions pro and con still go on. The very prestige of the late President appears to hang on the good or bad that will eventually flow from that meeting. I submit that the results of the conference must be tested by their effect upon the inalienable rights of millions of people in Europe and in Asia who apparently had no spokesman at Yalta.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who have been close to events since 1939 remember the broad and sound principles upon which the Atlantic Charter was expressly written. May I remind you at this time as to just what they were as they are related to the right of self-determination and territorial expansion:

1. No country shall seek aggrandizement, territorial or otherwise.

2. They desire to seek no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned.

3. They shall respect the rights of people to choose the form of government under which they live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them.

Today we know that those principles were completely ignored at Yalta. We all realize that our good friend and ally, China, was sold down the river to communism on this date in 1945. We are paying the penalty for the violation of those principles. In Europe, and especially in Poland, we acquiesced in the demand by Stalin to partition that country and to set up a puppet Polish Government at the expense of the exiled government in London. Here we see the first working of the "principle of coalition government" which Marshall insisted upon in China. Here we see the hand of Alger Hiss, Lattimore, Service, and others. Here it was that we sold the liberty-loving Polish people into slavery—a nation which had been recreated with the help of Woodrow Wilson after World War I. Here it was that the satellite countries—Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia—were made the easy victims of Red infiltration. Mr. Speaker, I read again a portion of my remarks which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 91, part 2, page 1702, and I quote:

Madame Speaker, my plea today is for the recognition of the rights of small nations; we cannot bypass them now by ignoring their rights and expect to have established the privileges of permanent peace. Russia is our friend and we have given unstintingly of our resources to her and surely she is amenable to reason. So with our British friends; we are all in this world situation together. I am satisfied, Madame Speaker, that unless we adopt the policy now of no territorial aggrandizement, we are headed for trouble in the future which can only result in another letting of blood when the next generation has reached military age.

Mr. Speaker, I take no pride in calling attention to the fact that my remarks then seem to be proving true today. At that time I referred to Russia as our friend. Today we know that she is our only enemy, but if she is strong and if she has sufficient strength to oppose us, then we must admit that it is so because of the help we gave her when the Germans were pounding at the gates of Stalingrad and Moscow.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States have watched with admiration the fight being waged by Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia for freedom and independence and for democratic forms of government. That interest will be continued. Our people are opposed to predatory activities no matter whether they are carried on by the use of force or by the threat of force. They are likewise opposed to any interference on the part of one state, however powerful, in the domestic concerns of any other sovereign state, however weak. These principles constitute the very foundation upon which our existing international relationships are formed with other free people. We shall continue to stand by these principles because of the conviction of the American people that unless the doctrine in which these principles is inherent once again governs the relations between nations, the rule of reason, of justice, and of law cannot be preserved. These are the principles of modern civilization as we understand them.

I am firmly convinced, Mr. Speaker, that Poland, Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia will rise and throw off the yoke of the invader and will, in the not too distant future, resume their places in the family of nations as free and independent. God speed that day.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in the RECORD, I want to include an editorial that appeared in the United States News and World Report on March 2, 1945, entitled "The Tragedy of Yalta," by Mr. David Lawrence, that outstanding journalist. He said that the defeat which America suffered at Yalta was more than a surrender to political expediency by the President; it was a defeat for American leadership at home, in Congress, on the radio, and in the press. I include the article in question:

THE TRAGEDY OF YALTA

(By David Lawrence)

NATION HAS RATIONALIZED ITS SURRENDER OF PRINCIPLES BY ATTITUDE TOWARD POLISH BOUNDARY PROBLEM AT YALTA—CHRONOLOGY OF DEVELOPMENTS SHOWS POWER POLITICS IN OPERATION

The defeat which America suffered at Yalta was more than a surrender to expediency by the President.

It was a defeat for American leadership at home, too—in Congress and in the press and on the radio.

Last week Americans were beginning to rationalize the Polish boundary dispute. After all, some writers asked, wasn't this one-third of Poland taken by force originally from Russia many years ago, and wasn't the Curzon line the boundary that some of our own experts worked out more than a quarter of a century ago at the last peace conference, and didn't Russia lose out because she was weak in 1919 and had made a separate peace with Germany?

Also, even if the matter had been left to the decision of a tribunal at the end of this war, wouldn't Russia's claims have been recognized and the result the same?

Let's apply that method of rationalization to a simple proposition of justice as it relates to that occasional outburst of ours called lynching. Have we not heard it argued that the Negro was guilty and that, if he had been tried by a court, he would have been convicted and hanged anyhow? And aren't courts of justice too slow?

We had been told—and the young men who are fighting this war have been told—that this is a war to bring about a new reign of international law, a new order in the world, a system of justice.

But, instead, Poland has been lynched and most of the comments would indicate that American opinion in large part agrees the lynching was all right, and that the affair would have ended the same way anyway if it had been left to the peace conference. And besides, it is remarked with comfortable cynicism, what difference do a few square miles of Polish territory make to us if it makes Stalin happy? Little thought apparently is given to the fact that Poland is supposed to annex some German territory and create a new Alsace-Lorraine for world war III.

It is our first major test. If we continue to appease and appease and play the game of expediency, we will find in the end that the price gets higher all the time. Didn't we rationalize as to Munich in 1938 that after all Hitler should have the Sudeten because there was a big German population in Czechoslovakia?

Let us examine the record before Yalta and see how the game of power politics works. The story goes back to Tehran. Here is the realistic chronology as it can be deduced from the files of the New York Times:

December 1943: Mr. Churchill, at the Tehran Conference of the Big Three, raises the question of the future of Poland. Stalin demands the Curzon Line. Mr. Roosevelt is so informed. The world is told afterward no agreements, secret pledges, or partition of territory were consummated.

October 1944: Churchill and Eden go to Moscow and Stalin demands that the Polish question be settled before the peace conference is held. The American Ambassador is present at nearly all the talks.

December 15, 1944: Churchill tells the House of Commons he has decided to make an exception and not wait till the peace conference to settle the Polish question, and he reveals publicly that he has agreed with Stalin. He warns the Polish Government in exile to accept now or the price will be higher later on. Mr. Stalin must be appeased, he says, in effect, and he betrays irritation that Mr. Roosevelt has not come through with his end of the appeasement.

December 16, 1944: President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, says he hopes America will say "No" to Churchill's plan to redraw Poland.

December 17, 1944: A New York Times dispatch from London says that Churchill made a secret deal at Tehran and Roosevelt was "neutral," and adds:

"It is quite clear now that in Tehran (December 1943) Mr. Churchill and Premier Stalin divided Europe into spheres of British and Russian influence. * * * Stalin would not agree to coordinate the Red Army's operations with those of his western allies until he had definite assurance that Britain would support Russia's claim to Polish territory as far west as the Curzon Line."

December 17, 1944: The Army and Navy Journal in Washington calls for an offensive through Poland by Russia, and Pravda denounces this publication as "a source for pro-Hitlerite propaganda," but many military men in Washington agree that Russia is stalling in order to force the hand of Churchill and Roosevelt.

December 18, 1944: The State Department issues a statement paving the way for the surrender to Stalin at Yalta. The statement says America has felt the Polish boundaries should be left to the peace conference at the end of the war, but that if "a mutual agreement is reached by the United Nations directly concerned this Government would have no objection to such an agreement." This is a tip-off that if Stalin can put across his puppet government through the Lublin committee the United States can be counted on to approve the ultimate recognition of some sort of Lublin government, modified, of course, to make it appear national.

December 19, 1944: The Nazi offensive is costing tens of thousands of American casualties on the western front as Germany, knowing that Stalin has been stalling, takes advantage of the lull on the eastern front.

December 19, 1944: A wave of criticism of Churchill sweeps the United States. The New York Times refers to the Churchill proposal on Poland editorially:

"It must be admitted frankly that this is not the way border problems were to be settled, under the terms of the Atlantic Charter. This is not an idealistic settlement made 'in accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned.' * * * We invite the attention of the Russian Government to the hazards of making decisions in a coalition war on the basis of unilateral action. This is isolationism. It engenders isolationism in others."

The Times says bluntly also that "agreement on the Curzon Line is apparently to be the 'go ahead' signal for a resumption of the battle in the east."

December 19, 1944: Teamwork by President Roosevelt, who backs up Churchill's "lapse of memory" statement. Churchill in his December 15 speech had said that "it must not be forgotten that words are inserted in the Atlantic Charter, 'No changes before the peace table, except changes mutually agreed'." Mr. Churchill next day said he was mistaken and that the words he quoted were somewhere in one of Mr. Hull's speeches. Anyway, Mr. Roosevelt now helps out by saying to a press conference that the Atlantic Charter was just a bunch of scribbled notes anyway and not a formal, signed document.

December 21, 1944: Stalin sees his way out. Dispatches announce from London that Stalin is to install the Lublin committee as the Government of Poland.

January 12, 1945: Stalin apparently decides he is tired of waiting for the concurrence of Mr. Roosevelt and that, since he has Mr. Churchill's backing, the Russians can resume their offensive and take the matter of a provisional government in their own hands.

February 1945: Mr. Roosevelt agrees at Yalta to the dismemberment of the territory of an ally—Poland.

That's the main sketch of the tragedy, but in that December 15, 1944, speech of Mr. Churchill to the House of Commons, he said:

"The President is aware of everything that has passed and of what is in the minds of the Russians and British."

It looks as if Mr. Roosevelt must have known all the time that the Atlantic Charter pledge was being torn to pieces. He was maneuvering for a way out. The Yalta communique, in effect, said that what had been wrong as a unilateral action was now all right. It was a confirmation of lynch law in international affairs. High-sounding phrases about military coordination plus the summoning of the United Nations meeting at San Francisco were all counted as a smokescreen to becloud the fiasco at Yalta.

But some people have asked, "What would you have done about it—gone to war with Russia?" Alas, that's the familiar cry of those who lose courage and falter where principle is at stake.

No, we need not have gone to war with Russia, but sooner or later appeasement must end, and Yalta was the place to end it. Russia would have respected us for it and a mere deferment of the Polish question to the peace conference—or its adjudication even before that time by a special international commission at which all interests, including those of Poland, could be heard, and the United Nations could sit in judgment—would never have caused a break in the present alliance between Russia, Britain, and the United States. If this partnership is founded on any such frail basis, then, indeed, we are in for trouble ahead and we must appease and appease and appease.

After all, America's military might has not been such an insignificant contribution to Russia. Our tanks, our planes, our ammunition, and our resources have been at the disposal of Stalin. He needs them, and he cannot conquer Germany without us.

We simply have been outmaneuvered and outbluffed and we on this side of the Atlantic already have begun to sacrifice our ideals and principles down the long painful road of rationalized surrender.

There's a way to save our souls, and that's at San Francisco, where machinery must be inserted definitely pledging to give American guaranties only if there is review of interim agreements. The people of the United States should be asked to back up only those settlements which are in accord with the principles and the formula set forth by the Atlantic Charter.

Mr. Speaker, I am also submitting at this point in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Polish Peoples University Extension Forum, of Chicago, on Sunday, February 18 and on Sunday, February 25, 1945, apropos the conference at Yalta:

THE YALTA DECISIONS REGARDING POLAND

The Polish Peoples University Extension Forum, of Chicago, an educational and cultural organization, which has functioned for the last 37 years, voted on Sunday, February 18, and on Sunday, February 25, 1945, approved the following resolution regarding the Yalta decisions concerning Poland:

The Yalta decisions regarding Poland constrain us to record not only a keen disappointment in them, but also a serious apprehension as to any hopes of a durable peace. We are unquestionably winning the war, but by all appearances of things we are definitely losing the peace, as we did at the close of the First World War.

The Yalta decisions regarding Poland are, in our judgment, first of all, most unfair and wholly unjust to Poland. Not only do they surrender to Russia more than 40 percent of Polish 1939 territory—a territory to which Russia, strictly speaking, has absolutely no legitimate claim on any grounds whatsoever, either historical or ethnic, and which she does not need for any reasons that she may advance, least of all any security reasons. The territorial compensations proposed north and west are, in a strict sense, no compensations, for historically they, too, constitute Poland's rightful possessions taken away from her by force by the first three partitions. These so-called compensations, then, would, in any event, be only a rectification of the northern and western frontiers drawn by the Paris conference of 1919.

Also, these decisions are a repudiation of the London Polish Government, legitimate and so recognized not only by Great Britain and the United States, but also by Russia until the time when Russia violated her own agreements with Poland, and began to lay claims to Polish territory, to which the London Polish Government naturally could not yield, and an acceptance and recognition of Russia's puppet government set up by her for Poland. If Hitler's puppet governments set up in Norway, Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria, and the Vichy collaborationist government in France were discountenanced by the United Nations, Russia included, why and how can the Russian puppet government set up for Poland be more acceptable to Great Britain and to the United States? And why can it or should it be more acceptable to the Poles, at home or abroad? Can such a government possibly express the will of the Polish nation, and can it really represent and defend Poland's interests?

Moreover, the Yalta decisions practically surrender the whole of Poland under the domination of Russia—much as they may talk of independence, democracy, and free elections. People and nations are known by their deeds. Russia's centuries-old absolutism together with her centuries-old policy of aggressions against the Eastern European nations speak more eloquently and more convincingly than any professions of democracy or promises of freedom, independence, and free elections in any country over which she is allowed to dominate.

In the second place, the Yalta decisions regarding Poland are a clear repudiation of at least some of the provisions of the Atlantic Charter, signed by the President of the United States and the Premier of Great Britain, and accepted by Russia after Hitler's attack upon her and her consequent alliance with us. Points one and two of this charter state clearly and explicitly: "Their countries"—and this includes Russia—"seek no aggrandizement, territorial or other"; and "they desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned."

In the third place, these decisions are a violation of and a departure from the principles, policy, and the traditions of the United States. The United States, the historic symbol of freedom, the exponent of democracy, the champion of justice and fair play, the hope and refuge of the world's enslaved and oppressed, has by the Yalta stand regarding Poland become a partner to Russian aggression, a partner to a fifth partition of Poland, and to her impending enslavement by Russia.

These decisions betray, in the fourth place, clear and distinct appeasement, which is a mark of weakness on the part of the appeaser or appeasers, and which has no end, as experience has already clearly and sufficiently demonstrated. The sacrifice of Manchuria and all our shipments of oil and scrap-iron did not appease Japan; the sacrifice of Ethiopia did not appease Fascist Italy; the sacrifice of Czechoslovakia did not appease Nazi Germany. Will the sacrifice of Poland and Eastern Europe appease the Russian bear. Doubtfully, very doubtfully. Sooner or later he will turn against his appeasers, who by their very appeasements have built up his strength and power, demonstrating at the same time their moral, if not material, weakness.

Consequently, in the fifth place, these Yalta decisions and agreements are, we fear, no foundation on which a durable postwar peace structure can be erected. Rather do they already contain sufficient elements for new postwar tensions, frictions, and a third world war. The only foundation of real peace and of real durable peace, whether in the home, a community, a nation, or among nations in the world, is justice and fair play. The Yalta decisions and agreements, however, are rooted and grounded in injustice, to begin with, and consequently constitute no safe foundation on which any hope of a durable postwar peace may be based.

Because of these considerations and for the reasons here advanced, we, therefore, record our disapproval of the Yalta Agreement. As citizens of the United States we recoil from seeing our country made a partner to any such agreement as the one in question, an agreement so manifestly unfair and unjust, which bows and submits to an unscrupulous aggressor, which threatens the peace we fight and long and hope for, and which, as a matter of fact, is in reality a clear betrayal of a friend and ally; and not only that, but also of ourselves, of the United States of America, the country of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson, of her best and real self, of the very principles and ideals of freedom, of justice, of unselfishness, and fair play for which she has ever stood and which have been both her strength and her glory.

ABROGATE THE YALTA AGREEMENT

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] has just documented for the House the conspiracy between Stalin, Churchill, and Roosevelt that took place at Yalta 6 years ago. At Yalta in February of 1945 capitulations to Russian demands resulted in the betrayal of Poland into Russian hands. It was at Yalta, where an ailing President, surrounded by advisers of the caliber of Alger Hiss and others, whose loyalty to this country has been questioned, allowed Russia to annex our heroic ally, Poland.

After the Yalta agreement, Poland became enslaved. We in the United States will never be able to forget our disgraceful actions, our failure to live up to principle. We today are paying a terrible price for this cynical resort to expediency, for this gross miscalculation as to Soviet intentions.

The Polish people were the first to fight the Nazi tyrants; they were the first to be conquered by the Communist barbarians. By means of the iniquitous Yalta agreement and through bribery, corruption, intimidation, and coercion, they have been deprived of the freedom which they had so richly earned by their persistent and heroic efforts during the years of titanic struggle.

In every war since the eighteenth century, Polish patriots have fought in the cause of freedom. In fact, Poland's record as a fighting nation—as an unswervingly faithful ally, as the only nation which, regardless of Hitler's unprecedented barbarisms, never produced a quisling—stands out unexcelled.

Such a stand of Poles earned them the name of "inspiration of the nations" and "conscience of the world." They fought not only in the defense of their own freedom but also in the defense of the threatened freedom of the whole world. The western democracies assured the Polish Nation repeatedly that its great sacrifices will not be in vain and it will regain independence and freedom. The Polish Nation believed fully in these assurances.

Unfortunately, the victorious end of the war against Germany did not bring the well-deserved and longed-for freedom and independence to the Polish Nation, which suffered under brown tyranny and under the Red tyranny. Surely freedom and independence was earned by the Poles for fulfilling its duty beyond glory.

The western democracies bear the responsibility; we Americans, who have not kept our promises given to Poland, are responsible for it. Our administration is guilty because in Tehran and Yalta it agreed to turn Poland over to the Soviet sphere of interest; turned over to Soviet bondage and completely abandoned by the western democracies after the war.

Poland has suffered not only at the hands of her enemies but also by her association with those who posed as friends.

We must realize that much of the threat to our own American national security and to world peace, for the protection of which we are now engaged in a semiwar action in Korea, comes from that nefarious agreement at Yalta—an agreement which has never been approved by the people of this country officially. The present critical events in the Far East justify the conclusion that the wrong toward Poland at Yalta set the pattern for an attitude which has brought us to the present dangerous foreign entanglements.

The time is long past due when this Nation should recognize as invalid the agreement concluded at Yalta. The Soviets have given ample proof that the pledges made at Yalta were disregarded. The decisions of Yalta no longer bind us. We must, without further delay, repudiate this ill-conceived document that is steering us headlong into another declared world war.

Our stand at this crucial point in our history should be expressed by a firm and convincing action aimed at restoring to Poland and other nations, swallowed up by the Communists, the freedom that has virtually disappeared from their midst.

Since the United States Senate has failed thus far to ratify the Yalta agreement, I once again wish to express my conviction that we should no longer continue to honor this shameful document of appeasement.

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF YALTA CONFERENCE

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, we are now marking the sixth anniversary of the conference of the Big Three at Yalta, where they conferred from February 4 through February 11, 1945.

Neither this anniversary nor any other anniversary of the Yalta Conference is anything which the American people care to celebrate. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the fervent and unfulfillable thought of most Americans at this time is that the world would have been infinitely better off had such a conference never taken place. When the Yalta Conference took place in February 1945 we were on the brink of winning World War II. And it was also at Yalta at the same time that we unnecessarily bartered away the peace.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that since 1945 we have not been nearly so much engaged in the making and maintaining of peace as we have been in trying to undo the secret agreements entered into at that small Crimean seaport. One of the results of the Yalta Conference came very near fulfillment at the end of 1949, with the loss of China to a Communist government.

Another result of the Yalta agreement was the dismemberment of Poland and the subjugation of her freedom-loving people to a foreign totalitarian state. It should be recalled, too, that it was to protect the territorial integrity of this same Poland that Great Britain and France went to war in 1939. Thousands upon thousands of the sons and daughters of Poland fought and died for the principles of freedom and a democratic form of government. Such principles might reasonably have been achieved except for the agreements reached at Yalta.

It is for these and many other reasons that I state today that most Americans, and certainly all of those who are of Polish descent, wish without hope that this conference had never taken place. Consequently, we must continue to strive to overcome and to rectify the grave injustices which resulted from the Yalta Conference and which deprived millions of people of the freedom which they cherished and for which they fought so valiantly.

YALTA CONFERENCE

Mr. RADWAN. Mr. Speaker, today marks the sixth anniversary of one of the most shameless international political transactions that this Nation has ever been party to.

During the last 6 years much has been said and printed of the evil that has stemmed from the Yalta agreement. During all this time we have failed to hear but a whisper, or to see but a line in print to tell us of the resulting good of that expedient but principle sacrificing arrangement, which to this date has never been submitted for ratification to the Senate of the United States. I defy any American to defend the Yalta agreement. I defy, for that matter, any freedom-loving person to justify its very creation and existence. It was ill conceived without justification, no good has come from it and no earthly good can be expected of it.

In spite of the fact that the Yalta agreement was counseled by one since discredited and convicted, it is nevertheless regarded by our State Department as a binding commitment. If at any time, under international law or under moral law, it could be considered legal or binding, certainly now we know that because of its breach it cannot be considered legal and would never be ratified by the upper House of this Congress.

I, therefore, challenge the Department of State to take this infamous document off the list of commitments to which this country intends to adhere, and then, and only then, will the peoples of Europe, whose partnership and cooperation we seek, believe in the sincerity of our intentions.

Prior to June 25, 1950, Yalta was the symbol of slavery for the Polish Nation. It also paved the way for the enslavement of other European nations and it was the vehicle of expansion for the Soviet Empire permitting the Communists to extend its borders to the very heart of Europe. To many Americans from all walks of life and various ethnical groups it was also the symbol of a sell-out of principle, a sell-out of principle which made this country great; all for the sake of political expediency. Since the invasion of South Korea we see further evil results brought closer to home. The stench not only lingers, but grows more foul. To date it has already cost us well over 50,000 casualties in Korea and has forced this Nation to prepare and mobilize for a general war. That is the price we are paying for resorting to political expediency.

With the passing of another year, another black page has been added to the history of the world. Yalta marks the cornerstone for Soviet expansion. It marks the decline of freedom in the world. A return to the adherence of principle will reverse this trend.

I repeat my challenge to the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

VETS BETRAYED BY WASTEFUL ECONOMIES

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, taxes are going up, but the services we promised to the veterans of all wars are being slashed.

New economy is a fine thing when it works.

Penny-pinching savings that cause far more damage than good have a way of being far more expensive in the end. When the hatchet strikes at one essential service of the Government without thought as to the consequences, the inevitable bill for surgical repairs doubles the cost.

Why the Government should pick on the veterans first is beyond understanding or sufferance.

Especially when a two- to three-million-dollar cut in contact office service to the veterans will eliminate local aid to the disabled and throw the burden on the VA staffs in the few and scattered big cities.

One would expect the Government to go after the billion or more in legitimate taxes from the vice lords and others, which these elements are "withholding" from the Treasury, instead of crippling the functions of the VA with small but disastrous economies.

First let us look at the savings themselves on the basis of figures alone.

Percentagewise the reduction for the VA contact offices amounts to about one fourteen-thousandth of the budget for the fiscal year 1951.

Or one one-hundred-and-fortieth of 1 percent. Maybe less.

It would take a microscope to see the tiny gain in this economy "blood count."

On the other side of the ledger there is our solemn promise to help the veterans, their widows and dependents, which can be seen in the laws and can be felt in our conscience.

The credit of the United States Government is not measured simply by the soundness of the dollar, or its record in meeting financial obligations. There is also the yardstick of character—determining its success or failure in living up to the obligations it has undertaken in behalf of its own people.

If we default on the veterans, who have always carried the heaviest burden of citizenship in sacrifices not limited to a budget, then we shall forfeit all claims to respect and trust.

I cannot conceive of a more callous inconsistency than to meat-ax the Veterans' Administration at a time when thousands of veterans are returning, broken in health, from the fighting in Korea. The new casualty list of widows and orphans is increasing daily. And the young of the land are being summoned to military service, some to take the places of the fallen in Korea, others to stand strong for us in strange places and under conditions so difficult that time alone will reveal.

The Veterans' Administration cannot ignore its continuing and increasing responsibilities. True, there is a tapering-off in educational and on-the-job training benefits with consequent savings to the Government for promises fulfilled. But the disabled will be with us for so many years to come that a grateful Nation will insist that all pledges made to them will be adequately and honorably maintained. The VA will do its job well for them, as long as it is not hampered by impulsive and ill-considered economies that cause a breakdown in servicing the needs of our veterans and their dependents.

The contact offices not only give advice and help in filling out forms for benefits due under legislation concerning veterans, but give additional assistance to the disabled, particularly the amputees. These range all the way from securing license, registration, and plates for the automobiles of amputees, to special tax counsel and information on civil-service opportunities for the millions of others who are physically impaired.

I want to quote from the Unit Contact Record for the Year 1950 of the one-man contact office in my home city of Lawrence, Mass., because it is representative of Lynn, Mass., and Chelsea, Mass., and the other 321 such offices that are scheduled to be closed by April 1.

Bear in mind that the contact officers and clerks will be assigned to central offices in the few large cities, cutting off personal calls at the homes of sick veterans, the infirm, and widows tied down by youngsters. Under the proposed consolidation, there will be heartbreaking delays. We cannot expect disabled vets to travel long distances and then wait in long lines for attention to their problems. And we cannot see the value of getting a monthly disability check to a sick veteran months after he has passed away. Overburdened VA staffs in the larger cities will be overwhelmed and unable to keep up with the concentrated workload.

In giving you the figures for Lawrence, as a typical field office, I want to compare the activity for January 1950 with December 1950. The spread will indicate that there has not been a falling-off in work accomplished to justify the elimination of 351 contact offices.

Here is the January–December comparison:

Personal contacts the office, 1,127 as contrasted with 927.

Counter contacts, 201 as against 263.

Telephone contacts, 782 and 628.

Correspondence items prepared, 252, 286.

Forms prepared, 456, 329.

Benefit applications prepared, 378 and 172.

Totals for January of last year 3,196, compared with 2,605 for December.

As the editorial from the Lawrence (Mass.) Tribune of February 5, 1951, states in part, and I quote:

If it is the intention of the Government to serve the interests of economy in the matter, it's our feeling that the interest of economy would be better served by leaving the situation undisturbed. Maintenance of the local VA office certainly involves no such great sum of money that its expenditure reflects painfully upon the tax rate. Nor does it add a fraction of an inch to our mountainous national debt. Zeal for economy is laudable, but it misses the mark when it attacks so basic a function as the Veterans' Administration. Men who have served their country to the best of their ability—and may soon be called upon to do it again—have a right to expect that their country will serve them to the best of its ability.

The Quincy (Mass.) Patriot-Ledger of February 1, comments in part, that—

The Veterans' Administration in Washington has ordered the closing of 317 offices having only 1 contact representative and a clerk.

The reason—lack of funds.

Perhaps nationally, a fairly sizable sum would be saved at the expense of veterans of all ages * * * the younger men of the Korean war and World War II, the middle-aged of World War I, and the elderly of the Spanish-American War.

It would also be at the expense of the widows of heroes of all wars.

* * * If the Federal Government wants to show it intends to keep expenses down, it would be well to look with an economical eye at some other branches of service that are burdening the taxpayers.

It should not cast its economical eye at a service that offers so much to the men who did so much.

The Veterans' Administration itself cannot do anything to reopen the offices ordered closed for lack of funds.

It will be up to the veterans themselves, their families, and their organizations.

Pressure from them in the form of protest letters to their Congressmen might do a lot of good.

We, in Massachusetts, are up in arms over this squeeze play, because we are veteran-minded. There are many hundreds of thousands of veterans in the Commonwealth, and the concentration of schools and colleges and hospitals in this area is a service to veterans from New England and beyond.

We recall, with a mingling of "I told you so" and "It can happen again," the economy wave of 1943–44 that hit the VA and how it backfired.

To cure the resulting paralysis, the employees who were let go had to be called back in a hurry. But this was not enough to untangle the pile-up of claims. More employees had to be hired and trained in VA operations before they could be of help.

We cannot afford to repeat that foolish experience in the name of economy that turns out to be extravagance in disguise.

The veterans of this Nation know what it is to be the target of enemy action, and many of them will endure the painful effects of that experience for life. The least we can do for them now, and for the rest of their days, is to protect them from the snipers who would cut down the benefits and services that we owe to all men and women who have given to their country in a manner that can never be repaid in full.

The VA needs a small deficiency appropriation to head off the proposed curtailment of service not of its own making.

This can be compensated for many times over in other agencies of Government where economy will not directly affect human beings.

April 1 is the dead line.

Before that time, it is necessary for us to authorize an appropriation to maintain contact offices at the local level.

And by so doing to keep faith with all veterans, past and future.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], who is a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and who has been such a dear friend to the veterans of all wars.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman has always done so much for the veterans. I hope that his plea will not fall on deaf ears. I am very glad he is making this fight. I believe he will be successful. Of course, if the men do not have the proper medical care, they will lose their lives and also it would be very expensive if they did not have that medical care furnished to them near their homes, because then they would have to go to Boston for treatment.

Mr. LANE. I thank the gentlewoman for her contribution.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

POLAND AND THE YALTA AGREEMENT

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, today, February 7, marks the sixth anniversary of the so-called Yalta agreement which was brought about through a conference of leaders of allied nations during the dark days of World War II. Unfortunate agreements and concessions made at this conference, as the years unfold, reveal that the Soviet leaders before the Yalta Conference, during the Yalta Conference, and since the Yalta Conference had no respect or sincerity for not only their allies in World War II but for the future freedom and independence of any nation on the globe, large or small, who desires freedom and self-government.

Poland has been the major victim among independent and free nations who has felt the sting of intrigue and the Communist lust for power, control, and domination. After the World War II shooting stopped the Soviet duplicity was revealed and the tyrannical aggressions and infiltrations have continued to spread as the years passed.

When Poland reemerged as a nation after World War I Russia had undergone humiliating defeat at the hands of Germany. Also the powerful Austria-Hungary monarchy had been deposed and banished, as Poland rose once again.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

It was a happy moment when Poland again took up her birthright as a nation and proved to the world that what seemed to have died had only been sleeping. With remarkable energy, under the direction of the brilliant Paderewski and the formidable Pilsudski, she rapidly became a power in the councils of Europe. In this period of her reviving strength, had she so desired, she could have crushed the puny tyranny which had seized the reins of power in Russia. Poland chose to remain at peace with her former enemies when they lay in defeat, anarchy, and chaos.

I need not review the nonaggression pacts which Poland made with its neighbors back in the 1930's. In 1939 Nazi Germany, without a shadow of provocation or a scintilla of justification, violated its solemn treaty obligations and invaded Poland. In a short time, after Poland fought gallantly, brilliantly, and desperately against the Nazi onslaught from the west, the bandit leaders of Soviet Russia struck them from the rear and inflicted a temporary deathblow to the Polish Nation. A peaceful nation and an honorable people had stood up against overwhelming odds and fought the violation of Poland's territory and sovereignty. True to form, thieves and bandits eventually fall out. The Hitler Nazis and the Stalin Communists locked horns and the panzer divisions invaded Russia. Time does not permit the review of the duplicity and maltreatment Poland received at the hands of these two great military powers.

The Red army betrayal, as they allowed the Nazi overlords to slaughter the Polish people, will be recorded as history's most barbarous duplicity and treachery. The desire for liberty, ever emblazoned in the breasts of patriotic Poles, knew that the fight must continue. The defeat against overwhelming odds within the borders of Poland sent thousands upon thousands of Polish warriors to fight beyond its borders. Through a clever underground assistance, many escaped and joined the Allies in France and England. Polish aviators played a stirring part in the air battle over Great Britain and the Continent. Polish soldiers of the Carpathian brigade covered themselves with glory on the battle fronts of Africa. In Italy they did their share at the Battle of Monte Cassino. Future history will record the daring feats of Polish patriots for their allied comrades against Hitler and Stalin tyranny.

The discovery of the graves of over 5,000 Polish officers near Katyn on April 12, 1943, reveals a new low in international banditry, the like of which has never been surpassed in world history.

I am recalling these facts because it is our duty to keep alive in the minds of free nations everywhere the type of criminal intellect which predominates the brain of the present rulers of the communistic Soviet regime. It is evident now that the Democratic and free nations of the world must marshal all their forces to stamp out the spread of dictatorial aggression and not repeat the mistakes that were made after World War I when the isolationists got control of our Government and repudiated Woodrow Wilson's League of Nations. Had America, the greatest nation of the world, accepted its responsibilities 30 years ago, aggression by dictators could have been stopped and World War II would have been avoided. Loyal Americans and friends of Poland must now not be stampeded by politicians to repeat the mistakes of 30 years ago.

We must now rally behind the United Nations, and it is my earnest hope and belief that the steps that we have taken in Korea to stop aggression will be the beginning of the age-old effort to successfully outlaw war. No international organization similar to the strength and power of the United Nations has ever been tried in world history before. Let us hope that we have found a solution.

We must follow through even if the road at present looks rough and rocky. If we do, Stalin will either be crushed from without or overthrown by his own subjects from within. The gallant Polish Nation, which has fought so many defensive wars in times past, will again achieve the independence, the liberty and the peace to which she is entitled. Until Russia proves by her actions that she is willing to cooperate instead of dominate, the United Nations must be ready and on guard for any surprise attack.

Democratic nations in the past have conceded too much for peace and thereby encouraged the dictators to aggress, infiltrate, and conquer. Thank God America and the United Nations have discarded the policy of paying too big a price for peace. This was demonstrated when we turned the tables on tyrannical aggression in Korea.

The time has now come when every nation in the world who intends to survive, must know that it cannot make agreements with other nations and discard them. High on the priority list of wrongs to be undone, is to require that Russia withdraw all her military and civilian forces from Poland and permit that heroic nation to breathe freely again. The same yardstick applies to other nations under the whiplash of tyranny. The democratic nations wanted peace too much when the war was raging with Japan. That was before the atom bomb appeared on the scene. Unfortunate concessions were made to Russia for her help in the Japanese war theater.

The mistakes made at Yalta, 6 years ago today, in yielding to the Russians must be corrected and rectified. At that time our military leaders underestimated our military strength or the atom bomb. We did not know then that the atom bomb was soon to knock Japan into surrender. Yalta and Tehran and the results of the mistakes incident to those conclaves, will be a threat to world peace until the day comes when the Soviet aggressor retreats behind its own border. Russia has broken its promises—agreements made at Yalta and Tehran should be thrown in the wastebasket. Appeasement did not work at Munich, Yalta, or China because Hitler and Stalin are vultures of the same kind, as we learned in 1939 and again since the shooting war terminated in 1945.

Our bipartisan foreign policy must continue as long as the shadow of war hangs over the globe. I do not doubt that ultimately, this shadow will be lifted, the iron curtain dissolved and mankind permitted again to march in peace and security toward a goal now hidden from us. Then there will be justice and freedom for all. Then justice will be done for the benefit of the peoples now shackled under the clouds of tyranny and shut off from the sunlight of liberty.

Poland has shaken off tyranny before and Poland will do it again.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1951

(Legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1951)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O merciful God whose law is truth and whose statutes stand forever, we beseech Thee to grant unto us, who in the morning seek Thy face, the benediction which a sense of Thy presence lends to each new day. Unite our hearts and minds to bear the burdens that are laid upon us. Grant us this day the grace to live on the altitudes of our aspirations. As servants of Thine and of the Nation and of the peoples of this shattered earth, stricken, bleeding, starving, save us from false choices and guide our hands and minds to heal and bind and build and bless. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 5, 1951, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2141. An act to extend for 2 years the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad;

H. R. 2192. An act to amend section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930; and

H. R. 2268. An act to authorize the payment of interest on series E savings bonds retained after maturity, and for other purposes.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE DURING SENATE SESSION

On request of Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service was authorized to meet this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators be permitted to present petitions and memorials, submit reports, introduce bills and joint resolutions, and offer other routine matters for the RECORD, without debate and without speeches.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE NEW JERSEY RAILROAD TRAGEDY

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address myself for 2 minutes to New Jersey's tragedy of Tuesday evening, the railroad wreck in which 83 people gave their lives, and countless others were seriously injured.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, at the outset I desire to express my deepest sympathy to those who have suffered in any manner therefrom, and particularly to those who have lost forever the loved ones whose lives were taken in this needless tragic catastrophe.

I might say, Mr. President, that among those whose lives were snuffed out in this horrible accident was Mr. George McCarter, one of New Jersey's leading lawyers and the son of one of New Jersey's greatest of all time attorneys general.

Throughout the history of mankind, there have been similar tragedies. Some have been the result of unknown causes. I dare say that God in his wisdom has purposely visited some of them upon defiant violators of his laws. But for the most part, I am sure that they have been the result directly or indirectly of the hapless errors of judgment on the part of responsible authorities in every given instance.

That New Jersey's tragedy on Tuesday was one of the worst in railroad history, no one can gainsay or deny.

Mr. President, I shall withhold judgment upon the major factors which contributed to this awful miscarriage of safety principles, those principles to which our Nation has in more recent years dedicated so much of its resources at all levels of government for proper solutions. I am sure that the pending hearings in New York City before the Interstate Commerce Commission will bring to light those errors of human judgment and whatever there may be of mechanical fault involved. I am sure that justice, as we practice it, will properly adjudge any who may be guilty of wanton negligence.

But, sir, there is one factor which the people of America should not overlook or forget in the immediate catastrophe. We know that selfish labor interests are conducting a railroad strike in what has come to be a most crucial period of the Nation's history. We know that precious lives of American mothers' sons are being sacrificed in Korea for our free way of life; we know that the current strike runs directly counter to all of the things in which we believe and for which we happily contribute in these most critical times, and as to the tragic call upon innocent lives in New Jersey's costly disaster, we know that without the strike, the death toll would have been materially reduced. The facts in this connection speak for themselves without regard to the mechanical and human failures involved.

No one can deny that an overcrowded train is a hazard. No one can deny that, but for the strike, there would have been fewer passengers on the fateful train which was to bring so much sorrow to so many.

Mr. President, were I a party to the current strike, I would always wonder to the end of my time whether or not I had contributed to the sorrow and misery which must necessarily follow in the wake of New Jersey's tragedy of Tuesday evening.

Perhaps it takes such things to awaken us to a full consciousness of our responsibilities to each other and to the Nation.

I fervently hope that at least this shocking incident will cause every selfish interest in the country to pause and give thought to the indirect contributions which it is so easily possible for them to make to tragedy when they disregard the Nation's basic needs.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with what my distinguished colleague has said with regard to the tragic disaster in New Jersey. I appreciate what he has said, and I join with him in the sympathy he has expressed and in the tenor of his remarks.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS NEXT WEEK

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to make an announcement. Some of our good friends on the other side of the aisle feel that they need a week to try to convince the people that their party should have a little more consideration than it has had in the past. I agree that it will take that long, and longer, for them to do so. Inasmuch as there is important committee work to be done, which can be done next week, I thought we should accommodate them, and give them that opportunity. I am sorry we cannot give them longer, because I am sure they need longer. However, I wish to announce that there will be no votes on any controversial matters next week. Therefore they can feel free and at ease to go out and do what they can for a lost cause.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to thank the majority leader for his very forthright statement. I appreciate that type of leadership. In the past it has been a leadership of indecision. We never knew whether there would be an important vote or not. I thank the distinguished majority leader and compliment him on his fairness in stating that next week there will be no vote on a controversial matter.

If I may be permitted to say a word further, we did pretty well in 1950, with the time allotted to us. Perhaps in 1952, as a result of the Senator's fairness, the American people will do a wonderful job, and produce the result which we anticipate. So I thank the Senator for the extra days he is giving us during the Lincoln's Birthday season.

Mr. McFARLAND. I may say to the distinguished minority leader that I find that the more time our friends on the other side of the aisle have, the worse they do. That is one reason why I am willing to be liberal. I desire to be fair with the Senator and let him know my reasons.

Mr. WHERRY. We thank the Senator for his kindness. If the best he can do is to give us a week, we appreciate that, and we will let the people decide. They will be the judges of who does well and who does not do well. I am satisfied that we made a great start in 1950, and I think we are going to do a wonderful job in 1952.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was stipulated that there be no debate during the morning hour proceedings.

Mr. McFARLAND. I did wish to state that some bills may be taken up during the latter part of the week, but if there is any controversy over them, and any Senator wishes to have them go over, they will go over.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

REPORT OF AIR COORDINATING COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 55)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 52)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the tenth report of the Economic Cooperation Administration created by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948 (Public Law 472, 80th Cong.), approved April 3, 1948.

The report covers activities under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 (title I of Public Law 472) as amended, as well as the programs of economic aid to China and the general area of China under the China Area Aid Act (title II of Public Law 535, 81st Cong.), and to the Republic of Korea under the provisions of the Foreign Aid Appropriation Act of 1949 (Public Law 793, 80th Cong.) and Public Laws 430, 447, and 535, Eighty-first Congress.

There is included in the appendix a summary of the status of the United States foreign relief program (Public Law 84, 80th Cong.) and the United States foreign-aid program (Public Law 389, 80th Cong.).

This report covers the quarter ended September 30, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Senate Enrolled Joint Resolution 1

"Whereas both Houses of the Eightieth Congress of the United States of America, at the first session of such Congress, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds of each House thereof, made a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States in the following words, to wit:

"'Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President

"'Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"' "ARTICLE —

"' "SECTION 1. No person shall be elected to the Office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the Office of President, or acted as President, for more than 2 years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the Office of the President more than once. But this article shall not apply to any person holding the Office of President when this article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the Office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this article becomes operative from holding the Office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

"' "SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress" '; Therefore be it

"Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana:

"SECTION 1. That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana.

"House Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate concurring, ratifying proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President of the United States

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate concurring therein):

"Whereas by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America the following article was proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"' "ARTICLE —

"' "SECTION 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two (2) years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

"' "SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths (¾) of the several States within seven (7) years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress"; and

"Whereas it is provided by the above articles that it shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislature of three-fourths (¾) of the several States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring therein), That the foregoing proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby ratified by the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana; and be it further

"Senate Memorial 2

"Memorializing the President of the United State to immediately go on record as favoring the establishment of a Veterans' Administration intermediary hospital and rehabilitation center at Truth or Consequences (Hot Springs), N. Mex., with a strong department of physical medicine

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico:

"Whereas the late President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, knowing from his own experience the value of physical medicine and after a survey of the possibilities of Truth or Consequences (Hot Springs), N. Mex., gave his moral support for the establishment of a hospital with a strong department of physical medicine; and

"Whereas Mr. Roosevelt, then President of the United States, when informed that there were a large number of veterans from various sections of the United States here "on their own" to regain their health though there were no Veterans' Administration facilities available, the President of the United States brought the matter to the attention of General Hines and asked him to survey the possibilities at Truth or Consequences (Hot Spring), N. Mex., for a Veterans' Administration hospital, with a strong department of physical medicine; and

"Whereas the Disabled American Veterans, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, each in their respective department and national conventions, endorsed the establishment of a Veterans' Administration Hospital at Truth or Consequences (Hot Springs), N. Mex., for the benefit of their disabled comrades: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the President of the United States be and he is hereby memorialized to take immediate and proper action as has been resolved by the national conventions of the Disabled American Veterans, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars by going on record as favoring the establishment of a Veterans' Administration intermediary hospital and rehabilitation center at Truth or Consequences (Hot Springs), N. The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

RESOLUTION OF MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, a few days ago a group of combat-wounded veterans met in convention at Indianapolis, Ind. The convention was officially for the third zone conference of the Military Order of the Purple Heart. The third zone consists of the States of Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, and Ohio. However, members of the organization from almost every State of the Union were represented.

The convention considered and unanimously adopted a resolution which I consider to be of the utmost importance, especially in view of the fact that it comes from young men who have been tested in battle and not found wanting. While I highly admire a number of other veterans' organizations, this one stands out specially. Each of these young men has been wounded in combat and knows whereof he speaks. I should like to have the resolution appropriately referred and inserted in the body of the RECORD at this point. It deals with the theft of secrets from the Pentagon. It covers the recommendation of these combat-wounded veterans as to what action should be taken by the Justice Department and by the Pentagon, having to do with the theft and publication by an alleged columnist.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Whereas Drew Pearson has lead a smear attack against so many national and international figures who have attempted to fight communism, some of the subjects of his smear attacks being Gen. Douglas MacArthur, James V. Forrestal, Chiang Kai-shek, the various heads of the Un-American Activities Committee, and Senator Joe McCarthy; and

Whereas Pearson has recently been conducting a campaign in his column to discredit the generals in charge of our troops in Korea, as well as the GI's doing the fighting; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Army has stated in a letter that Pearson has been publishing in his column secret military information which indicates that there is a spy in the Pentagon stealing these secrets and passing them to Pearson; and

Whereas it appears that if Pearson has access to the secret information as stated by the Secretary of the Army, he undoubtedly has access to unlimited numbers of like secret documents; and

Whereas this organization feels that this constitutes the gravest threat to our national security and endangers the lives of every member of our Armed Forces, as well as those being drafted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Military Order of the Purple Heart in convention assembled for the third zone conference at Indianapolis, Ind., this 4th day of February 1951, go on record as demanding that every facility of our Intelligence Service be put to work to immediately find the spy who is stealing military secrets and that then criminal prosecution be immediately commenced against him and against everyone else who has violated our espionage laws by working with this spy.

DRAFTING OF FARM LABOR—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received from B. R. Dugdale, secretary of the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association, a resolution adopted by the seventy-ninth convention of that group on an issue affecting every American farmer; namely, selective service. I know that this resolution expresses the views of countless farmers throughout America, as well as their organizations. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Senate Armed Services Committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ON DRAFTING OF FARM LABOR

Agriculture, particularly the production of dairy, livestock, and poultry products is a basic industry essential to national defense and the preservation of the moral and physical strength of America and her free world democratic allies. Consideration must be given to the fact that reserve supplies of dairy and livestock products are diminishing. A decided shift away from milk and dairy production toward grain and other types of mechanized farming that can utilize import labor, is already in evidence.

Dairy, livestock, and poultry operations require workers of special experience, skill, and aptitude. Selective-service boards should recognize these facts and in the interest of national welfare and defense, retain such essential farm workers on the basis of volume of production and giving consideration to each individual case on the basis of history of farm work and critical family situation.

We believe there should be greater uniformity among the various draft boards in considering these principles. We insist that bona fide farmers be included in the membership of selective-service boards.

In view of the importance of the dairy, livestock, and poultry industry and the threat to sustained production, we recommend that selective-service legislation be enacted as soon as possible to remedy the present threat to our Nation's food emergency.

PRIORITY FOR SCHOOL BUILDING MATERIALS — RESOLUTION OF BOARD OF EDUCATION, SHOREWOOD, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the educators of Wisconsin, like those of the other States of the Union, are deeply concerned lest in the situation of tightening supplies of building materials the schools of this Nation be forgotten and not be provided with adequate wherewithal to meet increasing enrollments. I have this morning received from one of the school boards of my State in Shorewood, Wis., a resolution urging that there be allocated sufficiently high priorities so that schools can obtain necessary building materials, equipment, and so forth, to handle their problems. I thoroughly agree with the sentiment expressed in this resolution and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 4, VILLAGE OF SHOREWOOD, MILWAUKEE COUNTY, WIS.

Whereas ODM and NPA are apparently ignoring the schools in planning the Nation's defense; and

Whereas to house schools and keep them running we must have priorities for necessary materials and equipment; and

Whereas schools face greater loads than ever before and are being called upon for use and services in the civil-defense program of the Nation; and

Whereas an educated soldier is vital to national security; and

Whereas an educated and resourceful people are necessary for national survival: Be it

Resolved by this board, That the White House, Congress, and defense officials be advised to place a vigorous emphasis on the importance of a high standard of education for both military achievement and industrial production, and that recognition be given to the basic needs of schools over the Nation in meeting the greater enrollments and demands on school plants and facilities for civil-defense and related mobilization programs, and that competent educational consultants and administrators be used by NPA in planning school priorities, and that speedy implementation of these suggestions be initiated by those entrusted with the grave responsibilities for planning for defense and mobilization; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to (1) the President of the United States; (2) all Members of the Senate and House from Wisconsin; (3) Charles E. Wilson, Director, Office of Defense Mobilization; (4) William Henry Harrison, Administrator, National Production Authority; (5) Earl J. McGrath, United States Commissioner of Education.

Passed and adopted this 26th day of January 1951.

HERMAN W. PFEIL,
District Clerk, Board of Education, Shorewood School District No. 4, Shorewood, Wis.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ELLENDER (for Mr. AIKEN), from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 271. A bill to authorize the transfer to the Vermont Agricultural College of certain lands in Addison County, Vt., for agricultural purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 80).

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

S. Res. 53. Resolution to investigate personnel needs and practices of the various governmental departments and agencies; without amendment (Rept. No. 81), and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

TEMPORARY PERSONNEL FOR COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I report an original resolution (S. Res. 71), and I submit a report (No. 89) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and, under the rule, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The resolution (S. Res. 71) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings and making investigations as authorized by subsection (1) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, or by sections 134 (a) and 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period ending on January 1, 1952, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such professional, administrative, and clerical personnel as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $125,870, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

REPORT ON LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN EAST COAST OIL TANKER INDUSTRY—INDIVIDUAL VIEWS (S. REPT. NO. 82)

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, pursuant to Senate Resolution 140, Eighty-first Congress, I submit a report on labor-management relations in the east coast oil tanker industry, including the individual views of the senior Senator from Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed with the individual views.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and, without objection, printed as requested by the Senator from Montana.

INVESTIGATION OF ORGANIZED CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—APPREHENSION OF CERTAIN PERSONS AS WITNESSES

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, from the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce, I report an original resolution providing for apprehension of certain persons as witnesses, and I submit a report (No. 83) thereon. I ask that the resolution be placed on the calendar for the information of the Senate. I hope that before the resolution is called up that some of the persons named may come out of hiding and make themselves available to the committee. I expect to call the resolution up at an early date. This committee has followed the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary and has asked the Sergeant at Arms to subpena the witnesses in addition to other extensive efforts to subpena them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the resolution will be placed on the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 65) was ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

Whereas the Special Senate Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce has reported to the Senate that subpenas have been issued for Rocco Fischetti, Charles Fischetti, Murray L. Humphreys, Jacob Guzik, William G. O'Brien, John Angersola alias King, Moe Dalitz alias Davis, Samuel T. Haas, Morris Kleinman, Louis Rothkapf alias Rhody, Samuel "Gameboy" Miller, Morris "Mushy" Wexler, Samuel Tucker, George Angersola alias King, John Croft, James Brink, and Louis Levinson, and that these persons are important witnesses, necessary to the successful conclusion of inquiries being conducted by that committee pursuant to Senate Resolution 202, Eighty-first Congress, and that the said persons have not been located for service despite diligent search on the part of persons employed by the committee, and peace officers assisting the committee and that thereafter new subpenas calling for the appearance of these persons were handed to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, pursuant to the policy recommendation of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, with the request that he endeavor to make service of these subpenas through all the facilities at his command, and that the Sergeant at Arms, after using great diligence in endeavoring to locate the said witnesses and to serve them, has reported to the chairman of the committee that he had been unable to effectuate service; and that the committee has reasonable cause to believe and does believe that the named persons will not appear in response to subpenas but are in hiding or have left the United States in order to evade the service of subpenas upon them and will continue to be unavailable for service of subpenas upon them in order to avoid testifying before the committee; and

Whereas the appearance and testimony of the witnesses named before is material and necessary in order that the committee may properly execute the functions assigned to it and may obtain information necessary as a basis for proposed legislation: It is therefore

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue warrants commanding the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, or such persons as may be deputized by him, to take into custody the bodies of Rocco Fischetti; Charles Fischetti; Murray L. Humphreys; Jacob Guzik; William G. O'Brien; John Angersola, alias King; Moe Dalitz, alias Davis; Samuel T. Haas; Morris Kleinman; Louis Rothkapf, alias Rhody; Samuel "Gameboy" Miller; Morris "Mushy" Wexler; Samuel Tucker; George Angersola, alias King; John Croft; James Brink; Louis Levinson; and to bring the said persons before the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce at Washington, D. C., or if the said committee be no longer in existence when the arrest is made, before the bar of the Senate or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, then and there to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry as the said special committee, the Senate itself or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate;

That, for the purpose of executing warrants issued in accordance with this resolution the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate may by all-inclusive order or orders deputize all law-enforcement officers of the Federal Government; and

That the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce, the Senate itself or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, may discharge any of the persons taken into custody under the authorization of this resolution upon proper assurance by recognition, or otherwise, that he will appear to give testimony when required to do so. The committee, the Senate, or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, may require such assurances as it deems necessary, not to exceed $25,000 for any one witness.

For the purpose of discharging any person from custody and ordering assurances, one member of the said committee, or of an appropriately designated standing committee of the Senate, shall be a quorum.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks short statements prepared by the staff of the committee as to the background of the persons involved, and why they have been sought, be printed in the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statements are as follows:

CHARLES AND ROCCO FISCHETTI

Both Charles and Rocco Fischetti have been leading members of the Capone syndicate in Chicago for the better part of 30 years.

Charles Fischetti particularly is today unquestionably one of the most important underworld characters in the Nation. He has been arrested numerous times. In 1933 he and Murray Humphreys were taken into custody and questioned with reference to the murder of the secretary of the Hoisting and Portable Engineers' Union, Local 569. He has maintained close contact with such syndicate members in Chicago as Jacob Guzik, Rocco de Stefano, Paul Ricca, and Tony Accardo. He and Tony Accardo joined together in their flight to Mexico to avoid the committee's subpenas.

Charles Fischetti has also been associated with John and Fred Angersola, of Cleveland. He was active in the gambling games conducted in the Wofford Hotel in Miami, Fla., along with Joe DiCarle of the Cleveland syndicate, Joe Massei of Detroit, and Joe Adonis. Charles Fischetti has also been associated with Jack Dragna, prominent west-coast hoodlum. He was picked up in a car with Dragna upon returning from a gambling ship off the coast of California.

There was strong indication that he and his brother, Rocco, loaned $300,000 to the Flamingo Hotel venture in Nevada. They are linked to the venture by Barney Ruditsky, who handled bad checks for the Flamingo during "Bugsy" Siegel's regime. Ruditsky claimed that the Fischettis, "Longy" Zwillman of the New York-New Jersey gang, "Nig" Rosen of Philadelphia, and Louis Shomberg have money in this hotel. Charles Fischetti was also reported to have been associated with Virginia Hill, "Bugsy" Siegel's ex-girl friend.

It is alleged that Charles and Rocco Fischetti were involved in two notorious gambling spots near Chicago—the Vernon Country Club and Ralph's Place. Charles Fischetti also has an interest in the 229 Club and the Black Hawk Club in Chicago. The committee has been unable to find out the nature of these clubs because of Fischetti's flight from the committee's subpena.

Rocco Fischetti is closely identified with the activities of his brother, Charles, in gambling ventures in Cook and Lake Counties in Illinois. He was once the bodyguard of John Capone.

MURRAY (THE CAMEL) HUMPHREYS

Humphreys has been a long-time leading member of the Capone syndicate. He was considered the strong-armed man of Al Capone. He was arrested on numerous occasions in connection with labor racketeering, gambling, and vice activities.

He was named in an injunction with other syndicate members as having attempted to take over the Bartenders and Beverage Dispensers Union, Local 278, in Chicago; he was questioned along with Charles Fischetti regarding the murder of the secretary of the Hoisting and Portable Engineers' Union, Local 569; he was described in 1933 by the chief investigator for the State's attorney's office as public enemy No. 1 and the czar of business rackets in Chicago. He was indicted by a Federal grand jury in July 1933, along with Al Capone and 22 others on charges of conspiracy to dominate the cleaning and dyeing industry and carbonated beverages and linen-supply industries through kidnaping, strikes, bombings, and acids; he was sentenced to 18 months in the penitentiary and fined $5,000 for tax evasion. He has a close association with top Capone syndicate members, Paul Ricca, Louis Campagna, the Fischettis, and Jacob Guzik. He and Guzik were reported to be the brains behind the wire-service deal, which sought to push Continental Press out of business.

His name (or rather one of his aliases—J. Harris) was found in "Mo Mo" Adomo's confidential address book, which was seized by Los Angeles police, and which contained the names of leading hoodlums throughout the country. Adomo is Dragna's first lieutenant on the west coast. In 1947 Humphreys was reported to have been in Los Angeles, along with Jacob Guzik, to see Dragna about continuing to take the Capone syndicate wire service—Trans-American.

JACOB GUZIK

Guzik was referred to as the business manager of the Capone syndicate in Capone's heyday. He was accused by James Ragen, Sr., of having tried to muscle into Continental Press, along with other Capone syndicate members—Tony Accardo and Murray Humphreys. Ragen made this statement to the State's attorney's office because he was afraid of his life. Shortly after he made his statement, he was shot and later died. The Capone syndicate then formed its own news service—Trans-American Publishing and News Service, Inc. Guzik was reported to be the brains in back of this deal.

Guzik was sentenced to 5 years in the penitentiary and fined $7,500 for income-tax evasion in 1930. In 1940, he was indicted for violation of the Federal Communications Commission Act with other syndicate members—Frank "Chew Tobacco" Ryan and Hymie "Loud Mouth" Levin.

Guzik and Murray Humphreys were reported to have gone to Los Angeles in 1947 to see Jack Dragna about retaining the Capone syndicate racing news service.

Guzik has been closely affiliated with all the leading members of the Capone syndicate, including John Patton, Frank Nitti (both of whom are now dead), the Fischettis, Paul Ricca, Louis Campagna and, especially Tony Accardo. Guzik today is Accardo's partner in the policy racket in Chicago.

WILLIAM G. (BUTSY) O'BRIEN

Butsy O'Brien (alias William Keough) was formerly the southeastern representative of Moe Annenberg's Nation-wide news service with headquarters in Miami. In 1940, O'Brien was named in a Federal indictment for being involved in schemes to take over this news service, which was abandoned by Moe Annenberg. Named with him in this indictment were such individuals as Arthur V. (Mickey) McBride, Thomas F. Kelly and Mushy Wexler of Cleveland, William Molasky of St. Louis, James Ragen, Sr., of Chicago, and others.

O'Brien is the Florida chief of Continental Press' outlet in Florida—Intrastate News. Through his service, the S. & G. Gambling Syndicate received their racing information. It was this service that was involved in the cut-off in 1949 when the Capone mob muscled into S. & G. It will be recalled that S. & G didn't receive renewed service until after Harry Russell, the Capone mob's representative, was made a partner in the syndicate. O'Brien is the individual who actually ordered the cut-off.

JOHN ANGERSOLA AND GEORGE ANGERSOLA

John Angersola (alias John King) has been closely associated with criminal syndicate members in the Cleveland area and in Florida. More recently he has moved his operations principally to Florida, but before that he and Alfred Polizzi—notorious Cleveland hoodlum—were actively engaged in the slot machine and gambling rackets in Ohio and Kentucky.

Angersola is also closely tied in with Alfred Polizzi in the ownership of valuable real estate in the Miami, Fla., area, and he is intimately connected with prominent hoodlums throughout the country by virtue of his interest in such various hoodlum hotel hangouts as the Wofford, Grand, and Raleigh Hotels in Miami, Fla.

The Wofford Hotel, the well-known meeting place for hoodlums from all over the country, has included among its owners John Angersola, two relatives of his—Otto Lorentzen and John Cardone—Max Marmorstein, a hotel manager and real estate operator from Cleveland, and Frank Erickson and Anthony Carfano, from New York.

Angersola was also associated in gambling games at the Wofford with Little Augie Pisano and Mike Coppola of New York, Joe Massei and Joe Burnstein of Detroit, Charles Fischetti of Chicago, Angelo DiCarlo of New York, and Willie Weisberg of Philadelphia.

John Angersola is one of the creditors in the Grand Hotel in Miami which his brother Fred is connected with and which is another hoodlum haunt, and he also loaned $25,000 to Thomas Cassara toward the building of the Raleigh Hotel in Miami.

George Angersola has been closely tied in with his brother John's gambling activities, both in Cleveland and in Florida. While he is not reflected in the ownership of the Wofford Hotel, he has been one of its frequent patrons along with well-known hoodlums from all over the country.

MOE DALITZ (ALIAS DAVIS)

Dalitz is a leading member of the Cleveland syndicate, although he was one of the few who have managed to avoid a police record. However, his association with syndicate members dates back 20 years or more.

Dalitz, along with another leading syndicate member, Lou Rothkapf, was implicated in the famous murder of a Cleveland City councilman, William Potter, in 1931. It was alleged that Potter was killed because he was about to expose a tie-in between city officials and an advertising company operated by Dalitz.

Dalitz and other syndicate members have been connected with such notorious gambling clubs in Ohio and northern Kentucky as the Mounds Club, the Pettibone Club, the Jungle Inn, the Beverly Hills Club, the Lookout House and the Richmond Country Club, among others.

The syndicate has been able to control the actions of law-enforcement officials to such a degree that their illegal operation is continuing almost unmolested.

Dalitz and his associates also own the fabulous Desert Inn in Las Vegas, Nev. Dalitz is treasurer of the inn. Dalitz has been and still is in a number of legitimate businesses in the Cleveland area.

SAM HAAS

Known as the lawyer for the Cleveland syndicate, Haas has managed to avoid a police record. However, he is closely tied in with the syndicate in its gambling and business ventures.

His name has come up in connection with the Desert Inn, the Cleveland syndicate's famous gambling joint in Nevada, and with certain juke box distribution companies, later found also to be handling slot machines.

Haas also owns valuable property in the Palm Beach, Fla., area—the same area in which Arthur McBride of Cleveland owns a large amount of property. Haas owns the property on which the Palm Beach Ambassador is located. This hotel was built by Burnstein Bros., of Cleveland. One of the officers of Burnstein Bros. is Allard Roen. Roen was the recipient of telephone calls from a west coast gambler, believed to be Mickey Cohen.

MORRIS KLEINMAN

Kleinman, another leading member of the Cleveland gambling syndicate, is an ex-pugilist and ex-bootlegger with a prison record which includes a 3-year stint in jail for income tax evasion.

He has been associated with other syndicate members in all their important gambling operations and in their ties with leading hoodlums throughout the country.

Kleinman is vice president of the Desert Inn in Las Vegas, the inn is controlled by the Cleveland syndicate.

LOUIS ROTHKAPF (ALIAS RHODY)

Rothkapf, an important member of the Cleveland syndicate, has been identified with all the syndicate's principal gambling operations in Ohio and Nevada.

He has been in close touch with Abner Zwillman, big east-coast gambler, and with Mickey Cohen and Jack Dragna on the west coast.

SAMUEL "GAMEBOY" MILLER

Another member of the Cleveland Syndicate, Miller is closely identified with the syndicate in its widespread profitable gambling operations.

He has appeared to be the syndicate's representative in an important Florida gambling operation—the Island Club—which is located at Sunny Islands Casino in Dade County. He is associated in this venture with Samuel P. Cohen, of the S. & G. Syndicate, Herbert Manheim, of the Detroit gambling fraternity, and Jack Friedlander, a New Jersey lieutenant of Longie Zwillman.

MORRIS "MUSHY" WEXLER

Wexler, a friend and long associate of Arthur McBride's, today owns the Empire News Service, Continental Press' outlet in Ohio. The Empire News Service is the lifeblood of the illegal bookmaking business in Ohio. Wexler also owns a racing stable and has a famous restaurant in Cleveland.

Wexler, in 1939, was indicted with McBride, James Ragen, Sr., William Molasky, of St. Louis, and others for conspiracy to carry from one State to another a list of prizes drawn or awarded by a lottery in violation of the criminal code.

SAMUEL TUCKER

Tucker has long been identified with all the principal gambling operations of the Cleveland Syndicate. In 1930, he was indicted along with Dalitz and Kleinman for operating a huge rum running ring. He is a stockholder in the Desert Inn at Las Vegas.

JOHN CROFT, JAMES BRINK, AND LOUIS LEVINSON

These individuals are local northern Kentucky gamblers, who were taken in as minor partners by the Cleveland Syndicate when it moved into the Newport-Covington, Ky., gambling clubs. The fact that the Cleveland syndicate took in these minor gamblers indicates a new trend in the methods used by the large gambling syndicates. In the old days these small-time gamblers would probably have been shot.

CITATION OF JOSEPH AIUPPA, ALIAS ANTON PALUNAS, ALIAS JOEY O'BRIEN, FOR CONTEMPT

Mr. KEFAUVER. ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—CIVILIAN EMPLOYMENT IN EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, I submit an additional report on civilian employment in the executive branch of the Federal Government for the month of December 1950, and in accordance with the practice of several years' standing, I request that it be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks, together with a statement by me.

There being no objection, the statement and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

Civilian employment in the executive branch of the Federal Government increased 21,415 during the month of December, bringing the total to 2,184,693.

The December civilian employment by the Military Establishment totaled 988,441, and in the civilian agencies the total was 1,196,252.

There was a net decrease in the civilian agencies during the month, resulting primarily from a seasonal decrease of 1,535 in the Department of Agriculture.

Civilian employment by the Military Establishment increased by 21,520, including an increase of 880 detailed to the mutual defense assistance program.

Among the new emergency agencies in December the National Production Authority was employing 789; the Defense Transportation Administration was employing 31;

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

the Economic Stabilization Agency was employing 925; the Federal Civilian Defense Administration was employing 99; and the Office of Defense Mobilization was employing 8.

These figures were published today in a compilation of personnel reports submitted by the various agencies of the Government to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. The same reports showed the civilian payroll in the executive branch during November totaled $611,027,000, an increase of $8,000,000 over the payroll costs in October.
